"(Translated from the Spanish text) Tugwell is doing a first-class work. The evidence for this is to be found in the violence of the opposition raised in Puerto Rico where a group of fortunate ones owns all the land and keeps the rest of the people in perpetual slavery. One of the outstanding things Tugwell has done there has been the elimination of monopolies and the offering to the poorer classes of an opportunity to govern. Naturally, the group controlling the island is opposed to that, and that has been the source of all difficulties."

You have sized up the situation. Needless to say all liberals in Puerto Rico have rejoiced over your statement. The immense majority of our people—the hundreds of thousands of the landless and hungry—have placed their faith and confidence in Governor Tugwell.

The Popular Party won the 1940 elections in Puerto Rico on a platform looking toward social reform (long overdue) and the curtailment of economic abuses. Most of the fundamental laws passed by that party since 1940 were signed before Tugwell took possession as Governor. The abuse heaped upon Tugwell is resented by all liberal-minded people in this island. Due to Tugwell's statesmanship our people have at last learned that there is another America besides the America of ruthless commercialism and money changers. And in these times when over 20,000 Puerto Ricans are bearing arms in a common cause for democracy and freedom, Governor Tugwell has inspired our soldiers, mostly sons of the good common people, with the idea that they are not mere sardines fighting for a frying pan but good men fighting for a better world.

As soon as the Popular Party was able to, it passed several laws very similar to the ones unsuccessfully assailed in your own State of North Dakota.

As one liberal and as one Puerto Rican, permit me to thank you for your brave statement.

With assurances of my highest consideration permit me to remain, my dear Senator,

Very sincerely yours,

MIGUEL GUERRA-MONDRAGON,
Ex-Speaker, House of Representatives of Puerto Rico.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

The following reports of a committee were submitted:

By Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

S. 427. A bill to provide additional pay for personnel of the Army of the United States assigned to diving duty; without amendment (Rept. No. 46); and

S. 495. A bill to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States; with an amendment (Rept. No. 45).

REPORTS ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred for examination and recommendation three lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

PROPOSED NATIONAL WAR SERVICE ACT—BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. HILL. I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield for that purpose?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The CHIEF CLERK called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] is detained on official business for the Senate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] are conducting hearings in Puerto Rico on behalf of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. McNARY. The following Senators are necessarily absent:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] are absent on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for appropriate reference, and I ask unanimous consent to make some remarks regarding the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Vermont may proceed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 666) to provide further for the successful prosecution of the war through a system of civilian selective war service with the aid of the Selective Service System was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

DECLARATION OF POLICY AND INTENT OF CONGRESS

SECTION 1 (a) The Congress hereby declares that in view of the critical nature of the present war and in justice to those in the armed forces of the United States, it is necessary to provide further for the comprehensive, orderly, and effective mobilization of the manpower and womanpower of the Nation in support of the war effort.

(b) The Congress further declares as the general principle governing such mobilization that an obligation rests upon every person, subject to necessary and appropriate exceptions as herein defined or authorized, to render such personal service in aid of the war effort as he or she may be deemed best fitted to perform.

(c) The Congress further declares that there is no intention by this act to modify, reaffirm, or otherwise affect existing laws relating to maximum hours, minimum wages, overtime pay, or collective bargaining, or relating to mediation, arbitration, or other procedures for the settlement of any labor controversies or questions, the intention being that if and when any such subjects are dealt with by the Congress this shall be done by other legislation; and that nothing in this act shall be otherwise construed.

(d) The Congress further declares that there is no intention by this act to affect the integrity of the Selective Service System created under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended; and that nothing in this act shall be otherwise construed.

LIABILITY FOR NATIONAL SERVICE

SEC. 2 (a) In order to provide for an adequate supply of workers in war industries and agriculture, and in other occupations, activities, and employments which the President shall from time to time determine to be essential to the effective prosecution of the war, and in order to maintain a proper balance between such workers and persons in the armed forces of the United States and among such workers themselves, each registrant and each person required to be registered under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 as amended and every woman residing in the United States between the ages of 18 and 50 at the time fixed for her registration under the provisions of this act, except as hereinafter provided, shall be liable to contribute by personal service to the war effort in a noncombatant capacity, according to his or her abilities, and as selected in accordance with the terms of this act and regulations prescribed by the President thereunder: Provided, That no service under this act shall be required from any of the following: (1) Persons relieved from liability for training and service under section 5 (a) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended; (2) commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the land and naval forces of the United States (including the Army of the United States); (3) commissioned officers, warrant officers, pay clerks, and enlisted personnel of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, the Army Nurse Corps, the Navy Nurse Corps, the WAVES, the MARINES, and the SPARS; (4) persons serving in the Women's Auxiliary Ferrying Service; (5) persons deferred from training and service under section 5 (c) (1) or exempted from training and service under section 5 (d) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended; (6) any woman who has living with her and under her care either a child or children under 18 years of age, or one or more other persons who, on account of illness or advanced age need her personal care; (7) any woman while she is pregnant, as certified by a duly licensed physician; (8) any person who is an officer or employee of any State or of any political subdivision thereof, or of any corporate instrumentality or agency of any State or political subdivision thereof, unless the Governor of the State in which such person is an officer or employee consents in writing to service under this act on the part or such person; or (9) any officer or employee of a corporate instrumentality or agency of two or more States or political subdivisions thereof, unless the Governors of the States concerned consent in writing to service under this act on the part of such officer or employee.

(b) No exception from registration and no exemption or deferment from service under this act shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist.

(c) For the purposes of this section, the term "between the ages of 18 and 50" shall refer to women who have attained the eighteenth anniversary of the day of their birth and who have not attained the fiftieth anniversary of the day of their birth.

METHOD OF SELECTION OF WORKERS; RESPECTIVE FUNCTIONS OF THE PRESIDENT AND THE SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM

SEC. 3. (a) The Selective Service System, created under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 as amended, shall be utilized as the agency to register and classify those persons who are liable for service under section 2 of this act and who are not already so registered and classified, and to select as hereinafter provided those to be assigned for such service if and to the extent that it becomes necessary to make such selection: Provided, That in order to aid the local boards of the Selective Service System in performing the additional duties required of them under this act, the President may assign to such local boards, in an advisory capacity, representatives of such other agencies of the Government as he may deem advisable.

(b) Whenever the President shall determine that additional workers are needed in any war industry, in agriculture, or in other occupations, activities, or employments essential to the effective prosecution of the war, he shall by proclamation specify the numbers of such workers and the purposes for which they are needed. The President shall thereupon, if he deems it practicable without impairing or delaying the war effort, issue, through the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, a call or calls for volunteers, specifying the number of persons required, their qualifications, and, so far as practicable, the places where their work would be performed, and asking that qualified men and women volunteer their services within a specified time or times; and if and to the extent that the President shall deem it practicable, such calls for volunteers shall be issued before action is taken to obtain workers through the selective service process provided for by this act.

(c) If the President shall not deem it practicable to issue such a call or calls for volunteers, or if, after having issued such a call or calls, the required numbers of qualified persons have not volunteered their services within the time or times specified, the President, either directly, or through the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, shall direct the Selective Service System created under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, to supply the required numbers of persons from those who are liable for service under section 2 of this act. The President shall also specify the quotas to be supplied, the qualifications desired in the persons to be selected, and, so far as practicable, the places to which the persons selected will be assigned. Thereupon the Selective Service System, through the local boards established under that system, shall proceed to select the required workers in the numbers, and, so far as practicable, with the qualifications, specified by the President. Such selection shall be made in a careful and impartial manner, and the decisions of such local boards shall be subject to appeal as in other cases to the appeal boards and agencies of appeal established under section 10 (a) (2) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

REGULATIONS; AUTHORITY OF THE PRESIDENT; ASSIGNMENT OF WORKERS

SEC. 4. The President is authorized, either directly or through the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission—

(a) to prescribe the necessary regulations to carry out in an impartial manner the provisions of this act, such regulations to include appropriate provisions for the registration and adequate occupational classification of all persons who are liable for service under section 2 of this act and who have not been so classified under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, or otherwise;

(b) in accordance with such regulations, to assign volunteers who have responded to a call under this act, and persons selected for service under this act by the local boards pursuant to section 3, to such noncombatant service in aid of the war effort as the President deems necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, including the production of war materials of every sort, transportation and agriculture, and training for the performance of all such work, at such times and in such numbers as the President may determine: Provided, That in making assignments to work under this act, due regard shall be had to assigning men or women to service in or near their home communities: Provided further, That no person shall be assigned to work under the provisions of this act at a location where reasonably suitable housing accommodations for such person and his or her immediate family are not available: Provided further, That whenever necessary, and so far as it is practicable to do so, persons assigned to service under this act (including accepted volunteers) shall, prior to such assignment, be given an opportunity of receiving aptitude tests and intensive training for the purpose of efficiently allocating them in places where they may render the most useful service and of redirecting or stepping up their skills in order that they may be competent for the tasks which they are to perform: Provided further, That every person assigned to service under this act (including every accepted volunteer) shall receive the compensation and work the hours applicable to the kind of work which he or she is required to perform in the place of employment to which he or she is assigned.

(c) in accordance with such regulations, to provide for the deferment from such service of those men and women whose continued service in any office under the United States or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, or whose continued employment in any occupation or activity is found by the selective service local boards, subject to appeal to the appeal boards and agencies of appeal established under section 10 (a) (2) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest: Provided, That the President is authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to provide for the deferment from service under this act of (1) persons found by the selective service local boards, subject to appeal as above provided, to be unfit for such service by reason of physical, mental, or moral deficiencies or defects, and (2) persons with respect to whom such local boards find, subject to appeal as above provided, that such service would result in extreme hardship;

(d) in accordance with such regulations, to provide the necessary traveling expenses and subsistence allowances during travel and until commencement of work of persons (including accepted volunteers) assigned under this act to service or to training in a locality other than that of their residence, and, when necessary, during their return therefrom, and, in accordance with such regulations, to provide transportation for the dependents and household effects of such persons: Provided, That such traveling expenses and allowances shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as those now or hereafter provided by law for members of the armed forces of the United States;

(e) in accordance with such regulations, to provide for the occupational training at Government expense of persons volunteering or selected for service under this act, and to pay reasonable compensation to trainees during the continuance of such training; and

(f) in accordance with such regulations, to provide for the orderly and effective allocation of workers (including those employed or in process of training on the date of enactment of this Act) to the particular occupations deemed by the President to be essential to the war effort, and to the particular industries or areas in which the President finds that there is a shortage or a threatened shortage of manpower or womanpower, in order that such workers will be available where they are most needed and also for the purpose of preventing the "pirating" and the "hoarding" of labor by employers.

REEMPLOYMENT; SENIORITY RIGHTS

SEC. 5. Any person assigned to service under this act (including any accepted volunteer) who relinquishes regular employment to undertake such service, shall upon application to his or her employer within 40 days after the termination of such service, if such service terminates while this act is in effect, or within 40 days after the expiration of this act, if such service terminates after the expiration of this act, be entitled to be restored to his former position, or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay, unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make such restoration impossible or unreasonable: Provided, That if such person was in the employ of any State or political subdivision thereof, it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position, or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 6. The Chairman of the War Manpower Commission shall administer this act and shall have general responsibility, subject to the authority of the President and the provisions of this act, for all aspects of the mobilization of manpower and womanpower for service under this act.

PENALTIES

SEC. 7. Any person who refuses or knowingly fails to comply with any lawful order issued under the provisions of this act, or with any lawful regulation promulgated thereunder, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both.

PROTECTION IN EVENT OF INVALIDITY; PARTIAL INVALIDITY

SEC. 8. (a) The modification, withdrawal, or determination of invalidity of any provision of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall not result in damages or penalties in any Federal, State, or Territorial court on any grounds for or in respect of anything done or omitted to be done in good faith pursuant to such provision, rule, regulation, or order.

(b) If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATION

SEC. 9. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

EFFECTIVE DATE AND TERMINATION OF ACT

SEC. 10. (a) This act shall take effect immediately.

(b) This act shall cease to be in effect on and after May 1, 1945, or such earlier date as may be specified by the Congress in a concurrent resolution.

POPULAR NAME

SEC. 11. This act may be cited as the "National War Service Act of 1943."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the bill I have just introduced is Senate bill 666, and if it should be enacted into law it may be cited as the National War Service Act of 1943. It is the product of several months of study, which was started on six bills introduced respectively in the Seventy-seventh Congress by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and the Senator from Vermont, who is now addressing the Senate. All the testimony taken during the Seventy-seventh Congress is in print. Doubtless all Senators have read it. If not, it is available.

Mr. President, the bill I have introduced has had very careful service by men who have concentrated on the subject for years and years. The American Legion started on this subject immediately after World War No. 1, and have continued the study throughout the period since then, and up to the present time, and have worked diligently on the very text of Senate bill 666.

There has also been engaged in a study of the proposed legislation a Citizens Committee for a National War Service Act, the chairman of which is Douglas Arant, of Birmingham, Ala., formerly president of the Alabama Bar Association, now chairman of the Committee on the Bill of Rights of the American Bar Association. The vice chairman is Henry D. Cabot, of Boston, Mass.; secretary-treasurer, Grenville Clark, of New York City; executive secretary, Ernest L. Bell, Jr., of Keene, N. H., formerly State commander of the American Legion.

The purpose of the bill is to provide further for the successful prosecution of the war through a system of civilian selective war service, with the aid of the selective service system.

The work of the Committee on Military Affairs has continued since the Seventy-seventh Congress almost daily during the Seventy-eighth Congress, and hearings are still in progress. We held a hearing this morning at which Secretary Wickard testified on this subject. I believe that the committee is firmly convinced that legislation is more according to the American way of life than Executive order, and after months of hearings we feel that as a legislature, we should be in the position to say something concrete regarding what is the policy of the people, what kind of law they wish to have, and should be prepared to get it started.

I think it is clear, as well, that, no matter how cautiously this problem was approached in September and October of 1942, events in the world, and in particular reports from our own boys in the southwest Pacific and in north Africa, prove that it is not a matter to be inaugurated at some time in the future, when it will be absolutely necessary to pass such legislation, but that the time has arrived, is here now, and every day that we postpone such legislation we postpone the victory of our men who are in arms.

If we, ourselves, do not know it, we are persuaded by the testimony of observers on the ground that every blow struck at the battle front begins here. It begins in the mines, it begins on the prairies, it begins in the factories; the power and continuity of the blows struck depend on our noncombatant manpower here at home. I am talking about the necessity for such legislation as is proposed.

There is something else of great importance, namely, the feelings of the people. Men and women must have pride in order to continue the effort for an ever and ever higher standard of ideals and of purpose. Go to the farms where the crisis is most imminent; go to a dairy farm, where the mother and father are considering having to sell out the plant, as it were, and what do we find? If a young man on the farm has his choice between staying on the farm and going into the armed forces, he will go into the armed forces every time. Local boards cannot convince him that he should stay on the farm. They can say to him, "This is just as necessary as it is to be at the front with a bayonet, and your staying on the farm will help to win the war," but if he has his choice, he will take fighting and we know why. He has pride in serving his country; he has pride in appearing to serve his country, he has pride in not having the appearance of staying at home in noncombatant service when he is vigorous enough to be fighting at the front. So, if the Congress owes our people anything, it owes them the obligation to declare the policy in such definite terms that the men and women of America need not blush at any time merely because they are not fighting in the trenches but are staying at home fighting in the field or in the mine or in the factory. In other words, when we talk of the necessity of law, we are getting right at the very living soul of America.

We have founded our political life and our social life upon the doctrine of relative equality. Equality before the law is as essential to us as is the breath of heaven. Nothing will raise such anarchy as the existence of discrimination among the people of the United States. Let it exist in fact, and it will raise hell. Let it seem to exist, and there will be confusion, uncertainty, and trouble, and if it involves a great effort such as a total war effort, it causes the program to wobble and to fail. Therefore it is necessary to declare an equal liability of all mobile men within the range of 18 years and 65 years of age, and all mobile women within the ages of 18 and 50.

I use the term "mobile." I mean by that people who can be mobilized for the total war effort, for we cannot afford to break up the family; we cannot afford to destroy the prospects of proper nurture and care which all little children should have. We cannot uproot even the physical life of the family without putting something equally good in its place. Therefore we have to have a law, we have to have legislation, which says to everyone of these people, "You are all equal before the law. If you are able to perform service to back up our boys at the front, then we will take you over as volunteers or we will take you by selection, and we will put you in place at the time and in the manner which will accord with a grand plan which mobilizes this entire resource of the United States in the most effective manner for the prosecution of the war; but in so doing we will see that your family is taken care of."

No mother who has under her care a child less than 18 years of age would be liable under the proposed law. Neither would she be liable if she has a mother dependent on her, or if she has dependent upon her any other member of her family by reason of sickness or other infirmity. No family would be broken up by this plan. If a man or woman has to be transferred to another locality than that in which the person lives, provision is made in the bill for the transfer of the whole menage. Provision is made for payment of mileage and for the transfer and maintenance of the household goods necessary to keep the family together.

Again, looking toward the security of the fundamental thing in America, which is the home, no one under such a law as proposed by the bill would be transferred to any place where there is not provided in advance suitable housing. Can that be done under Executive order? No.

Mr. President, another objective, which is the answer to a demand is that if the bill should become a law it would establish and maintain a proper balance in numbers between men and women in the armed services, and, on the other side of the scale, men and women who are employed at home in noncombatant services. That is one plan which is sought to be put into effect.

There is another one, namely, the establishment and maintenance of a balance among those who are not engaged in military service, that is, a balance between those who are employed in the factories, in the mines, on the prairies and farms, in the shipyards, and in transportation. All the essential noncombatant war service is intended to be coordinated according to a grand plan, a master plan. Then quota calls would be made for volunteers, such calls occurring from time to time, and if the people of the country desired to maintain and keep going the voluntary system they could do it simply by responding to the calls.

Mr. President, the bill provides that if the voluntary system is carried through it shall be operated, not by some new organization, not by some additional bureau to be set up, but by an existing organization, namely, the War Manpower Commission, so long as the voluntary system works; and at all times, under either the voluntary system or under the selective plan contained in the proposed legislation, the War Manpower Commission is the body which would have charge of the preparation of the master plan. That Commission would be the policy-making body; it would be the central responsible organ of the Congress of the United States, if the proposed legislation should be passed, for the making of plans and the coordinating of all information as to the number of men needed here, and the number there are of the qualifications and character desired. This applies also to women.

If the voluntary plan should not work, however, and the President should have to make a call under the selective plan, then what would happen? We would carry on with an institution which is already in existence, which was created by Congress, and which has been the most admirable type of operating agency this country has ever seen, either in time of peace or in time of war, namely, the selective-service local boards. The local boards are the decentralized operating agencies which operate a way out on the ends of the branches of the tree. They work without pay. They do not have the smell of brimstone on their garments. They have no interest except the interest of serving their country. Their neighbors know the members of the boards, and know that their purpose is to serve their country, and when they pass judgment upon a boy or a girl the neighbors accept the decision in most cases. If they do not, or if the boy himself or if the girl herself does not accept the decision, the existing law, that is the selective-service law of 1940, provides for agencies of appeal clear up to the top, to the Commander in Chief. The rights of those affected are protected in an American way. That is the selective part of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, or does the Senator prefer not to be interrupted?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not care. I am trying to explain the bill; that is all.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I understand that. Do I correctly understand that in case the voluntary plan should not operate, that the draft boards, so-called, would have authority to order a citizen into a private munition plant, into a navy yard, or onto a farm?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest to the Senator that my observation has been that most American youths want to go into the combat military service. I have heard that expression of desire from young men repeatedly. The impression among many seems to be that unless one has a military service record, after the war his opportunity for civic advancement, and for political preferment in the future, will be handicapped. Therefore, from my observation it seems to me that some plan will have to be worked out in the case of citizens who prefer military service to, let us say, farm service, so that those who are placed in other service than the military will enjoy the same rights and honorable status and will be recognized by law as having made the same contribution to the war effort as those who serve in the combat service. Why should not the young man ordered to work on a farm or in a private munitions factory enjoy, for example, the civil-service military preferment laws, hospitalization, compensation, and so forth, that are extended to officers and privates in the military service, who never perform combat duty but who render other useful and necessary war work?

I suggest these observations for the committee's consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Massachusetts has made this valuable contribution to the subject. He is always very helpful, and he has aided us by the thought he has just expressed. I hope the suggestion he has made will be considered and will be incorporated in the measure before we conclude our consideration of it.

Mr. President, let me say that there is absolutely no pride of authorship about this measure which would bar amendments, changes, or even substitution of another bill for this bill. The effort today is to have something definite and concrete in front of us, to get down to close fighting with this very tough subject. Some persons think that the subject is an unpopular one, and that it is dangerous for a Senator to introduce or sponsor such a bill as this. Very well, if that be the case, I will gladly chance my political life for the thing which I think will help my son in his efforts over there in north Africa. If he is willing to give his life for his country, I am willing to give my political life for what the proposed legislation will bring about. On the contrary, however, I very much doubt that the subject is unpopular. My study of public opinion relating to this subject causes me to believe that we should answer the responsibility and do something about the matter, and not leave men and women of the country victimized under an Executive order.

What will result when the present Executive order goes into effect? Let us take a man over 38 as an illustration and ask ourselves if the public is going to like the condition which will prevail. A man over 38 cannot be drafted into the war service. Under the Executive order, he will be sent from one place to another place to work in a war factory. He works there a couple of days and then says he does not like it. He says, "I am going to quit." His employer will say, "Very well, if you quit, I will not give you a release. If you go to a plant which has a war contract and which has entered into a stabilization agreement, the door is closed in your face, and you will be an outcast; you will be blacklisted."

Mr. President, does our country want to live under that sort of indirect sanction? I know it does not. I know that the system of sanction in this country has to be founded upon law, or our people will not obey it. We are accustomed to having the question of whether a law has been violated tried by a court of justice. We are not accustomed to having such cases judged in advance and the accused being blackballed without a chance of trial based on the facts and on the law. That is the difference between operating under such a law as I propose and continuing to operate under an Executive order. My proposal would provide a moderate punishment for violation of the law, but would impose it only in the American way, that is, after the accused has had his case submitted to a court of justice and has been given an opportunity to be heard. If he were then found guilty he would be punished by fine or imprisonment, or by both, according to the grade of his offense. That is what the pending bill provides. That is the difference between the direct sanctions of the bill and those indirect sanctions which sneak up behind one unawares, with the public not knowing what the sanctions are, and being caught unawares. The known law is what we should live by. We can live by the law, but we cannot live by orders administered by bureaus.

I do not imply anything wrong concerning the orders which are in existence today. I do not undertake to criticize any of the men who administer them. I am talking about clean-cut American principles, which are as familiar to us as the landscape of the place where we were born. They are the oaken beams which support the entire superstructure of our political and social life; and not even in time of war will we give them up if we can save them. By such a measure as the bill which I am discussing they would be saved and made effective.

Observe the difference between a voluntary plan, which has only indirect sanctions, and a voluntary plan, which has always behind it the possibility of drafting. Senators know full well that if all the people in these two spheres of life realize that all of them are liable for the same amount of service and the same degree of contribution to the war effort they will have the impulse to serve. All they will desire is to be told where to go and what to do in order to fit into the plan. Some of them have told me, "If it is left to us to decide where we shall do this work, how can we fit into the general plan? We do not know what it is. If left to our individual wills, it will be hit and miss. So we want you, the Congress, to go ahead and create the liability, declare it, and let us all know that all of us are in it to the same degree, and then we will volunteer." If they know that the recalcitrants—those who are so few that it would be difficult to find them—can be reached, the spirit with which they will act will have all the characteristics of a voluntary spirit. They will volunteer much more freely.

This morning Secretary Wickard, in his testimony, made a statement concerning the farm boys. He was asked whether compulsion of law would be necessary, and he said "Yes," in effect. He said that it would ease the problem so far as their consciences are concerned. That was a very good statement of the same point which I am stating much less effectively.

The bill I have introduced makes in words the liability of all as follows:

> Shall be liable to contribute by personal service to the war effort in a non-combatant capacity, according to his or her abilities, and as selected in accordance with the terms of this act and regulations prescribed by the President thereunder.

Many more exemptions have been found necessary in a measure of this kind, which relates to all the population, than those granted in the case of the Selective Service Act, which related only to the fighting men. For example, we found it necessary to exempt officers of States, municipalities, and subdivisions thereof. In order to save the autonomy of the several States and to maintain the theory of our Government of a federation of States in the great Union, we have made it clear that there is no liability on the part of officers of States, municipalities, and political subdivisions thereof. We have exempted any woman while she is pregnant, as certified by a duly licensed physician, and any woman who has living with her and under her care either a child or children under 18 years of age, or one or more persons who, because of illness or advanced age, need her personal care.

There are many other things of that character in the bill. We found as we made progress that education was necessary, and so there is a provision in the bill for training which will enable workmen to improve their status in life and industry and which will step up their skills. It is also provided that they shall receive compensation during the time when they are undergoing education and training, until they go to work. There is an excellent record of effective service in training during the past 6 months, and it is a source of supply of surprisingly good skilled labor for industry. It is a good feature of the existing practice to incorporate into law.

Another thing in the pending bill, in the nature of a grant or benefit which cannot be provided by an Executive order, is the establishment of reemployment and seniority of boys and girls who are taken out of their continuity of service and plunged into the war effort. The bill would provide for reemployment and seniority rights when the war is over, or when they return to their peacetime activities.

Mr. President, I shall close with a brief summary of the proposed legislation. I probably have omitted some features of the bill, because I am speaking without notes. However, I am sure it will be printed during the day and will be available quite soon.

The national war service bill, introduced today in the House of Representatives by Representative WADSWORTH and in the Senate by me, expresses the will of the people as we perceive it. It establishes equality of liability before the law in civilian supply of our military needs. It affords the means of coordinating over all and local war plans, maintaining balance between armed men and workers, between competing claimants for men and women in agriculture, mining, and manufacturing. It represents government by consent of the governed. By it the people, through their representatives, provide that if any mobile person refuses to perform his obligation, either through the voluntary or the selection method, punishment by due process of law is possible. If enacted it would be the people's instrumentality for complete effective mobilization of manpower and womanpower in winning the war.

The voluntary system would continue in effect so long as the people keep it doing the job. The possibility of the President putting into operation the selective system is the guaranty of vitality of total war resources. Civilian morale, health, and welfare are safeguarded.

The bill protects the sanctity of the home, the family, and the economic and social interests of employees. It affords opportunity for education in and stepping-up of skills. It makes possible an earlier attainment of victory. After the war it would help readjustment.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Can the Senator give us any information as to what scheme or law is applicable in Great Britain? Is there anything which is equivalent to the proposed act in relation to manpower and womanpower?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. Unfortunately I do not have a copy of it on my desk, but I have examined it very carefully. If the able Senator from Wisconsin has a copy of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, Seventy-seventh Congress, on October 21 and 26, November 5, 6, and 9, 1942, he will find in them a remarkably fine address by Daniel J. Tobin, president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, delivered on September 26, 1942, upon his return from a survey of labor conditions in England.

In the address he spoke of the operations under the British system. I do not know how nearly our bill follows that system, but it is a system which has in it compulsory features in case the voluntary effort is not successful. Thus far in England they have had very few instances in which they have had to apply the compulsory features of the law. It has worked extremely well and apparently satisfies labor very well over there.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALLGREN in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I heard considerable testimony by Mr. Tobin before a subcommittee. He told the story of what had happened in England. However, I think it would be an injustice to him to imply that he was approving of the same thing for this country at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I did not know that; I am rather surprised to hear that he does not approve of it. How long ago was it that he made the statement?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I shall look up the record; and if I find that I am in error about it I shall correct my statement.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have before me a statement by Mr. William Green which indicates that at a certain time the American Federation of Labor did not approve. Let me read it. The statement appeared in the legislative program published in the January issue of the American Federationist magazine:

MANPOWER

Under our present set-up workers in any particular industry or locality threatened by manpower shortages may be frozen to their jobs when the Government, management, and labor agree such action is necessary.

That is the situation I described awhile ago, when it is agreed that a person who leaves his employment will not be hired by another industry.

This is the democratic way—

So he thinks.

Meanwhile, proposals are being advanced for the enactment of national service legislation involving Nation-wide compulsory job freezing. Such complete mobilization of industrial manpower may ultimately be necessary.

He makes that admission.

We will cooperate fully in the realization of this objective when we become convinced that such drastic action is necessary.

But we are not yet so convinced. We oppose enactment of national service legislation at this time.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think that probably was the gist of Mr. Tobin's statement.

Mr. AUSTIN. That may be Mr. Tobin's attitude. So far as his story of what has happened in Britain went, it showed a condition of affairs on the basis of which the Senate could decide whether or not the plan was good.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Let me ask the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont whether the testimony before his committee was of such weight as to show that we cannot have sufficient production without the enactment of the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I think it was. Let me call attention briefly to a few of the statements of witnesses who appeared before the committee.

On page 25 of the hearings to which I have referred appears the following testimony given when Chairman McNutt was on the stand:

Senator AUSTIN. I have in my file here material that is so startling and so tragic that we cannot delay; we must act; we must go ahead just as fast as it is reasonably possible to remedy by legislation this situation. Now, is it not your judgment that we must, by law, prevent these evils that you have mentioned, that is to say, piracy?

Mr. MCNUTT. That is right.

Senator AUSTIN. The voluntary transfers, selling out, going without the consent of the Government from one occupation to the other, losing time by being out on the street hunting a new job that will pay more money; don't you find that is the practice?

Mr. MCNUTT. No question about that.

Senator AUSTIN. We must do it, must we not, to stop that by law?

Mr. MCNUTT. As I said before, and I repeat, it is inevitable. The question of timing is in the hands of the President and of the Congress.

Senator HILL. Inevitable and inexorable, too.

Mr. MCNUTT. Yes.

Let us turn to the testimony of Mr. Nelson. On page 166 the following appears:

Senator AUSTIN. Not outside of the sentimental element that is involved in dealing with men and women, and let us see if we can forget it for the time being, I would like to ask your opinion as to whether or not it is not better that all men and all women shall be assured by an act of Congress that they shall be impartially treated on the subject of liability to either serve in the armed forces or to work?

Is it not wiser that we should establish a statute which fixes that liability rather than to leave it at the random judgment of the different men who are in the different places of responsibility and authority?

Mr. NELSON. In my opinion, sir, you will have to do it before we get through. I do not believe we should dilly-dally with this war. I think we have just got to put our teeth right into it and go out and with it. I think sooner or later we are going to come to that declaration by Congress—not that we want compulsions—so that the people will know what the problem is, and they will do it. People will obey. People want to do this, but they do not want to see slackers in the picture. The people, in my opinion, of this country, are going to demand that Congress do something of this kind before we get through.

It will be found that frequently throughout his testimony he was brought back to that subject by different Senators on the committee, and that he made it very emphatic that it is an inevitable thing.

Of course, the question with all those gentlemen was, has the time now arrived to do it? It is up to the President and Congress, as Mr. McNutt said. I think it is more up to the Congress than to the President to determine what are the needs and requirements of the people. We are the voice of the people. Even the smallest minority of the people has the right to be heard here. Here is the place for them to speak, and it is our duty to present their views.

Before leaving the testimony let me call attention to the testimony of General McSherry. On page 213 we find the following:

Senator AUSTIN. No; I said would you want to undertake these changes that are so obviously dislocating in our customary lives, without legislation?

General MCSHERRY. I think eventually we must have some sort of legislation which will give authority to handle these difficult problems, and I am speaking primarily of those problems where you have individuals or groups of individuals that do not want to go along with the national policies of making the best use of the manpower of the Nation for the war effort.

Now, that legislation would not necessarily mean that compulsion would be applied to every individual, because most individuals want to do what they can to win this war. It would be utilized only in the cases where someone was objecting to going along with the best policies which were considered necessary for the war effort.

Senator AUSTIN. You have stated in the obverse what I was getting at. That is, what laws were intended to do, and that is to regulate the conduct of men in order to have orderly government, but the form of those laws must be such as to apply to all men——

General MCSHERRY. That is right.

Senator AUSTIN (continuing). Uniformly and with equality—that must be preserved by us in forming a statute, so we have to make the form of the law such that it applies to every man, and the fellow who gets tough can be handled by coercion just as the man you spoke of who just would not conform with the others.

I do not have any other questions, Mr. Chairman.

I have read sufficient to show that the testimony did indicate the necessity for legislation; and the view was always that such legislation is inevitable sometime in the future, and so forth. Those statements were made in October.

Finally I said to Chairman McNutt:

You have a great commission. You have the benefit of the advice of the joint chiefs of staff, of the War Production Board, of the Office of Economic Stabilization, of the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce, and of various other agencies. Why do you not come forward with a bill?

The reply was that they had not been able to do it as yet, but they would do it.

I asked, "When?"

Within 2 weeks; within 2 weeks we will come forward with a bill, and of course we will present it to the President first.

I had asked him:

Will you not let us see those bills of yours?

He had replied:

Would you consider them?

I said:

Why, Chairman McNutt, we are considering five bills now. We are not married to any one of them. We are trying to serve our country, and we ask you to produce your bills. We know you have them.

He admitted that he had made several drafts of bills, and he was going to produce them in 2 weeks. That was in October 1942, but we have not as yet seen them. That is why I say it is time that Congress got busy.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, let me suggest to the distinguished Senator——

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. I consented to having the able senior Senator from Vermont make a statement in explanation of the bill, and I do not want to interfere now if the Senator from Vermont desires to explain the basis of the bill. However, if such an explanation is to lead to discussion I shall invoke the rule and call for the regular order.

I desire to say further that I have never liked the practice of using the morning hour for the purpose of making speeches on bills being introduced. It is only on one or more occasions that I have consented to such a presentation, and then have felt that a brief explanation should end the matter.

Today an hour has gone by. If the further explanation is to lead to discussion from the floor I shall invoke the rule and shall call for the regular order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I did not choose to follow the course which has been pursued. I expected to sit down after a brief explanation. Some time ago I announced that I was ready to sit down, but I wanted to accommodate my fellow Senators and colleagues.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, let me say that I was not accommodated, but I shall sit down.

Mr. AUSTIN. So shall I.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The introduction of further bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Mr. GUFFEY obtained the floor and proceeded to make a statement regarding James G. Blaine and his interest in the principles of reciprocity in trade agreements and was interrupted by Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Under what order has the Senator from Pennsylvania obtained the floor to make a speech?

Mr. GUFFEY. I merely have one or two paragraphs more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania made a request for unanimous consent to put an article in the RECORD.

Mr. MCNARY. I do not think this is the time to make a speech in connection with a matter to be placed in the RECORD. I just sent word to my distinguished colleague from my State that I would object to him discussing at this time a resolution he desires to submit. I have always tried to have the rule enforced in the interest of orderly parliamentary procedure. It is a proper one. We have the remainder of the day for speeches, but Members of the Senate come here for the purpose of introducing bills and submitting resolutions and transacting the other business that comes in the morning hour. We are getting into a practice which I abhor.

I do not want to take the Senator from Pennsylvania off the floor, but after the routine morning business is finished the Senator can speak the remainder of the day. Let us, however, finish the routine morning business as prescribed by the rules.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I will make my statement in complete form after the routine business shall have been concluded.

Mr. MCNARY. Very well. I speak in all kindness. I did not desire to take the able Senator from Vermont off the floor, but I said that if others were to follow him along the same line there might be an interminable debate.

I wish to give notice here that whenever I am present, which I think will be most of the time, I shall object to the making of speeches during the routine morning business.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to commend the statement made by the able Senator from Oregon. We have all been careless, and no one Senator more than another is to blame in regard to making speeches out of order, but many Senators are busy men, and if we adhere strictly to the rule governing the transaction of morning business, in 10 or 20 minutes we can go to our offices and perform our office work. We have been waiting here now for over an hour and 5 minutes to present some bills that should have been presented during the first 10 minutes of the session.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will adhere to the position he has taken. He has tried to do it before, but without much success. We have a rule as to the morning hour and after the morning hour other business before the Senate may be transacted. I do not want to be thought as objecting to the Senator from Pennsylvania proceeding, because I think all of us are guilty of the same offense, but it would be very much better for us all and enable us better to take care of the day's work if the rules which we have made were adhered to.

BILLS INTRODUCED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The further introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. AUSTIN introduced Senate bill 666, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BILBO:

S. 667. A bill to provide domiciliary care for discharged disabled veterans pending adjudication of claim for pension; and

S. 668. A bill to authorize and to direct the Veterans' Administration to provide vocational rehabilitation and assistance in securing suitable employment for service-connected disabled veterans in need thereof, and feasible purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 669. A bill to provide pensions to members of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who become disabled by reason of their service therein, equivalent to 90 percent of the compensation payable to war veterans for similar service-connected disabilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 670. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS:

S. 671. A bill for the relief of Charles Francis Fessenden; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 67. A bill to amend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 673. A bill for the relief of Burton Bowen; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MURRAY:

S. 674. A bill authorizing the payment of allowances in lieu of quarters or rations in kind to certain enlisted men; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 675. A bill to amend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, so as to extend the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act to conscientious objectors; and

S. 676. A bill to amend an Act entitled "An Act to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RADCLIFFE:

S. 677. A bill to amend the National Housing Act, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 678. A bill for the regulation and stabilization of agricultural and commodity prices and of our domestic economy through the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar, pursuant to the power conferred on the Congress by paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 679. A bill providing for railroad transportation at reduced rates for merchant seamen on authorized leave of absence; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for the immediate relief of farm manpower situation in the Middle West.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill introduced by the Senator from South Dakota will be appropriately referred.

By Mr. BUSHFIELD:

S. 680. A bill to provide needed manpower for the production, conservation, and protection of food during the year 1943; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TUNNELL:

S. 681. A bill to amend section 245 of the Criminal Code, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 682 A bill to prohibit the paid advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio in certain circumstances, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. PEPPER (for himself, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. HILL, and Mr. DAVISQ:

S. 683. A bill to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF MAXIMUM PRICES ON PORK AND BEEF PRODUCTS AND BREAD AND OTHER BAKERY PRODUCTS

Mr. REED submitted a resolution (S. Res. 94), which was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Whereas the provisions of the act entitled "An act to aid in stabilizing the cost of living," approved October 2, 1942, expressly provide (1) that "no maximum price shall be established or maintained under authority of this act or otherwise for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodity a price therefor" equal to the parity price for such agricultural commodity, (2) that no maximum price shall be maintained for any such processed or manufactured commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of the agricultural commodity the highest price received by them between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, with certain qualifications: Provided, That the President may correct gross inequities in this respect, but that in no event shall a maximum price be established for such a processed or manufactured commodity which will not reflect parity to the producers of the agricultural commodity, and (3) that "in the fixing of maximum prices on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing"; and

Whereas the act known as the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 approved January 30, 1942, as amended October 2, 1942, expressly provides that the price-fixing powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution established in any industry, except to prevent circumstances or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act"; and

Whereas the foregoing provisions have not been suspended or modified by any law or lawful action; and

Whereas on October 22, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued maximum price regulation No. 148, revised, now in effect as amended November 2, 1942, fixing maximum prices for pork products and using as a live-hog base approximately $13.60 per 100 pounds at Chicago, although the price of live hogs at Chicago since the promulgation of said revised regulation for a substantial period of time has been in excess of $15 per 100 pounds, causing a loss to the processors in violation of the provision of the act approved October 2, 1942, that processors shall be allowed a general fair and equitable margin; and

Whereas said maximum price regulation No. 148, revised, as amended is in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, because the base of live-animal prices used was lower than the highest price received by producers between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, and because there has been no action by the President to permit such a lower base on the ground of any gross inequity; and

Whereas on December 10, 1942 the Office of Price Administration issued maximum price regulation No. 169, now in effect as amended December 19, 1942, and January 2, 1943, fixing maximum prices for beef products on a basis which fails to yield to the processors generally fair and equitable margins; and

Whereas on April 28, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued the general maximum price regulation establishing as maximum prices for bread and other bakery products, together with other commodities, the highest price charged by each seller during March 1942 for each such commodity, and said maximum prices for bread and other bakery products have since been maintained at the same levels; and

Whereas said maximum prices for bread and other bakery products were and are in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, because said products are processed and manufactured in whole from wheat and other agricultural commodities and because said maximum prices did not and do not reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodities either parity or the highest prices received by producers for them between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942; and

Whereas contrary to the statement of the Office of Price Administration at the time of issuing the general maximum price regulation that "every producer whose prices are stabilized is assured that his costs, which are based upon the stabilized prices of others, will not rise," the Office of Price Administration did not at that time place any maximum price or control, with minor exceptions, upon any of the costs of manufacturers of bread and other bakery products, and it was not until October 1942 that ceilings were placed upon flour, eggs, dry, evaporated, and condensed milk, certain other ingredients used in such products, and wages, by which time such costs had undergone a substantial increase, amounting to an average increase of one-half cent per pound in the case of bread; and

Whereas the costs of producing bread and other bakery products have continued to increase substantially since October 1942, as a result in part of increases in maximum prices for flour allowed by Maximum Price Regulation No. 296, issued by the Office of Price Administration on January 2, 1943, although no increase in the maximum prices for bread and other bakery products has been allowed; and

Whereas producers of bread and other bakery products, particularly smaller producers, are therefore being denied a generally fair and equitable margin in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, and large numbers of such producers in fact are operating at a loss; and

Whereas the Office of Price Administration, in violation of the provision in the act approved January 30, 1942, that the price-fixing powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry," has used such powers to compel such changes in the bread and other bakery-products industry (as evidenced by its announcement upon the issuance of maximum price regulation No. 296 that "this increase in flour prices should not necessitate an increase in the present retail bread prices because the higher flour costs, it is estimated, will be completely offset by simultaneously introduced savings in the manufacture, packaging, and distribution costs of bakers"), affected by food distribution order No. 1, issued by the Secretary of Agriculture under direction of the Director of Economic Stabilization after recommendation by the Office of Price Administration, limiting varieties of bread and rolls, prohibiting slicing of bread, limiting the amount of milk, shortening, and sugar in white bread, prohibiting certain methods of distribution and otherwise changing the practices of the industry for the purpose of maintaining present maximum prices for bread; and

Whereas said food distribution order No. 1, even could it be lawfully resorted to by the Office of Price Administration for the purpose of maintaining present maximum prices for bread, has not resulted in savings which allow producers of bread a generally fair and equitable margin as required by law; and

Whereas the meat processing and bread and other bakery-products industries are essential war industries and their continued operation and the foods they supply are essential to the national welfare and the successful prosecution of the war; and

Whereas the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration are threatening extinction of these industries or their concentration in the hands of a few large operators able to withstand the price squeeze imposed, by reason of large financial resources; and

Whereas the action of the Office of Price Administration in maintaining maximum prices for pork and beef products and for bread and other bakery products at present levels in violation of the foregoing provisions of law is defeating the intent of the Congress that producers of agricultural commodities shall receive fair and reasonable prices, due to the inability of processors to pay such prices: Now therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or through a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, is hereby authorized and directed—

(1) to investigate and study the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration, the Office of Economic Stabilization, and any other governmental agency, their officials, employees, agents, and representatives, in respect to the establishment and maintenance of maximum prices for pork and beef products and for bread and other bakery products; and

(2) to report its findings and to recommend further legislation or action by the Congress or the Senate if any, needed to insure compliance by any or all such agencies, officials, employees agents, and representatives with the provisions of the aforementioned act approved January 30, 1942, as amended, and the act approved October 2, 1942.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony as it deems advisable.

PREPARATION AND DISTRIBUTION BY GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES OF MOTION PICTURES, MAGAZINES, AND PERIODICALS

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and request its appropriate reference, and that I may be recognized after the morning business is concluded to make an explanation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution (S. Res. 95) will be received and appropriately referred, and the Senator from Oregon will be recognized later.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. SMITH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 96), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 20 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT TO THE NATIONAL RURAL ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the message sent by the President to the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association convention at St. Louis, Mo., on January 19, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

WORLD ECONOMIC ORGANIZATION AND PEACE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH

[Mr. MAYBANK asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address entitled "World Economic Organization and Peace" delivered by Senator THOMAS of Utah from Washington, D. C., on February 2, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS OF CLYDE T. ELLIS BEFORE NATIONAL RURAL ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION CONVENTION

GOOD FAITH THE ISSUE—ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

[Mr. NYE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Good Faith the Issue: John O'Donnell Wins $50,000 Verdict Against Philadelphia Record," published in the Washington Times-Herald of January 30, which appears in the Appendix.]

PROHIBITION OF CHARGE ACCOUNTS AT FILLING STATIONS—EDITORIAL FROM POCATELLO (IDAHO) TRIBUNE

[Mr. THOMAS of Idaho asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Will This Idiocy Ever Stop?" published in the Pocatello (Idaho) Tribune of January 24, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

IDAHO FARMING CONDITIONS—LETTER FROM E. T. TAYLOR

[Mr. THOMAS of Idaho asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from E. T. Taylor, master of the Idaho State Grange, relative to the difficulties experienced by Idaho farmers, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The routine morning business is concluded. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I should like now to make the statement which I started to make a while ago.

Mr. President, for me to rise to place in the RECORD a statement extolling a Republican may be misunderstood unless I explain. I offer for the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Evening Star of February 1, commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the death of James G. Blaine, who was born at West Brownsville, Pa. Mr. Blaine was Secretary of State during the administrations of Presidents Garfield, Arthur, and Harrison. He, of course, rose to political fame from his adopted State of Maine, but Pennsylvania was his birthplace.

My interest at this time, other than recalling the life of a distinguished American, is to point out that Secretary Blaine, among his many activities— and I might say his crowning achievement in international affairs—was instrumental in putting into effect the principles of reciprocity in trade agreements. Trade agreements as now negotiated by the President, and the Secretary of State have been of great benefit to the Nation and have served as a stimulus to trade and as a means of strengthening friendly ties with other nations.

The present Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, is much to be commended for his distinguished service in the accomplishment of economic stability through trade gained by current agreements. It is my hope that the able Secretary will not be thwarted in the further continuance of these negotiations by failure of Congress to renew the resolution extending the trade agreements.

May posterity record all of the many great achievements of Cordell Hull. As a great American and statesman of outstanding ability, Secretary Hull's personal efforts were responsible for procuring trade agreements with many of the important countries. His many acts of diplomacy have signalized America as outstanding among the nations of the world.

As was so in the case of the trade agreement activities of Secretary Blaine, who, as I have said, is nationally remembered as a Republican, there should not be any evidence of partisanship at the time of the renewal of the resolution continuing the present agreements.

I wish to quote from an address which Secretary Blaine delivered at the inter-American conference of 1889. His statement is as applicable today as when it was made. In discussing the conduct of inter-American relations, he said:

We believe that hearty cooperation, based on hearty confidence, will save all American states from the burdens and evils which have long and cruelly afflicted the older nations of the world.

We believe that a spirit of justice, of common and equal interest between the American states, will leave no room for an artificial balance of power like unto that which has led to wars abroad and drenched Europe in blood.

We believe that friendship, avowed with candor and maintained with good faith, will remove from American states the necessity of guarding boundary lines between themselves with fortifications and military force. * * *

We believe that friendship and not force, the spirit of just law and not violence of the mob, should be the recognized rule of administration between American nations and in American nations.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from the Washington Evening Star of February 1 be printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BLAINE ANNIVERSARY

Wednesday last was the fiftieth anniversary of the death of James G. Blaine, an American exponent of world polity who, considering the lasting value of his achievements, should be better known to his countrymen. It is not too much to say in his behalf that he was the forerunner of the modern school of thought concerning the position of the United States as a compelling force in international affairs. He revived Henry Clay's doctrine of hemisphere solidarity and put into effect the principle of reciprocity in trade concessions. If only for those services, he merits a generous remembrance.

Mr. Blaine, born at West Brownsville, Pa., January 31, 1830, was educated at Washington College, and settling at Augusta, Maine, in 1854 became a practical newspaperman. His editorials in the Kennebec Journal and the Portland Advertiser introduced the word "Republican" to the East, and he thus may be regarded as one of the founders of the party so designated beginning in 1856. Elected to Congress in 1863, he was Speaker of the House of Representatives from 1869 to 1875. A Lincoln supporter and a faithful Unionist, he nevertheless "did not share the radicalism and vindictiveness of the extremists," opposed both Thaddeus Stevens and Charles Sumner, disapproved "coercive measures" aimed at the South, and emerged from the reconstruction period "with the reputation of a liberal who could * * * be trusted even by the Grand Army." Chosen a Senator in 1876, he resigned to become Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President James A. Garfield in 1881 and occupied the same position in the administration of President Benjamin Harrison between 1889 and 1892.

Not a great lawyer nor an experienced student of diplomatic history, Mr. Blaine, however, was possessed of a prophetic vision which made him unique among the political characters of his generation. His appreciation of the necessity for American leadership marked him as a pioneer. He sought to bring together all the republics of the New World under the banner "America for the Americans." The Pan-American Conference of 1889, which he sponsored, laid the foundation of the Bureau of American Republics, which since 1910 has been called the Pan American Union.

Mr. Blaine also took the first steps toward saving the Hawaiian Islands for the United States. He negotiated important treaties having the effect of strengthening friendly ties with Great Britain, preserved the Panama Canal against foreign interference, arranged the first international copyright agreements and in many other ways set a pattern of procedure in American relations with other powers which still prevails.

PREPARATION AND DISTRIBUTION BY GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES OF MOTION PICTURES, MAGAZINES, AND PERIODICALS

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I now desire to discuss briefly the resolution which I submitted awhile ago and which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon will be referred as requested by him.

The resolution (S. Res. 95) was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the preparation and distribution of motion pictures, magazines, and periodicals by departments and agencies of the Government, for the purpose of determining, among other things: (1) The authorization for such activities, (2) the appropriations from which such activities are financed and their cost, (3) the persons to whom such propaganda is disseminated, (4) the underlying purpose of these motion pictures, magazines, and periodicals, (5) all other pertinent facts necessary to enable the committee to render a full and complete report on these activities. The committee or subcommittee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the remainder of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies of the Government, to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $———, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, the resolution provides for a complete investigation of the preparation and distribution of motion pictures and magazines by departments and agencies of the Government. My purpose in requesting that it be referred to the Appropriations Committee is that, as a member of that committee, I am not aware of having authorized the expenditure of Federal funds for the specific purpose of the Government engaging in the magazine and moving-picture business. Yet, obviously, the executive department of this administration is now in the magazine and moving-picture business in a big way. However, I do not know to what total extent our well-financed executive department is engaged in this new business in these critical times, when our Nation is fighting to maintain its very existence, and the American taxpayers do not know how they are going to meet their tax bills; nor do I know how much money is being spent for this kind of personal propaganda, or who or how many persons on Federal pay rolls are occupied in this form of showmanship, who no doubt could be better employed in either the combat or productive forces of our country at war.

I shall call attention now to only one magazine and two moving pictures put out by the Federal Government. There are many others. I do not know how many or what they all may be.

On the evening of January 11 last when I was guest at the annual dinner of the American Legion in this city I viewed a moving picture entitled "A Prelude to War." This picture was preceded by an oral introduction by General Osborne of the Morale Division, War Department, who explained to the audience that it was the first of a series of moving pictures in the making, which would be shown under the over-all title of "Why We Fight." He stated that the purpose of making and showing these pictures was to inform the men in the combat forces of our country for what and why they were fighting.

At the conclusion of the picture I was convinced that Mr. Roosevelt intended to seek a fourth term in the Presidency. I was of the opinion that references to war, oppression, combat, and so forth, as they appeared in the picture are only window dressing and stage scenery for cleverly organized campaign material. It may have been only a coincidence, but the speech in Chicago 7 days later of Hon. Frank C. Walker, our Postmaster General, seemed to confirm the thought which the moving picture A Prelude to War had created in my mind.

I doubted if the purpose stated by General Osborne for making and showing this moving picture to the ultimately more than 10,000,000 men in our combat forces, who are prospective voters, was the only purpose of the picture. So that all other Members of the Congress may judge for themselves the justification for the making and showing of this picture at Federal expense and in official time, and as a proper war expenditure for every episode depicted in it, I have arranged with the War Department for a free showing of the picture in the Caucus Room of the Senate Office Building, on Tuesday, February 16, at 1:15 p. m. I hope every Member of the Congress will take advantage of this opportunity to see this sensational moving picture.

My attention has been called to another moving picture entitled "Spy Ship," but I have not seen it. I understand that it, too, is a propaganda picture which fosters disunity by those very persons who are continually shouting "unity, unity."

I now call the attention of Senators to this magazine which I have with me. It is entitled "Victory," and is No. 1, volume

1, of this new Federal venture in personal political propaganda. Except that it is published by the Government of the United States, and except for the statement communicated to me by letter signed by Mr. Armitage Watkins, Overseas Publications, Office of War Information, that "there is no public distribution"—of it—"within the United States," I know only what I see in this copy of the magazine itself. It weighs 13½ ounces, measures 10½ by 14 inches, contains 80 pages, and is printed upon the very finest book paper. It is profusely illustrated with excellent cut. A number of its pictures are in three or more colors.

I do not know what it cost to produce this copy, how many copies of this issue were printed, how often the magazine is to be issued, to whom it is to be sent, by what authority it is published, how it is financed, who and how many are on the pay roll of the staff, nor their rates of compensation; nor do I know what necessity there is for its existence in the all-out war effort of the American people; but from a perusal of its pages, observing its most prominent illustrations and reading its vainglorious text, again I have the impression that Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt is to seek a fourth election to the Presidency.

I now should like to read a few of the paragraphs in this publication which are intended to strike terror to our enemies, to cause the Japanese to retreat, and the followers of Hitler to lay down their arms. I read:

There are really two Franklin Delano Roosevelts. There is the forceful war leader of his country in the most perilous period of its history; a brilliant statesman of great sincerity, of deep perception, and a visionary whose social and economic philosophies once before saved his country in a crisis. The second Roosevelt is a warm-hearted, kindly and companionable man, whose personal charm has won him the love of millions of his loyal countrymen, and a man who in overcoming a serious attack of infantile paralysis in adult life proved his own insurmountable personal courage.

He is a kindly, loving, and beloved man, this leader of a nation which has been built on friendliness and neighborliness.

One of his closest friends over a period of years recently had this to say of the President:

"Both the President and Mrs. Roosevelt are instinctively the kindest people I have ever known. Along with their deep charm and their eager interest in people, their sincere liking for all sorts of people, they have an unselfish sense of tact and consideration I have never seen equaled.

"No one can be in the President's presence long and feel uncomfortable or embarrassed. He makes everyone, from the most humble to the most highly placed, believe that he is sincerely interested in them and in their problem of the moment. Even those who have not agreed with the President politically admit they are completely won by his gracious personality."

How terrifying that must be to the Japs!

Mr. DANAHER. If the Senator will yield, will he give us the name of the author?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been trying to ascertain the name of the author. There is no name signed to the article, although the pronoun "I" is used in it. But I cannot find out who the "I" is. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HOLMAN. Would the Senator rather have me yield than to terrify the enemies of our country by further reading from this article?

Mr. DANAHER. Respecting the passion for anonymity of the author, insofar as the Senator from Oregon has sought his identity, can the Senator tell us what department puts out this particular publication?

Mr. HOLMAN. It comes from the Office of War Information.

Mr. DANAHER. The Office of War Information?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is what it is.

Mr. DANAHER. How does the Senator know it is not for publication in this country?

Mr. HOLMAN. Merely by the letter which accompanied the copy which, after considerable difficulty, I was able to obtain. In this letter Mr. Armitage Watkins says, "There is no public distribution [of it] within the United States." That is all I know about it.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to thank the Senator. I had no intention of interrupting his discourse. I thought he had concluded the reading. I, too, should like to know more about the publication, if the Senator chooses to read further excerpts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have only a few more paragraphs to read.

"Franklin Roosevelt is a true aristocrat because he is a true democrat."

That is good. [Laughter.]

"And time and time again I——"

Here is the anonymous "I." That is the only identification I have in connection with the author of this article.

"And time and time again I have watched Mrs. Roosevelt, at a big reception, break away from a group that held especial interest for her and join someone who seemed alone and out of it on the sidelines. She would talk with this lonely one and without his noticing it, draw him into a circle she sensed he would enjoy. Then in a minute she would drift away again to rescue some other recluse in the party."

I can just see the Germans surrendering right now. [Laughter.] I doubt if any such incident ever occurred.

I shall not read further, but I should like to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks the paragraphs of the article I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the paragraphs were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Just as they are a friendly, social couple, the Roosevelts have that deep love of family which characterizes America. They are happiest when one or all of their children are visiting either the White House or the Roosevelt country home in Hyde Park, N. Y. That pleasure is seldom enjoyed these days, however. Each of the four Roosevelt sons is in the military service, and their daughter is busy with war work on the west coast.

Whenever their country has been faced with the crisis of war or domestic upheaval, it has been the good fortune of Americans—or perhaps their good judgment exercised through an elective system of Government—to have at the helm a man of instinctive leadership.

George Washington guided his Nation through its first faltering days. Sage and spiritual Abraham Lincoln saved it from dissolution when civil war flamed. Idealistic Woodrow Wilson brought sanity to his country and a world at war in 1918. And today the man who holds the destiny of 135,000,000 Americans in his decisions is ideally fitted for the grave responsibilities of a wartime President.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt combines the two most important characteristics of a war leader. He is an unflinching fighter and he is a man of such broad vision that the peace he helps win will be a just one.

* * * * *

It has been said that in the long years of his confinement as an invalid, Roosevelt and his intelligent wife, Eleanor Roosevelt, slowly attained a political philosophy of broad social economic equality, which might not be expected from a man whose whole background and breeding would tend to temper his views with the toryism of the conservative reactionary.

Thus in 1932, when Franklin Roosevelt was swept into office as United States President by a Nation weary of reactionaries and seeking relief from a world-wide depression, he had just the program which could save the country from chaos. He called it the New Deal, and by it he promised to secure for others the advantages he himself had enjoyed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, since I prepared my statement suggestion has been made that my resolution would more appropriately go to another committee than the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr HOLMAN. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. We have created a special joint committee, of which the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is chairman to investigate nonessential expenditures. I ask the view of the Senator from Oregon as to whether appropriately his resolution should not be referred to that committee.

Mr HOLMAN. I am willing to accept the suggestion, and request that the resolution be so referred.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I myself should like to have an opportunity to glance over the resolution before agreeing that it go to any particular committee. I have not seen it or heard it read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would the Senator like to see the illustrations in this publication?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it is important where the illustrations may go. I am talking about the resolution the Senator is offering. By the way, what is the name of the publication from which the Senator has read?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is called Victory.

Mr. BARKLEY. What does the Senator's resolution provide?

Mr. HOLMAN. The resolution proposes an inquiry into the authority under which this magazine is published, and the funds with which it is published.

Let me read what appears under the picture of the President:

"Liberty under God!" That is what Franklin D. Roosevelt pledges the United States of America to insure for all the future of all mankind. On the foundation of the four freedoms—of speech, of worship, from want, and from fear—this future will be built and forever maintained.

My point is that publishing this magazine is a waste of public funds, that the people of this country have a tremendous problem in trying to meet the necessary costs of government, and that really this entire magazine is merely window dressing for a personal political campaign.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us understand what the status of the resolution is. Has it been offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think, under the circumstances, that is the proper place for it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the fact that the Senator from Oregon has requested that the resolution submitted by him go to the Committee on Appropriations determine the committee to which it should go?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not necessarily.

Mr. DANAHER. Then, if some of us deemed that this was a matter of peculiarly nonessential expenditure, which should be investigated by the committee already created for the investigation of such expenditures, might we not properly inquire as to whether that committee has jurisdiction?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The jurisdiction of that committee is defined by the act which created it. It has no authority whatever to report on a resolution.

Mr. DANAHER. It has no authority to report on a resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has no authority to do so, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, has it authority to inquire into nonessential expenditures?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has, yes, under the act which created it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the committee in question is not a Senate committee. It is a joint committee made up of members of both Houses and of outsiders. It has no legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I understand it is a joint committee, and I so referred to it. However, it does seem to me that such a matter as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] brings before us is so obviously a nonessential expenditure that it ought to be inquired into by our standing committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think my colleague has asked for a proper assignment of the resolution. It does not require legislation. An appropriation is required to continue this practice, and if it is a bad one it can be discontinued by withholding the appropriation. The Committee on Appropriations, having the right to appropriate public funds, can necessarily diminish the amount sought or entirely abate the appropriation. I think the resolution is correctly assigned.

NATIONAL 4–H MOBILIZATION WEEK

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this year the week of February 6 to 14 has been proclaimed National 4–H Mobilization Week. Its purpose is to mobilize, behind the war food production program, all rural youth not now reached, and to secure additional leaders to guide those volunteering to do their utmost in helping to win the war on the food front.

President Roosevelt has written a very fine statement in support of the National 4–H Mobilization Week program, which I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 29, 1942.

To all 4–H Club members of the United States:

The turn of each year is symbolic of youth and renewed confidence. Never before has a new year presented to all youth a greater challenge to do their part in a democratic world. The whole Nation recognizes your self-reliance, your steadfast determination to attain your goals, and your patriotic devotion as individuals and as a group.

At this time it is particularly gratifying to learn of your extensive mobilization plans for 1943 to help the farmers of America to bring about still greater food production. May the observance of National 4–H Mobilization Week, February 6 to 14, reach into every rural home. We have faith in your ability to render a great service in this way. We know that you, like your brothers and sisters in the service, have the spirit and perseverance that will bring victory in the fight for human freedom and a world at peace.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. CAPPER. Permit me to point out further, Mr. President, that the 4–H boys and girls deserve all the recognition and support this body can give them. They are rural America at its best. Their achievements have always been inspiring. But now in their all-out war efforts they have excelled all previous records. Please note a few of the 1942 totals: 3,000,000 bushels of vegetables; 14,000,000 jars of fruit and vegetables canned; 600,000 head of livestock; 11,000,000 pounds of peanuts and soybeans; 6,500,000 birds in 4–H poultry flocks.

And would you Senators believe it, the 4–H members bought with the money earned through their own 4–H projects over $6,000,000 of War bonds and stamps. Moreover, people in my section of the country testify that these energetic young people have been just as effective in rendering other civic services, such as collecting scrap of all kinds needed in war work, eliminating accident and fire hazards, increasing farm fuel supplies and improving the health of the community. In fact, the whole 4–H program this year is being geared to war essentials and to those only. And do not forget, to this end many 4–H boys and girls are gladly making sacrifices. They are giving up more and more of those phases of the program which they like best in order that they may serve with the same spirit as the 500,000 former 4–H members who are now in the fighting forces. Right now, during Mobilization Week, each 4–H member is planning his work in terms of the number of fighting men who can be fed from the amount of food he can produce. Even last year in a number of counties throughout the United States 4–H boys and girls produced enough food to feed for 1 year all those in the armed forces from their respective counties.

These are the boys and girls, Mr. President, who know how to farm. These are the boys and girls who have proved that they will see every job through to the finish. More than that, these are the boys and girls upon whom we will have to rely most to produce the food which is now so vitally needed. Their older brothers and sisters have already left the farms of this country. Remember, these are the boys and girls, under the guidance of the oldsters and the dependable county extension agents, who will not only do men's work this summer but who will also effectively help unskilled city youth to get into the "harness" quickly and happily.

But if the 4–H members, now one and a half million strong, are to do all they can and get other boys and girls to do likewise—doubling, perhaps trebling, the final output—then they must have encouragement and, most of all, sympathetic guidance. That means more trained leadership.

Mr. President, at this time England, much harder hit by 4 years of war than this country, is giving considerable additional financial support to the expansion of their Young Farmers Clubs, comparable to the 4–H clubs here. England realizes only too well the importance of this youth program of learning to do on the job. At this crucial time when everything is at stake and food already at a premium, let us in America bend our efforts to seeing that this 4–H program of ours is also expanded. Speaking as a member of the national board of directors of the 4–H clubs for 21 years, I say that the 4–H members of this country—and there are no more loyal or finer young citizens anywhere—will do their full part if they have the guidance and the tools to carry on. Let us not fail them or our men at the front who are depending upon them.

GASOLINE RATIONING

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, over the week end I made a very interesting trip into the productive regions of western Pennsylvania. During my stay there, I had ample opportunity to observe, at first hand, the very deplorable conditions which exist in that section of the State by reason of the present gasoline-rationing policy. That policy has become so controversial that the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette has assigned its special staff writer, Mr. Ray Speigle, one of the most eminent newspaper writers of the city of Pittsburgh, to make an investigation of this particular subject. Column after column is being printed about it in the newspapers, which no doubt will cause the voluntary organizations of that city to send representatives to present their views before the proper Government authorities.

Having received many letters of bitter complaint from my constituents in that section, I personally undertook to investigate the conditions about which they so rightfully complain. The people of this section of my State are patriotic. They are anxious and willing to undergo any sacrifice that is essential to the winning of the war. They work long hours, they pay taxes willingly, and they cooperate actively with every regulation our Government sets forth.

But the gasoline situation in western Pennsylvania is a very trying one, for there is no gainsaying the fact that this area of Pennsylvania has been forced in many cases to close down its refineries, remove its men from their jobs, and curtail the production of gasoline in every possible way—simply because the storage facilities are overtaxed with vast stores of gasoline which continue to remain idle.

Mr President, a situation of this kind is enough to test the patience of any man. These people know that something is amiss when the State of Ohio, just across the border is permitted to import gasoline from western Pennsylvania and, at the same time, to remain free of the drastic regulations which prevail in that section of my own State.

Moreover many counties in the State of West Virginia have recently been removed from this particular zone—a zone which is governed by the most drastic regulations possible. Yet the fact remains that western Pennsylvania, which produces more gasoline, comparatively, than the State of West Virginia, is not, under present regulations, permitted to use even a small fraction of its production

Mr. President, I submit that, in the interest of economy, in the interest of effective administration, in the interest of a rational and realistic gasoline program, this grave injustice which has been wrought upon the people of western Pennsylvania, by reason of the short-sighted program which the Office of Price Administration has invoked in that particular section, must be remedied.

In this connection, Mr Ickes, one of the best-informed administrative representatives on this particular problem, is reported to have said that he sees "no justice in inflicting special regulations as to gas rationing on those areas lying within oil-producing regions." I have made repeated appeals to the Fuel Coordinator's Office and to the Office of Price Administration. I have sent them volumes of letters which I have received from my constituents; but they have made no move, voluntarily, to correct these unpardonable conditions.

If the objective of this plan is to save rubber, why then is it necessary for the people of western Pennsylvania to be so strictly rationed, when the people of other States, not lying within oil-producing sections, are permitted a much greater mileage allowance?

The time has come for some plain talk about the gasoline-rationing situation in western Pennsylvania. Here is an area which produces more gasoline than it uses. Here is an area where storage facilities have become exhausted. Here is an area which remains subjected to the most rigid rationing restrictions. Here is an area which would willingly submit to any rationing program, if this fuel were being drawn off to supply less fortunate areas. But the fact remains that this gasoline is not being transported. It is being allowed to remain idle, and it is creating a very unhealthful situation throughout the State.

Mr President, I submit that western Pennsylvania should be taken out of the restricted area, and that the people there should be permitted the same rationing privileges which now prevail in 31 of the other States in the Union—many of which do not produce sufficient gasoline for their own needs.

SEIZURE OF PATENTS BY THE ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, Senators recently have received from the Office of the Alien Property Custodian, Mr. Leo C. Crowley, a letter under date of December 7, 1942, in which he points out that the Alien Property Custodian has seized approximately 50,000 patents, most of which were owned by nationals of foreign countries. This letter is printed in a brochure in which Mr. Crowley says on page 9:

> For our part we pledge, first, that the patents directly controlled by this agency of government will be available readily and immediately to serve all American industry, and that active use of the store of technical knowledge which these patents represent will be fostered; second, we pledge that we shall encourage further research on these inventions for the lasting benefit of American industry, American labor, and the consuming public; and, third, we shall take all steps within our power to make certain that vested enemy patents are made available forever to American industry.

As to the first two points mentioned by Mr. Crowley, so far as I have perceived, there has been complete unanimity both of purpose and of objective. However, as to the third point, there has been very considerable question. On page 11 of the brochure Mr. Crowley points out, in further elaboration of the third item:

> Our third responsibility is undertaken on the specific instruction of the President. We shall refuse to sell or to release title to the enemy patents. The inventions covered by these patents will be made a permanent possession of the American people and, through freely granted licenses, they will be incorporated in our national industrial machinery. The ultimate disposition of the patents vested from nationals of enemy-occupied countries will be the subject of discussion with the governments in exile.

Mr. President, the point involved has divided the thinking of international lawyers who have viewed with considerable alarm in most instances the course which is represented by the promise of permanent seizure of these particular patents.

Secretary Hull, writing to the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] under date of May 27, 1935, said:

> It is important from my point of view, therefore, that the United States should not depart in any degree from its traditional attitude with respect to the sanctity of private property within our territory, whether such property belongs to nationals of former enemy powers or to those of friendly powers. A departure from that policy and the taking over of such property, except for a public purpose and coupled with the assumption of liability to make just compensation, would be fraught with disastrous results.

The letter appears in volume 31 of the American Journal of International Law, at page 680.

Mr. President, there is raised the whole point. Granted a need in wartime for the United States to use enemy-owned patents which are within our control and subject to seizure by us, whether or not we have a right to seize and condemn such patents without affording compensation as a result of the seizure raises one of the most critical issues to be found in our entire foreign policy. If, in this way, we are to impair the sanctity of private property, and to depart from the rule which sustains it, and under which our Government in the past has grown great, I submit there is stated a challenge which requires our most considered study.

In connection with our thinking on the point I feel that we ought to have available to us an article which appears in the January 1943 issue of the American Journal of International Law. At page 92 of this publication there is an article entitled, "Nationalization of Enemy Patents." The article was written by Prof. Edwin Borchard, of the Yale University School of Law. I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks for the attention and study of Senators.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONALIZATION OF ENEMY PATENTS

The Alien Property Custodian has recently announced that the "tens of thousands"[1] of enemy patents which have been seized by the United States Government are to be held as a "permanent possession of the American people." In a letter said to have been sent to American trade associations and industries, the Custodian invites American industry to apply for nonexclusive licenses to these patents which "we shall make * * * a permanent part of our industrial machinery by refusing to sell them or release title in any way." After calling attention to the "great economic value" in these patents and in the "pending patent applications which represent the latest researches," also to be licensed when granted, the Custodian indicates that they will not only be put to work for existing war production but also for converting plants from peacetime to war activities. He offers "technical assistance to American business in bringing these patents into effective use," and offers to defend the licensees in any suits brought against them for alleged patent infringement. The proposed system also apparently contemplates the appropriation of patents belonging to nationals of countries occupied by the Axis Powers. But as to these, it is expressly stated that the interests of their owners would be safeguarded by making them royalty free only for the duration of the war and for 6 months after its close. After that, royalties "which are reasonable on a basis of prevailing commercial practice" will be charged on nonexclusive licenses to be issued for the life of the patent.

[1] John MacCormac in New York Times, Dec. 20, 1942, p. 20. They are said to number approximately 50,000. This number includes patents owned by nationals of Axis-occupied countries. Where pre-war exclusive and nonexclusive use licenses of actual enemy patents are already in existence, the royalties involved will be collected by the Custodian, but the licensee will have the option of canceling his exclusive contract and taking instead a standard, nonexclusive, royalty-free license. Licensees pay a basic $50 fee. White House press release Dec. 8, attaching Report of Custodian Dec. 7, 1942.

It thus appears that privately owned patents belonging to nationals of enemy States or of countries occupied by the enemy, are to be expropriated without compensation for the benefit of American industry, royalties being exacted only on those patents belonging to nationals of occupied states subsequent to the period beginning 6 months after the termination of the war.

If the proposed procedure is correctly understood, it looks as if private inventors and owners are to have their rights in patents confiscated. This goes further than the practice of the last war, in which the Alien Property Custodian sold to the Chemical Foundation some 4,500 patents, some valuable, at $50 each. That transaction, which Attorney General Stone, prosecuting the Chemical Foundation in the Circuit Court of Appeals, condemned as subversive of the future of the country,[2] was nevertheless sustained by the Supreme Court.[3] A vast body of literature was published after the war of 1917, pointing out the reciprocally destructive effects of the unlawful practice of confiscating private property and the ominous portents to the future of international investment, trade, cooperation, and peace which the practice necessarily implied.[4]

The policy with respect to foreign, particularly German patents, may have been partly motivated by the fact that the technological advance of the German chemical and drug industry has given the businessmen of that country a superior bargaining power, incidental to patent control, in concluding cartels and marketing agreements with foreign companies, a power, it has been said, coordinating in many instances with the economic policies of the German Government.[5] It is charged that patents have often been used to insure dependency on Germany for vital medicines, to block non-German research, to block newcomers in the field and to fix prices.[6]

[6] The Custodian announces that the "use [of the patents] in the furtherance of any monopoly or any similar exploitation contrary to the public interest" is to be prevented.

The question arises whether the protection of the American manufacturer and consumer against these abuses of the patent system could not be obtained without confiscation by a modification of the patent system, already under study, for example, possibly by compulsory licensing, by an obligatory public submission for approval by a Federal administrative bureau of any cartel and private licensing agreements, by limiting the scope of the monopolistic privileges necessarily attached to a patent.[7] Even short of such changes which the Seventy-eighth Congress may consider, it would seem that the advantages of American emancipation from foreign monopoly could be accomplished by compelling licensing with compensation, as contemplated by S. 2491, or by some means other than drastic nationalization, against which the United States has vigorously protested when undertaken by other countries.[8]

American statesmen throughout American history seem to have been aware of the disintegrating effects of confiscating enemy private property and have stoutly defended the rule of law which prohibited confiscation. Nothing more profound on this subject has been uttered than the statements of Alexander Hamilton in support of article 10 of the Jay treaty with Great Britain of 1794,[9] prohibiting the confiscation of private property. That the country as a whole is not committed to such violations of international law and economic good sense is indicated by the statement of Secretary Hull as late as May 27, 1935:

> Such action would not be in keeping with international practice and would undoubtedly subject this Government to severe criticism. Moreover, the confiscation of these private funds by this Government and their distribution to American nationals would react against the property interests (some very large) of American nationals in other countries. It would be an incentive to other governments to hold American private property to satisfy claims of their nationals against this Government and to pass upon such claims in their own way. It is important from my point of view, therefore, that the United States should not depart in any degree from its traditional attitude with respect to the sanctity of private property within our territory whether such property belongs to nationals of former enemy powers or to those of friendly powers. A departure from that policy and the taking over of such property, except for a public purpose and coupled with the assumption of liability to make just compensation, would be fraught with disastrous results.[10]

Citizens of the United States now have invested abroad some $11,000,000,000 in direct investments and $4,000,000,000 in indirect or portfolio investments. This country should therefore exert its influence to prevent the further corrosion of the institution of private property, since the United States and its citizens have more to lose by confiscation than any other country. If the safety of private property is to depend not on law but on the preponderance of force, there can be no end to the war system. It has often been said that the struggle to maintain elementary virtues is unceasing. The experience of Europe during the last decade lends support to the view that there never is any assurance of the permanence of social and legal advances. But in the face of the Secretary of State's repeated declarations that one of our aims is the "revitalizing of international law," it is hardly fitting that administrative officials of the United States should, wittingly or not, deliberately impair those institutions.

The implications of economic war do not appear to have been fully considered.[11] A war on private property has not since the eighteenth century been considered either legal or sensible, since it reciprocally undermines post-war relations. Faced with the desire and purpose not to aid the enemy, international law had reached the practical compromise of permitting, though not commanding a refusal to allow enemy nationals to derive benefits during war from their property abroad, but guaranteeing its safety against confiscation. If it did not have reciprocal advantages the institution would never have grown to such assumedly impregnable proportions. But with a general weakening of the respect for law manifest in recent times, no one can predict how much deterioration in established institutions will consume. If the Custodian's practice is confined as national policy—although Congress, which has exclusive power,[12] seems not to have authorized confiscation—that termination of economic war which Mr. Pasvolsky of the Department of State has asserted to be a condition of peace and progress[13] can hardly be realized.

The meaning of the last clause is unclear. The far-reaching character of this recommendation, which possibly includes all persons and firms on the blacklists, warrants consideration by internatio al lawyers. The extent to which it has been followed by legislation or administrative action it has not been possible to establish.

It is not believed that confiscation is authorized by the admittedly broad terms of section 301 of the First War Powers Act (55 Stat. 840): "* * * upon such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe such interest or property (of all aliens) shall be held, used, administered, liquidated, sold, or otherwise dealt with in the interest of and for the benefit of the United States, * * *." Executive Order 9095, establishing the Office of Alien Property Custodian, gives him ambiguous authority to vest any foreign property.

It must be said that there has been some disposition in the United States to deprecate and limit by statute the privileges attached to patents, including a demand for public recordation of sale and license agreements, invalidation of the patent when used unfairly to stifle competition or create an unlawful monopoly, if necessary by Government suit, restricting the pooling of patents by cross-licensing, limiting the grant of patents to major inventions or improvements, controlling price fixing and trade control, cutting down the period for pendency of patent and the period of protection, compulsory licensing under certain conditions where exploitation is long delayed, the invalidation of sales or licenses which restrict the extent, price, field, or area in which the patent may be used.[14] All these proposals are controversial. During wartime there has been no question that the Government could requisition patents or licenses thereof on payment of just compensation.[15] The custodian could have legalized his far-reaching proposal by providing for royalty compensation on the patents he licenses, the compensation to be held in trust for private owners. This would not have hampered the war effort and would lend support to the nonconfiscatory policy of the Department of State. Whether the Custodian's practice of freely licensing the patents in his trusteed custody will promote American industry remains to be seen. Compulsory licensing has not apparently proved a stimulus to industry in England, Canada, and elsewhere. But there is a question whether the United States Government should assume the obloquy[16] attached to confiscation for the benefit primarily of private industry. It would seem that the issue is so important that it should have been submitted to Congress for the exercise of its constitutional authority to deal with the subject after adequate deliberation.

PRODUCTION OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the Acting Governor of the State of Wisconsin has designated and proclaimed February 12, 1943, as Dairy Day in Wisconsin.

During the past year Wisconsin has had a record production of milk and manufactured dairy products in response to the Government's request for more food to supply the United Nations.

In Wisconsin our farmers have produced 14,500,000,000 pounds of milk, which is 12 percent of the national output and an all-time high for the State.

As is generally known, much of that record volume has been distributed among our allies in the form of cheese, dried whole milk, dried skim milk, and evaporated milk.

Consequently, it is most appropriate, particularly during wartime, that recognition be given to the Wisconsin dairy industry and its vital contribution to the food-for-victory program.

Mr. President, today we heard a notable address by an eminent Member of this body on the question of manpower. I have spoken many times on this floor on the same subject, and with special reference to what the lack of manpower is doing to the dairy industry. Wisconsin stands first in the production of cheese, casein, and malted milk; second in dried buttermilk, and third in butter.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the very brief proclamation of Walter S. Goodland, Acting Governor of Wisconsin, designating February 12, 1943, as Dairy Day in Wisconsin, together with a very fine analysis of the dairy situation by Matt Wallrich.

There being no objection, the proclamation and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PROCLAMATION

Record production of milk and manufactured dairy products was achieved in Wisconsin during the past year in answer to the Government's request for more food to supply the United Nations.

Responding to the call for increased production, Wisconsin farmers produced fourteen and one-half billion pounds of milk—12 percent of the national output and an all-time high for the State. A great deal of that record volume was distributed among our allies in the form of cheese, dried whole milk, dried skim milk, and evaporated milk. In this way a distinct contribution was made toward winning the war.

Through several decades Wisconsin farmers have been building the dairy industry of this State into the greatest enterprise of its kind in the world. Through specialization in dairy breeds, dairy herd improvement work, proper feeding, and other good farming practices they have made Wisconsin universally famous for its dairy cattle and dairy products.

Through the years the influence of the Wisconsin Dairymen's Association, an organization which will hold its seventy-first annual convention in Madison February 12, has been important in developing dairying to its present high levels of productiveness.

This meeting, therefore, provides a timely occasion for reminding the people of Wisconsin of the splendid job the dairy industry is doing in supplying food needed to win the war.

Now, therefore, I, Walter S. Goodland, Acting Governor of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby designate and proclaim February 12, 1943, as Dairy Day in Wisconsin and urge that the occasion be observed with fitting exercises in recognition of the Wisconsin dairy industry and its vital part in the food-for-victory program.

WALTER S. GOODLAND,
Acting Governor of Wisconsin.

THE DAIRY SITUATION, FEBRUARY 1, 1943

(By Matt Wallrich)

PRODUCTION

January production, despite the coldest weather in years, is showing a normal seasonal upward trend.

The impetus of higher farm prices in November and December is showing results. A partial check-up shows that cows are freshening earlier this year, which might partially explain lower November and December production.

BANG'S DISEASE

Agitation is developing to discontinue slaughter of productive cows during this milk shortage emergency.

Positive reactors have been immunized—several years of peak production still available.

Remedy: Government purchase; lease animals to supervised farms, perhaps under Farm Security Administration jurisdiction; vaccinate calves from those cows, and when production is adequate cancel lease and slaughter animals.

This would provide thousands of high-producing animals for small farmers to use as foundation stock for their herds.

Administrative burden practically nil.

ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION

During 1942 a hundred bulls in Wisconsin bred 50,000 cows, displacing 3,000 bulls which augmented the beef supply, and made room for 3,000 more dairy cows in overcrowded barns. Result: 18,000,000 pounds of additional milk, no extra feed or labor (University of Wisconsin release).

If the Government is definitely committed to a long-range program of rehabilitating the world, not only with food but with foundation dairy stock to replace slaughtered animals, now is the time to start.

Dairy feeds high protein, will be scarce. Labor is scarce. Barn room is limited.

Why not use a fractional part of the proposed subsidy to establish a country-wide system, on a county basis, of artificial breeding?

This would eliminate 3,000,000 useless herd sires; permit the feeding and care of 4,000,000 extra milk cows this year.

Let the Army loan 500 highly trained veterinarians to supervise the work; instead of keeping these trained technicians doing routine milk- and food-inspection work.

No herd under 10 cows could afford to keep a bull—and that is 80 percent of the dairy herds. In 5 years the boarder cow would be eliminated.

We have today 26,000,000 dairy cows; average milk production, 4,500 pounds per year; total production, 117,000,000,000 pounds per year; a 1,000-pound increase (Wisconsin average) equals 26,000,000,000 pounds additional milk; in all, 143,000,000,000 pounds per year.

This equals enough milk to take care of all requirements estimated for Army, Navy, lend-lease, and domestic consumption.

If 3,000,000 bulls were replaced by producing cows (5,000 pound average) an additional 15,000,000,000 pounds of milk would be available—no extra feed or labor.

Wisconsin made an enviable record in 1942, with the same productive acreage as in 1918.

| Milk production: | Pounds |
|---|---|
| 1918 | 8,000,000,000 |
| 1942 | 14,000,000,000 |

Over 15 percent of the Nation's production of milk marketed as whole milk comes from Wisconsin.

BUTTER

Production increasing rapidly.

Receipts at established markets not indicative. Local creameries and receivers are short-circuiting established channels.

The price ceiling regulation is not conducive to the continuance of the normal pattern.

Retail milk distributors, with high ceilings, are taking extra butter.

Butter is being sold locally—not in principal markets.

Freight to market is deducted on butter ceilings.

Freight to Plymouth is added on cheese ceilings.

Light cream order and curtailment of ice cream will definitely increase butter production. Requisition of 30 percent of the butter will overload the present cold-storage plants, as they are already loaded with pork, beef, cheese, poultry, etc.

When April, May, June, July production comes—remember D. P. M. A. in 1938.

CHEESE

Factories are still in a muddle on prices. Most of them are paying the old price, and promising the subsidy when they get it. Result: Chaos.

| | December cash price | Subsidy promise | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| | Cents | Cents | Cents |
| Factory A, Wisconsin | 59 | 10 | 69 |
| Factory B, Wisconsin | 62.7 | 10 | 72.7 |
| Factory C, Wisconsin | 65 | 11 | 76 |
| Factory D, Ohio | 2.30+35 | | [1] 2.65 |

[1] Per hundredweight.

The Office of Price Administration estimated that 27-cent cheese would develop a farm price of $2.45 per hundredweight—using the old rule of thumb, namely, 2.6 times twins. Two factors were disregarded—increased value of whey fat and sale of whey.

Theoretically, here's how it really works out:

Hundredweight of 3.5 milk equals 9.5 pounds of cheese; price per pound, 27 cents; gross cheese yield, 2.565 cents; value 0.3 pound of whey fat, 0.138 cent; total, 2.703; cost of making, 2 cents per pound, 0.19 cent; net price, whey returned, 2.513 cents equals 71.8 cents per pound of fat; value of whey sold, 0.08 cent; maximum return for milk, 2.593 cents equals 75 cents per pound of fat.

Southern and eastern factories will have a higher ceiling, and a correspondingly higher farm price—at least, during shortage period.

MILK POWDER

Commercial ceilings on spray and roller are still out of balance. No way to justify a 2-cent difference. Correction should be on the way, with a 1- or 1½-cent differential—no difference for brands.

Sixty-one million pounds of whole-milk powder produced in 1942; 100,000,000 pounds needed in 1943—to be divided about equally between Army and lend-lease.

No limit on spray skim for 1943.

April, May, and June will soon be here. If evaporated production and ice cream are curtailed, drying equipment for human food will be inadequate. Some encouragement should now be given to roller skim for animal food, and for casein during the flush period.

The dollar cost will be negligible; the impetus to continue production tremendous.

FLUID MILK

Food Distribution Order No. 11 makes the following mandatory; and we hope the industry cooperates:

(a) Elimination of pints and half-pints to homes.

(b) No more than two handlers to a wholesale stop.

(c) Bottle deposit.

(d) No return.

(e) No milk loaded without prior order.

NOTE.—(a), (b), and (d) will effect savings; (c) and (e) will probably increase costs.

In several markets many corrections have been made during the last year:

1. Special deliveries.
2. Every other day delivery.
3. Elimination of returns.
4. Combining wholesale and retail routes.
5. Reducing items.
6. Elimination of special deals.
7. Loading trucks to capacity.
8. Adding helpers to trucks.
9. Uniform bottle.
10. Zoning territories.

Wage scales of wholesale drivers must be adjusted. No justification for continuing the penalty contracts that permit drivers to earn $6,000 to $8,000 a year while other drivers who do harder work earn $3 000.

Restrictions on loads must be eliminated.

The teamsters' union is at the crossroads. Either it must realize that we are in a war and thuggery is out or municipal distribution will come in.

Without question, millions of dollars can be saved without increasing the price to the consumer decreasing the price to the farmer, or reducing the average weekly earnings of the driver; but the driver must be willing to give a full week's work in an intelligent way, and permit supervision by the guy who pays his check.

ICE CREAM

New distribution order No. 8 effective February 1.

Limits use of total milk solids to 65 percent of December 1, 1941, to November 30, 1942, production. Army and Navy business, etc., are not included.

This is not serious

| Production: | Gallons |
|---|---|
| 1942 | 435,000,000 |
| 1937 | 281,000,000 |
| 1936 | 243,000,000 |
| 1935 | 199,000,000 |
| 1934 | 180,000,000 |

Sixty-five percent of the 1942 production is 282,000,000 gallons, but with a reduction in fat and solids content and a shifting to sherbets and ices, manufacturers can probably exceed their 1940 business for domestic uses and, by utilizing Army and Navy contracts, can keep capacity equal to 1941.

Food and Drug Administration estimates a saving of 97,500,000 pounds of butter and 68,000 pounds of serum solids. Unless there is a price increase, a curtailment of Army and Navy business, and a butterfat limit, we think this estimate is too hopeful.

Failure to adjust price ceilings on ice cream, coupled with this curtailment and the inability to obtain spray powder, will cause smaller manufacturers to have tough sledding before the year is through.

Wisconsin's ranking by States in the dairy industry: First in dry skim milk, dry whole milk, dry whey powder, condensed and evaporated milk, cheese, casein, malted milk powder; second in dry buttermilk; third in butter.

In addition, Wisconsin furnished over half the milk for Chicago, the country's second largest milk market.

Industrial production for the war emergency has been turned over to those who have demonstrated their ability to produce.

Dairy products' shortage is crucial. Maybe Wisconsin could produce the "know how" if consulted.

SMATTERINGS

Lend-lease to December 31, 1942, had shipped $1,040,000,000 worth of food in 22 months.

By March 15, 1942 (the first 12 months), it had purchased $800,000,000 worth of food.

This means that our shipments to December 31, 1942, were made up of the $800,000,000 of purchases made before March 15, 1942, plus an additional $200,000,000 of food purchases made from March 15, 1942, to December 31, 1942.

Yet, last March we had a burdensome surplus of milk, cheese, roller powder, casein, and evaporated milk, and were asking for supporting floors on almost every commodity.

Today a demoralizing surplus has been converted into a rationed shortage.

Our production in 1942 exceeded any year in history and practically exceeded every estimate.

Where has it gone?

If it's in warehouses in this country, let's have the figures.

If it's in the housewife's cupboard, let's have those figures.

Publication of the figures would stop the hoarding either by the Government or by the consumer.

After all, the armed forces are not going to eat more than twice as much as they did in civilian life, and that would require only an additional 5 percent of production.

Lend-lease shipments have taken less than 3 percent of our annual production.

Then tell the consumers that they are overeating. Don't blame rationing on either lend-lease or the Army.

Give the American people the truth—they can take it.

Submitted by Watt Wallrich.

PREVENTION OF CERTAIN PRACTICES LEADING TO DENTAL DISORDERS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the public health by the prevention of certain practices leading to dental disorders; and to prevent the circumvention of certain State or Territorial laws regulating the practice of dentistry."

Mr. WHEELER. The purpose of the joint resolution is to amend a law which was enacted at the last session of the Congress in accordance with the intention of Congress at that time.

When the measure was reported from the Interstate Commerce Committee during the last session of Congress it was known as the dental bill. It was reported with the proposed amendment, but the printer overlooked the amendment and left it out of the bill. The report shows that it was in the bill, which was called up by unanimous consent. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who handled the bill on the floor, did not know that the amendment had been left out. It is the unanimous opinion of the committee and of everyone else interested in the bill that the amendment should have been in it. The only purpose of the amendment is to provide that the act shall not take effect until 6 months after the date of its enactment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I had occasion to investigate this matter, and I find that the only thing involved is the correction of a clerical error. The joint resolution expresses only the intention of Congress, and I ask that it be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the public health by the prevention of certain practices leading to dental disorders; and to prevent the circumvention of certain State or Territorial laws regulating the practice of dentistry" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That effective as of December 24, 1942, the act entitled "An act to protect the public health by the prevention of certain practices leading to dental disorders; and to prevent the circumvention of certain State or Territorial laws regulating the practice of dentistry," approved December 24, 1942, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 4 This act shall not be deemed to have taken effect until 6 months after the date of its enactment."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Idaho in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

J. Saxton Daniel, of Georgia, to be United States Attorney for the southern district of Georgia; and Carl J. Werner, of Illinois, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Illinois, vice William Ryan, deceased.

By Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

Hervey Allen, from the State of Florida, to be information specialist, at $4,600 per annum, in the Atlanta regional office of the War Manpower Commission;

Dr. Paul C. Barton, from the State of Illinois, to be assistant director, at $5,600 per annum, for the Procurement and Assignment Service of the Bureau of Placement in the Washington office of the War Manpower Commission;

Chester W. Hepler, from the State of Illinois, to be area director, at $5,600 per annum, in the Chicago area office of the War Manpower Commission;

William P. Edmunds, from the State of Ohio, to the position of area director, at $6,500 per annum, in the Cleveland area office of the War Manpower Commission;

Marion A. Gregg, from the State of Ohio, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Youngstown, Ohio, area office of the War Manpower Commission;

T. Hilliard Cox, from the State of Nebraska, to the position of program control technician, at $5,600 per annum, in the Kansas City, Mo., regional office of the War Manpower Commission;

William Parkinson, from the State of Nebraska, to be area director, at $4,600 per annum, in the Omaha area office of the War Manpower Commission; and Merriam H. Trytten, from the State of Pennsylvania, to be principal employment specialist (physics), at $5,600 per annum, in the Bureau of Training of the Washington office of the War Manpower Commission.

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Sundry officers for appointment or promotion in the Navy; and Sundry officers for promotion and several citizens and meritorious noncommissioned officers for appointment as second lieutenants, all in the Marine Corps.

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY—NOMINATION OF WILEY BLOUNT RUTLEDGE TO BE ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Wiley Blount Rutledge, of Iowa, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of explaining my reasons for the vote which I intend to cast opposing the confirmation of Mr. Rutledge to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Apparently it has been the custom of this body to confirm such nominations by the President of the United States when the nominees are found to be men of good character and members of the bar, unless they possess political philosophies or extreme economic views which are considered dangerous to the member voting. I cannot accept such tests as conclusive.

At the outset, let me state that I do not know Mr. Rutledge. I have no reason to believe him to be other than a man of uprightness, of honor, and of integrity.

The Constitution of the United States imposes a solemn duty on every United States Senator in the creation of a Supreme Court Judge. To my mind each Senator must accept the same responsibility as that assumed by the President himself whenever such a choice is made. I can hardly imagine a more important act in the United States Senate than casting a vote for the confirmation of a nominee for the high office of Associate Justice of our highest court. Every Judge now on that bench was placed there by this Senate. If any honest criticism is made of a single member of that Court then we must take our share of the blame because we placed him there.

We were reminded a few years ago that the Supreme Court must stand as the bulwark of justice in our land. It is the last hope for the protection from bias, from prejudice, and from passion in the enforcement of our sacred Bill of Rights. It is the same Court that so many Members of the Senate a few short years ago protested should not be "packed." Today the solemn duty rises upon us to put to proof the operation of our democracy, and take a courageous part in the performance of official duty. It would mean little by way of consistency if the Senate were to protest loudly any attempt made to change the fundamentals of this institution if it functions only in mild acquiescence when called upon to act.

This is not a matter of politics; it is not a matter of partisanship; it is not a matter involving personalities; it is not the exercise of privilege; it is the performance of a highly important duty to our country, to the people who have sent us here to stand guard. I do not believe that anyone should be appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States unless he has the widest practical experience, reputation, and renown, and has won his spurs at the bar, and fought his way up the ladder in the halls of justice in the Nation.

Second-best in production will not provide our soldiers with what they need in war. Second-best generals and admirals will not bring us victory and peace. Second-best justices or legal mediocrities will not insure justice in our land.

Among 135,000,000 inhabitants there are thousands of excellent lawyers in the country who have thus proven their outstanding ability to grace our Supreme Court. These men have earned the respect and confidence of the public through their right to eminence in our Nation, through sterling service as members of the bar. They know the problems of the people, not from reading books, but from actual experience and learning in their profession as advocates in actual practice at the bar.

These times are too solemn to permit a disregard of their abilities, and to place upon the highest court a man who, so far as I can ascertain, never practiced law inside a courtroom or so far as I know, seldom ever visited one until he came to take a seat on the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Before that, his contribution in any litigation has remained most obscure. I read his record as disclosed in the Congressional Directory:

Wiley Rutledge, associate justice; born in Cloverport, Ky., July 20, 1894; attended Maryville College (Tenn.); University of Wisconsin, A. B., 1914; Indiana University School of Law; University of Colorado, LL. B., 1922; LL. D., 1940; taught in high schools, Bloomington and Connersville, Ind., Albuquerque, N. Mex., and Boulder, Colo., 1915–22; associated with the law firm of Goss, Kimbrough & Hutchinson, Boulder, Colo., 1922–24; member of law faculties, University of Colorado, 1924–26; Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., 1926–35; the State University of Iowa, 1935–39; also dean, School of Law, Washington University, 1930–35; College of Law, the State University of Iowa, 1935–39; nominated associate justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia by President Roosevelt and confirmed by the Senate in April 1939; assumed duties May 2, 1939; member National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, from Missouri, 1931–35; from Iowa, 1936–.

Mr. President, it will be noticed that in the biography there is not one word to show that he ever practiced law at any time except from 1922 to 1924, when he says he was associated with the law firm of Goss, Kimbrough & Hutchinson, in Boulder, Colo. The record shows that at that time he was 28 years of age. It does not show whether he was a clerk or simply a stenographer. So far as the record shows, aside from that, he never practiced law 1 day anywhere in the country.

For what reason he was chosen to sit upon the circuit court, I am at a loss to understand, unless it was that he came last from Iowa City, the home of Harry Hopkins. Could that be the reason for his selection? I want to register an emphatic "no" to such a choice. I have never been able to accept the philosophy of government expounded by Mr. Hopkins; and if it be true that Mr. Rutledge is his alter ego on the bench, I must, in good conscience, say that I could find no better reason for disqualification.

The distinguished majority leader, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], announced to the press a few days ago that my vote would be the only one cast against this nominee. Surely my honorable colleague is not oracular. I know not where he gets his information or authority to speak for all 95 of the other Senators on this important subject. I have not noticed that he has claimed such power in other matters before the Senate up to now. Indeed, I was not sure that he could, with any reliability, even answer beforehand for the members of his own party in the Senate.

I was one of those who felt that it would not have been against the Nation's interest if the senior Senator from Kentucky himself had been named to this judicial position at this time. I congratulate him on his sportsmanship in his prompt acquiescence in the nomination and his spirited sponsorship in casting in the press 95 votes in a lump in favor of this nomination.

I should prefer to accept the foregoing conclusion rather than to believe that a political debt was being paid to Mr. Hopkins for past favors in Kentucky in 1938, when the advent of the junior Senator from Kentucky was momentarily delayed. Or perhaps neither was the reason. Perhaps it was impatience to get on with the important things in this Nation, and not to be bothered by debates or lengthy considerations on a post of the caliber of a position on our Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I want the RECORD to show my protest. Even with the great job we have undertaken in the four corners of the world, it is still of the highest importance to neglect no important, vital job to preserve our democracy at home.

I challenge the wisdom of the choice of this inexperienced member of the bar; I say that he is one of those who have failed to prove their worth at the bar at all, or their capacity and ability to occupy one of these precious nine positions.

The Court may be called upon to decide momentous issues upon which the preservation of our form of government itself may depend. None but the most highly qualified, Mr. President, should receive our approval.

Mistakes may occur in the selection of any Member of Congress or in the selection of a President. Such mistakes can be remedied in a space of time by the people, but the Supreme Court Justices are chosen virtually for life. Therefore, unless the nominee has already disclosed his capacity and his outstanding ability I feel that I should fail in my duty were I to vote a blind approval.

I believe we should exercise an affirmative as well as a negative test, and that we should do so as well as expect the Chief Executive to do so.

Searching the record objectively, and utterly without regard to personalities, I cannot find therein justification for advising and consenting to this nomination.

I have had called to my attention an important receivership matter wherein I believe the nominee failed to apply the law either equitably or accurately. I am sure that he attempted to do so, but I find evidence of what seems to me to be lack of care and inaccuracies in a matter which touched thousands of insurance-policy holders who had suffered loss of millions of dollars in premiums paid, without one cent of recovery over a period of 12 years. Mr. Rutledge did not appoint the receiver. That had been done years before, and much water had gone over the dam. But he was one of three who were called upon to bring a halt to the waste of the funds, and he held the law to decree otherwise.

I think if he had had more practical experience as a member of the bar he would not have fallen into that error. His findings meant much to a group who in order to protect their dependents had parted with their savings. They do not feel that their rights received fair consideration, and from my review neither do I. In the single instance in which Mr. Rutledge's record has come before me, I do not feel he has exhibited either learning or experience fitting him for this promotion.

Mr. President, we have a fair abundance of attorneys general now serving this country as justices of our highest court. The Court is not without a professor or two already. I say to my colleagues here, whom I honor and respect, I am sorry that my conscience will not permit me to vote for confirmation in this important instance.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it may be appropriate at this point for me to say just a word or two about the action of the Committee on the Judiciary in filing its favorable report upon the nomination. Justice Rutledge was appointed to the court of appeals in April of 1939. His nomination at that time was referred to a subcommittee consisting of the then Senator from Delaware, Mr. Hughes, as chairman, the then Senator from Utah, Mr. King, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the then Senator from Nebraska, Mr. Norris, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. The record shows that that committee, having met to consider the nomination, filed a favorable report with the Committee on the Judiciary, that thereupon a favorable report was filed with the Senate, and the nomination was confirmed.

In April 1939 Senator King, who at that time was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, after the nomination had been confirmed, rose to say that if there had been a yea-and-nay vote he would have voted in the negative. It is my understanding, though he did not so state in the Senate at that time, that the principal consideration which moved him was that, in his opinion, there should be a selection to the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia from the bar of the District. There may have been also some question, Mr. President, with respect to the nominee concerning the now famous "court expansion legislation" proposed in 1937; but the committee was satisfied that there was nothing in the record of Mr. Rutledge which would justify withholding confirmation of the nomination.

When the nomination now before the Senate was sent here and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, a subcommittee was appointed, consisting of the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is now on the floor, our able colleague from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and myself. This subcommittee went very carefully into the matter. Report was made to the full committee a week ago today, and the report of the committee recommending the confirmation was approved by the Judiciary Committee without a negative vote. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and two or three others withheld their votes at the time.

I wish to say, Mr. President, speaking for myself—and I have before me all the decisions of the court of appeals in which Justice Rutledge participated—that we were satisfied from an examination of his record as a member of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, that the favorable report which was made by the Judiciary Committee in 1939 and the action of the Senate confirming his nomination at that time have been wholly justified by the record which Justice Rutledge has made.

He has not yet reached the forty-ninth anniversary of his birth, Mr. President. He is, therefore, a young man going upon the Supreme Court A reading of the opinions submitted by him demonstrates, I think, that he has the judicial capacity in a marked degree. It was our feeling that he is a judge who not only is able to write a lucid opinion, one which can readily be understood, but that he is capable of couching opinions of the Court in language which would grace the reports of any court.

Your committee, Mr. President, felt that the record of this man, both as a citizen and as a judge, warranted the nomination and that the Supreme Court would profit by his elevation to that bench.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, several days ago I placed in the RECORD an excerpt from a Tennessee newspaper which embodied a short story of the Rutledge family, with particular reference to the father of Justice Rutledge, whose nomination is now before the Senate. I am surprised that there should be any objection to the nomination of Justice Rutledge as a member of the Supreme Court. His background, with which I am very familiar, is such that it could not fail to produce a man whose ideas of citizenship are thoroughly American and whose ability and courage may not be questioned. On every score Justice Rutledge is quite capable of filling this position or almost any other position to which he might aspire.

I have not known Justice Rutledge intimately in recent years, but he and I were boys together, so to speak, in Tennessee. His father was a minister in the Baptist Church and it was my privilege to hear him preach. The old gentleman, who is in his early eighties, lives today in Cleveland, Tenn.

Wiley Rutledge was educated principally in Tennessee. He attended Maryville College at Maryville, Tenn., a denominational institution which, incidentally, is owned and operated by the Presbyterian Church. His early life in the home of his father, who was a minister in the country section where I lived in Tennessee, was surrounded by the finest kind of influences. As to his ability, there can be no question. I have not kept in close touch with him in recent years, but I do know, by reputation, some of the work he has done in the Middle West, where he lived for several years.

I think that the decision of the Judiciary Committee was properly reached and that the committee were justified in reaching the conclusions they did. I talked to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and other members of the committee at the time the nomination of Justice Rutledge was being considered. I hope the Senate will confirm his nomination. He is a fine character and will reflect credit on the Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination? [Putting the question.]

The nomination was confirmed.

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed to state the other nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations under the War Manpower Commission.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to know what committee reported the nominations of officials of the War Manpower Commission?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the nominations were reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to know whether any member of the Military Affairs Committee is present and prepared to indicate the full extent of the authorization which seems to be sketched by this rather amazing list of definitions of officers. I refer to—

A program control technician, at $5,600 per annum, San Francisco regional office. I presume there is to be a similar officer in every regional office.

I refer to a so-called head employment specialist, at $6,500 per annum, Bureau of Training, Washington Office.

I refer to a senior training specialist, at $4,600 per annum, San Francisco area office.

I refer to a labor utilization analyst, at $6,500 per annum, Washington regional office.

I refer to a field supervisor, at $5,600 per annum, Boston regional office, and to other officers of similar title and salary, as designated by ditto marks.

I refer to a head labor utilization analyst, at $6,500 per annum, Minneapolis regional office;

Then, to a senior labor utilization analyst at $4,600 per annum, Minneapolis regional office;

Then, to an assistant labor utilization analyst (trainee), at $4,600 per annum, Washington regional office;

Then, to an area director at $4,600 per annum, Syracuse area office;

Then, to a senior agricultural employment specialist, at $4,600 per annum, Minneapolis regional office;

Then, to another area director in the Albany area, and another field supervisor in the Washington regional office.

Mr. President, before we start to confirm nominees for positions of this character, I, for one, should like a statement from the Senate Military Affairs Committee as to the extent of this total personnel program which we are about to confront.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that hearings were had by the Committee on Military Affairs, probably under the direction of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who is unavoidably absent at this time.

I agree with the Senator that a full explanation should be made as to each of these nominations, and for that reason, if the Senator will permit me, I shall ask that they go over until Thursday, so that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] may give us full information about the matter. I agree entirely with the Senator that the Senate should have the information concerning each nomination.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his statement. I think the information needs to apply not only to the type of positions involved, but I should also like to know on what basis these men are chosen. For example, I should like to know how a nomination like that of Louis Bloch, of California, gets on anyone's list, and the explanation generally should be complete. If the Senator's request that the nominations go over is agreeable to the Senate, that is all I have to say at the moment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I venture to make a brief statement, because it was upon my motion that the War Manpower Commission, under Governor McNutt, was invited to come before the Military Affairs Committee to discuss precisely the type of questions which the Senator from Michigan has just raised.

I called attention to the various categories of nominees and the titles given to these various persons. I think it only fair to say that Governor McNutt made a very satisfactory presentation to the committee. He was before us for several hours, and I doubt whether there was any member of the committee who did not examine him. As I recall now, the Governor's testimony was to the effect that most of these persons whose names appear as nominees have been taken from other agencies under Governor McNutt. For example, several of them had already been employed in the United States Employment Service, and had some sort of civil-service status. The Governor stated that in many instances the Commission was having a great deal of difficulty in obtaining the character of persons, with the training and background necessary, for the very exacting duties of mobilizing our manpower. For instance, effort is made by the War Manpower Commission to recruit some of these officials from the personnel branches of large corporations, where men have had long experience in building up personnel organizations of one kind or another.

I was particularly impressed by the testimony of the Governor that in many instances men were on the rolls of the War Manpower Commission or the employment service at smaller salaries than they are able to get and which have been offered to them in private employment. The Governor gave several instances. Assurance was given to us that all these positions are within the divisions of the Classification Act as passed by the Congress.

Mr. President, having been the one who asked that Governor McNutt appear, I think it may be important that I give the testimony that I was satisfied the War Manpower Commission made a very careful attempt to select only competent people for these positions. Of course, we know that no task now before any Government agency is greater than the task of mobilizing our manpower, and for that reason the committee has been endeavoring, I think I can say with propriety, to expedite the confirmation of these officials, so that the charge cannot be made that the Senate is in any way delaying confirmation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan permit me to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The question I wish to ask is whether the testimony was taken down and printed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It has not been printed; it is available in the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In typewritten form?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said these nominations were all taken from within the classified service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would not say all, but many of them were; but with respect to the particular names now before the Senate I cannot say.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was wondering whether the Senator understood that the Manpower Commission, making these appointments, took the names largely or altogether from the civil-service lists.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They all passed through the civil service in a way. They do not acquire a civil-service status.

Mr. BARKLEY. They do not have to take a competitive examination——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order to get on an eligible list, as I understand, although in some way they do come under the civil-service requirement that they must be passed upon by the Civil Service Commission. They must "clear" the Commission, as I understand the expression is. I suppose that in those cases the age limits which would apply to any other civil-service employees apply to them?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my understanding that that is the case. I may say that at the outset of the war, in an appropriation bill which was approved by the Committees on Appropriations and passed by the Congress, an appropriation of $100,000,000 was made for emergency expenditures by the President, and he was authorized by that appropriation act to make personnel selections without regard to the civil-service law. It is my understanding that, notwithstanding that provision, instructions have gone forward to all the agencies which are exercising the power granted to clear all these nominees through the Civil Service Commission. The Civil Service Commission goes over the background of the nominees, and makes certifications.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there may be a perfectly satisfactory explanation with respect to each of these nominees. I make no pretense to the contrary. I merely find myself challenged by the nature of the definitions of these positions and the rather substantial salaries attaching to each, and the implication, obviously, that this is only a very small preview of a very extensive list, to implement the entire country, which is to follow. Before we start confirming any of the nominees, I think a comprehensive statement from the Committee on Military Affairs is due the members of the Senate, so that they may reach an authenticated judgment. I certainly do not wish to hold up the work of the War Manpower Commission for a single instant, because Heaven knows it has held up its own work so many months beyond sufferance that there should not be any further interference. There will be none so far as I am concerned, in the presence of proper explanation, when the proper time comes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I note today that opposite the name of each person pending before the Senate for confirmation is a statement of the salary the person is to receive, and some description of the duties he is to perform.

In the case of O. P. A. and various other agencies of the Government, the right of confirmation was waived by the Senate, but even where the right of confirmation is retained it seems to me that we should in the future insist that the salary which a person who is to be confirmed by the Senate is to receive should be stated, as well as some description of the duties he is to perform.

I regret very much that the right of confirmation was waived by the Senate when that question was before us in connection with some bills which have heretofore been enacted. I am hopeful that hereafter the Senate will insist on its right of confirmation, and, if it be necessary, I should like to propose a rule that as to all confirmations, outside the judiciary, in which cases the salaries are fixed by law, and in the case of nominations in the Army and the Navy, and of postmasters, the salaries of nominees to be confirmed by the Senate, with a description of the duties they are to perform, be stated for the Executive Calendar.

In my opinion, heretofore a great many people have gotten into the Government service at particularly high salaries when, if we had had before us a statement of the salaries and a description of the offices, we might have been more efficiency-minded in giving our consent to the nominations.

I shall ask our leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], together with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the minority leader, to make provision that in the future, in such manner as may be expeditious we shall have a statement of the salary and a description of the duties of each nominee brought before us.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. The Senator from Maryland will remember that time and again in the Appropriations Committee the Senate has attached to bills the requirement that persons receiving a certain amount of salary or over must be confirmed on the basis on which the Senator is now speaking, and that such requirement has been consistently omitted every time there has been a conference on it with the House.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall yield to the Senator from Tennessee in a moment. What the Senator from Missouri has just said is true. That is the reason I feel the Senate ought to reassert itself. It ought not only to pass on the individual, but it ought to know the salary he is to receive, and it ought to know what duties he is to perform.

Mr. TRUMAN. We must then have conferees on the part of the Senate who will stand up for the position taken by the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have the opinion, which is based on some substantial information, that where there is no restriction on salaries, where the amounts of the salaries are not stated, and where the duties of the offices are not defined, executives are inclined to write a few extra naughts at the end of the salary figures, whereas if the furnishing of that information were a part of the confirmation procedure I believe it would conduce to economy throughout the Government, and likewise conduce to a reduction in the number of personnel, because the appointees would have to pass the scrutiny of the Senate.

I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] has said, the Appropriations Committee of the Senate has attached riders to many of the appropriation bills, indeed to practically all of them, providing for Senate confirmation of all appointees receiving a salary of a certain sum or over. The House has heretofore objected to such riders but as to the bill providing appropriations for the War Manpower Commission the House waived its objections, and therefore the provision for confirmation is the law.

However, I wish to say to the Senator and to the Senate that at the beginning of the present session of Congress I introduced a bill which provides that nominations of appointees receiving salaries of $4,500 or more shall be confirmed by the Senate, just as the present nominations are being confirmed, and I wish to say that that bill went to the Committee on the Judiciary. The chairman of that committee very promptly appointed a subcommittee, which has the matter in charge, and we are hoping to receive a favorable report on that bill within the next few days.

I am glad the Senator takes the position he does, and I know he will be in favor of that bill, because it applies to all employees who receive salaries in excess of a certain amount. If the Senate will adopt the bill I am quite sure, from what I have heard, that the House will agree to it, and, in my judgment, it is a very proper measure.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Governors of all States, the members of the legislatures of all States, the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, together with the President are accountable to the people at regular intervals for their stewardship. That is the whole lesson of democracy. When we allow to grow up a bureaucracy which holds office for a long period of time, without some termination and reaccountability to its appointing and confirming source, in my judgment we destroy democracy, because we have then a group of persons who have very little accountability in a Government so large as this, and who can pretty well by directive, or by order or regulation or by interpretation, not only destroy acts of Congress in some instances, but themselves write laws which Congress itself has never passed.

Mr. President, it has always seemed to me to be a weakness in our democratic system that persons who hold appointive office do not in the same way as those who hold elective office come up from time to time for reappointment. Anyone who advocates such procedure, as does the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], is liable to the charge that he does so for political purposes; forsooth that the Senator wants to control the patronage in his own State, forsooth that he wants to punish someone who did not vote right in the last election, or something of that sort. Men being human, there may be a small degree of accuracy in that rather sweeping charge. But, on the other hand, I think there are many Senators, in fact the great majority of them, if not all, who have a higher aim than the mere personal situation. I believe I can speak for one who does not ask for any patronage, who does not want any patronage of any kind or description at all because I find that I am much better off without it than with it. One of the great good fortunes that came to me was to be placed in that situation.

Mr. President, I believe that the only way we can control bureaucracy is to compel it to account occasionally to somebody in which there will be a review made of its functions, or its abuses of power, and also its good works, so Senators can reach an opinion as to whether or not the sum total of governmental progress is being achieved.

Mr. President, that leads to this point: The 15th of March is not far off. The 15th of March is going to cause a great deal of pain throughout this country. There are many persons who have been talking about taxes who, when they write the checks, will find that they have grossly underestimated the actual situation. I will say to my friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that after the 15th of next March I believe it will not be necessary to try to get people to be more economy-minded. I believe that is going to be a natural consequence. I believe it will be spontaneous and instantaneous with the 15th of next March, because the war makes it necessary to levy high taxes. But coincidental with the writing of the checks for the first installment of 1942 income tax the people will insist that every measure of economy consistent with achieving full efficiency be taken by this body.

In that connection it is necessary that we have the names, the salaries, and the description of the offices of those persons who are going to administer this great bureaucracy. Such information will conduce to efficiency and economy in government. For that reason, providing that the civil service is protected in the measure, I shall be glad to do what little I can to help the Senator from Tennessee have his bill enacted into law.

Mr. President, I rose primarily at this time, however, for the purpose of asking the leaders if they will not request in any way they deem appropriate—or if it cannot be done, let us have a rule to that effect—that information be furnished the Senate in the future as to salary and the duties of the office of each person who may be passed upon for confirmation by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KILGORE. I simply wish to make one point in line with what the Senator from Maryland has been saying. When the nominations now before the Senate were being considered in committeee a fact was brought out, which I think should be of interest to every Member of the Senate as well as to all our people. Only a very small group in the War Manpower Commission is subject to confirmation. We make other appropriations in connection with which we do not provide for confirmation of appointees. We make appropriations for regional directors without touching the question of passing on the salaries and confirming those receiving certain salaries. The Senate does not confirm the appointment of persons to the War Production Board who receive a certain salary or more. The group now before us for consideration is simply a small group. I wish to say in fairness that in one sense of the word that little group is being penalized by having to be confirmed by the Senate. Yet when we fail to act, or voluntarily relinquish the right to confirm appointments to these positions, we take the responsibility for the actions of heads of all the bureaus when they make the appointments and fix the salaries. I think we waive our rights in that connection either actively or by reason of inactivity.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from West Virginia. I hope that hereafter, when confirmation of appointments or reappointments is required, there shall be placed on the Executive Calendar along with the name of the appointee the amount of salary he shall receive, and in brief the duty he is to perform.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think it is rather fortunate that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] have raised this question, because I have no doubt that when the reports about this session today are given to the country most of them will contain the charge that the Senate now is talking about confirmation because of a desire to assert some sort of partisan political control over patronage. It is the favorite device of those who want to make these appointments without any public scrutiny being made of them to accuse the Senate of being motivated solely by the desire to obtain political appointments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know the Senator from Michigan is going to say what I was about to say, but I yield to him.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was going to say that inasmuch as I started this argument, and inasmuch as I could not receive any patronage even if I wanted it—and I would not want it if I could—at least the initiation of the discussion is not rooted at the point which the Senator fears the ountry may suspect.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad the Senator has made that comment. I was about to point out that the Senate a few moments ago acted upon a nomination to the Supreme Court of the United States and by what was almost a unanimous vote confirmed the nomination of Justice Rutledge to the Supreme Court. The only vote that was cast against him was cast by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] upon grounds which were completely satisfactory to him. His negative vote was not cast upon any partisan ground or upon any personal ground.

What the critics of senatorial confirmation fail to convey to the public is, first of all, that it is the constitutional duty of the Senate to confirm appointments to the civil branch of the Government, unless Congress, by law, makes other provision.

They also overlook the fact that probably more than 95 percent of all the nominations sent to the Senate are confirmed without any partisan division, without any political division, and without any talk about patronage.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure that the Senator from Tennessee rises to call attention to the provision in the Constitution relating to the point which I have discussed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I rise for that purpose. I think it cannot be too greatly stressed, and I desire to read it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The able Senator from Tennessee deprives me of the privilege of reading it, but I shall be glad to have it read.

Mr. McKELLAR. Among the powers of the President, as defined in the Constitution, are the following:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, * * * and he shall nominate, and * * * shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

As a matter of fact at the present time there is no law providing for the appointment of such officers. The laws which are enacted for the purpose of establishing various activities do not provide that the power to appoint shall be in the President, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. Yet, we go on tamely without any action being taken. Many persons are being employed against some of whom scandalous charges have been made. Certainly the Congress ought to assert itself and see to it that the provision of the Constitution relating to appointments is faithfully carried out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the Constitution I notice the words, "with the advice and consent of the Senate." Does the Senator believe that the word "advice" is necessary? Is it obsolete, or has it any real meaning in present-day parlance? If so, what is the meaning of the word?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I believe that the meaning of the phrase "With the advice and consent of the Senate" was the subject of a discussion during the administration of George Washington. It was then decided that the word "advice" meant very little. The use of it is a formality. The principal word is "consent." During all the years since the adoption of the Constitution the Senate has been consenting to the appointment of persons in the civil arm of the Government without exercising the scrutiny which the framers of the Constitution felt should be centered upon every nominee for office in the United States Government.

As the Senator from Tennessee has very well pointed out, this provision of the Constitution is specific. No one can misunderstand it. The appointment of members of the Supreme Court of the United States could not be made under the Constitution without the concurrence of the Senate. It is frequently rather amusing to note that those who are most eloquent in condemning the Senate as a seeker of patronage when appointments to the bureaucracy are concerned are the very ones who call upon the Senate to exercise its constitutional power when nominations which do not meet their approval are made to the courts or to the diplomatic corps.

I feel that perhaps such power should be exercised in the public interest when persons are being selected for the civil arm of the Government.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. It is not my desire to prolong the debate. However, I take it the Senator does not mean that all appointments shall come to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is not my meaning.

Mr. McNARY. It has been held by the Supreme Court that the provision to which reference has been made affects officers as distinguished from employees.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. That is the reason for the provision in the pending bill. As the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has said, we are not foregoing any rights. We are exercising all the rights conferred on us by the Constitution. However, we do have a right in a statute further to extend the list of employees who must be confirmed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I believe the distinguished Senator from Oregon has reversed the order of procedure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Exactly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Constitution contains the following phraseology——

Mr. McNARY. I have it before me, and I have read it many times.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know the Senator has read it, but I should like to read it, if he has no objection, for the benefit of those who may perchance read the RECORD. After reciting that the advice and consent of the Senate must be obtained for the appointment of Ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and Judges of the Supreme Court, the Constitution continues—> and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in heads of departments.

Therefore the question arises: Has the Congress, by any act, deprived the Senate of the right to confirm the appointment of officers in the War Manpower Commission, the War Production Board, the O. P. A. or any other war agencies?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is precisely my view. I have already stated that under the Constitution we do not include employees with officers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. However, we do have the right, within the Constitution, to expand and extend that list to include employees. We undertake to do so under the terms of the bill to which reference has been made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The thoughts of the able Senator from Oregon and my own are exactly the same; but my point is that the question is not with respect to our right to expand the list. We have the right and duty to confirm all officers unless, by act of Congress, we narrow it, because no law is greater than the Constitution.

Mr. McNARY. We do not expand the right. The right is given to us by the Constitution. I say that we have the right to expand the number of those who come within the folds of our confirmation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I do not believe there is any disagreement concerning the Constitution and the interpretation of it by the Supreme Court. However, as a matter of policy, is it the view of the able Senator from Wyoming that we should assume the responsibility of passing upon the qualifications of every appointee in the capacity of an employee of the Government?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all.

Mr. McNARY. Does the able Senator from Wyoming believe that we should pass upon those receiving salaries in excess of $4,500?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I believe we should pass upon some of them, but not necessarily all of them.

Mr. McNARY. The question which occurs to me is this: If we are to assume the obligation of passing upon every employee of the Government receiving more than $4,500, we should have full and complete data before us affecting the qualifications for each particular office and the necessity for the employment, such as the data the able Senator from Michigan has indicated. However, I say to the Senator from Wyoming that that is too large a responsibility for me to assume.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I believe that what the Senator has said may be the view of a great many Members of the Senate. That is a point which will undoubtedly be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary when the bill of the Senator from Tennessee is under consideration; but, as I understand, that is not what is being discussed at the moment.

The problem which we are now discussing is the extent of the senatorial power and duty laid down in the Constitution, whether or not it has been modified, and if so, in what manner. Of course, it was modified with respect to the great civil establishment by the civil-service law, and Congress provided a way by which appointment without term could be made, and no salary limit was specified. Personally, I think that was probably a very wise rule, and I should hesitate to upset the civil service. However, it is another question to discuss the right and duty of the Senate, and the question of patronage. Through the civil-service law the Congress had divested itself with respect to appointments in the departments. Whether it has done so with respect to the war agencies is a question which will have to be passed upon.

A moment ago I cited one of the appropriation acts. It is Public Law 28 of the Seventy-seventh Congress. It contains the following provision:

> To enable the President, through appropriate agencies of the Government, to provide for emergencies affecting the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith, and to make all necessary expenditures incident thereto for any purpose for which the Congress has previously made appropriation or authorization and without regard to the provisions of law regulating the expenditure of Government funds for the employment of persons in the Government service, such as section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and the civil-service and classification laws; and any waiver hereunder of the provisions of any law regulating such expenditure or such employment shall not be exercised by any agency unless the allocation to such agency or subsequent action of the President in connection therewith permits any such waiver to be availed of; $100,000,000.

Mr. President, that is the only provision of law which I have been able to find dealing with the subject; but, obviously, it waives only the restrictions which have been imposed by law. It does not and cannot waive the constitutional right and duty of the Senate in the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely correct about that point; and, furthermore, so far as I have been able to ascertain, the acts creating other agencies do not go to the same extent as does the $100,000,000 appropriation bill. So a tremendous number of officers and employees of the Government are being employed and paid without any law providing for the method of their employment, and in the list of such persons are to be found the names of many officers whose appointments really should receive approval by means of the Senate's advice and consent. The Senator will recall that the Constitution provides that the President shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint. He may initiate the appointment, but the appointment cannot be made until the Senate approves it. We should make perfectly clear to just what officers the provision applies, and that is the purpose of the bill I have introduced.

So far as the patronage question is concerned, it is a matter of utterly no consequence to me. I care nothing in the world about any patronage connected with it. The truth of the matter is that, so far as I know, everyone in my State is busy enough and is not in need of appointments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may respond for a moment to the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], while I do not care to go into a discussion of the constitutional provisions as to confirmation, let me say that I think the determination of the matter is largely left to Congress. Insofar as the nomination and appointment of inferior officers are concerned, I know of no law defining inferior officers. I suppose that when the Constitution refers to vesting the appointment of inferior officers in the courts of law it might be interpreted to mean that we could pass a law authorizing the Federal courts to pass upon the appointment of inferior officers—that is, to say, marshals, and so forth—if we chose to do so. I supose that such cases would involve the appointment of inferior officers whom the courts could appoint. However, that is not the point I wish to discuss.

I suppose the reason why the Executive Calendar carries the salary for each nominee in the Manpower Commission is that in the appropriation bill for the Commission provision is made that all nominations to positions carrying salaries of $4,600 or more shall be confirmed by the Senate. Therefore, in order to make it perfectly plain that the nomination should be confirmed by the Senate, the salary is listed. I think it is a good practice. I do not know that it would require any rule. Of course, the matter comes about because in sending the nominations to the Senate, which referred them to the Committee on Military Affairs, I think the President himself in his message fixed the salary which each of the appointees is to receive, and the message indicated that all the positions were above the $4,500-salary limitation which we fixed; so that we should not have to inquire about that point in order to determine whether Senate confirmation of the nomination would be required.

However, I think the practice is a good one. I think it involves a matter of information for the Senate, and so far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to cooperate in having such information furnished in every case. It may be that the information would have to be obtained by the department concerned, after which the President could have the information given to the Senate in his message transmitting the nomination, so that it would be here, available to us. I think it not only wise but proper that the Senate should have the information.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator if he does not agree that some additional information might be furnished. I like the partially adequate way in which the matter is being handled on the Executive Calendar today; but I should suggest that the name of the position, perhaps something about the proposed duties of the office, and a very short statement as to the appointee might well be provided there for the information of the Senate. The Senate would pass on the appointments very promptly if such information were given it at the time when the nominations were sent to it. The President frequently does so of his own motion; and it seems to me that it would be a very fine thing to have it done in all cases, especially in connection with nominations for positions in new agencies which it is proposed to create.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to point out to the Senator that, as he well knows, it has been the policy of the Department of State in nominating persons for the Diplomatic and Consular Service to send to Senators a biographical sketch of the individual, together with a statement of his diplomatic experience, if any.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, to the Senators from the State of residence of the nominee; is that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; to Senators from the State of residence of the nominee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That has been, in part, one way of carrying out the suggestion which I made and upon which the Senator from Tennessee has now enlarged. I think it would be very wholesome if we had a brief description of the duties to be performed by the nominee. In my judgment, that would be information to show whether the salary was commensurate—too large or too small, as the case might be. Without having the duties outlined in connection with a statement of the salary we should not know what the appointee would have to do if we confirmed his nomination.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, Mr. President, we all understand the form in which the nominations come to the Senate. They come here on a sheet on which are listed the name of the nominee and the position to which he has been nominated. It would be helpful if all departments would convey in a brief letter to Senators from the State of residence of the nominee the information which the State Department now conveys to us in the case of Consular and Diplomatic Service nominations. In the case of the State Department most of the nominations are for routine promotions and appointments. In respect to a general practice, it would not make any difference whether the promotions or appointments were routine; but certainly I am in sympathy with any movement or practice which may be initiated which would give the Senate, in cases in which it has to confirm nominations, all the information it needs in order to pass upon the nominations intelligently.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. All nominations are referred to committees; and it would be a very simple matter for the committee concerned to ascertain the information which has been referred to, and to present it to the Senate at the time when the nomination is reported by the committee to the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In that way we could handle the matter very easily.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to say that even when a nomination is transmitted by the President without a statement of such information, the committee itself can obtain it and can have it printed in the Executive Calendar in the column opposite the nominee's name, so as to give the Senate full information about him.

Mr. President, let me say that I understand that the nominations under the Manpower Commission have been passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not as yet.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have asked that they go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. I make the request purely on the ground that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who is chairman of the subcommittee, is not present and cannot give us the information we desire to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations under the Manpower Commission will be passed over.

The clerk will proceed to state the remaining nominations on the calendar.

THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that all nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, February 11, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Good Shepherd of our souls, give us brave and happy hearts, conscious of Thy merciful direction when the day is over. We are aware, blessed Lord, that trial and difficulty are with us these times, yet we would not bemoan our duty but regard it as a privileged responsibility. Let our service be free and sincere that we may enter sympathetically into the hearts and woes of men, ever identifying ourselves with the burdened and perishing races of earth.

Almighty God, grant that we may meet the challenge of the appeal which comes from our day and generation. By example and precept we would keep free from evil speaking, from envy and hatred, and untainted from the turmoil of strife and confusion. Give unto us peace and faith which rebound to the enlargement of vision, calling the future and claiming it as our own. O Thou of the seamless robe, lay Thy hand on every sufferer; with Thy consoling voice give cheer to every lonely heart and hush its lamentation. Thou who dost behold the ultimate triumph against the dark background with its voices of the past, rule in all our land, harmonize contradictions, subjugate all enemies and compel all events to serve our free and hospitable country. In the name of the world's Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 5, 1943, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a short address delivered by Senator DAVIS at the Army-Navy E production award, the Babcock & Wilcox Tube Co.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill the title of which reads as follows:

To provide further for the successful prosecution of the war through a system of civilian selective war service, with the aid of the Selective Service System.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FOOD RATIONING

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, when war clouds were first settling over Europe, the Swiss Government encouraged its people to store up a 3 months' supply of food in each household. The Swiss Government even made loans to needy families for this purpose. The Swiss wisdom and foresight in this matter has been amply demonstrated since that stanch little Republic was quickly isolated.

Our Government now proposes to restrict each person in the United States to a supply of five 8-ounce cans of food on hand, under penalty of removing coupons from ration cards. It seems to me that our Government would do well and very wisely to take a leaf from the Swiss book and encourage householders in those areas of the United States which might be subject to invasion to store up similar stocks of canned goods and nonperishable food stuffs.

One of these areas which I certainly believe should be so treated is the west coast of the United States. Separated from the rest of our country by 1,000 miles of mountain and desert, it is connected only by a few thin miles of rail and road, easily severed. It is folly in these uncertain times to restrict householders in such areas to a few days' supply only. In my humble opinion the opposite course should be pursued.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the completion of the legislative program and the disposition of other special orders, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KENNEDY] may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the regular business and any other special orders tomorrow I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a brief article from Time magazine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order recorded today for one-half hour. When I asked for it I did not anticipate there would be as much business as there will be today, but I wanted to tell the House frankly that I am going to claim my time and that I am going to speak about the work of the Dies committee and make some comments on the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] which he made on last Monday. I do this for two reasons: First, because I think it is quite important; second, because I want my own position to be plain and not to have anybody say I did not make it so.

WILLIAM PICKENS

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HENDRICKS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from the Northern Virginia Daily entitled "Through the Wringer."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include a short excerpt from the testimony of General Reybold on the time element in the construction of the Florida Barge Canal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES CHARGED WITH SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, in the Washington Star of yesterday there was a statement that five of the people named by me were no longer connected with the Federal Government. That is not true if information furnished to me by the personnel department is correct. As a matter of fact, I have a letter from the War Production Board advising me that one of these people is still on the pay roll. For instance, Paul F. Brissenden, according to the Star, is no longer on the pay roll, but according to a letter written by the War Production Board he is.

Mr. Schuman is still in the Denver office, notwithstanding the story appearing in the Star. Several of them are on leave, or at least they took leave after the speech I made on September 24 exposing some of them; but none of them have lost their connection with the Federal pay roll.

I just wanted to make that statement so that the record will be straight. In the course of the day I would like to take some of the time of the House to discuss at length the record of William Pickens. I have it; I have the record that he made, a long record, and if I may have the indulgence of the House sometime today, for the benefit of those Members who want to know conclusively what the facts are, I have them here and am prepared to show them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHWABE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two editorials, one from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the inaugural speech of Gov. Earl Warren, of California.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MR. McNUTT AND THE MANPOWER PROBLEM

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order of 10 minutes today, but I should like to release this time. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. PLUMLEY addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. HARNESS asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit two requests: First, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a concurrent resolution of the Joint Assembly of Iowa memorializing Congress; and, second, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter I have written to a constituent who has collected and given a hundred tons of scrap metal to the Government.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a brief statement on the food situation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the Kansas Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter received on the Ruml tax plan.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE SILVER-PURCHASE PROGRAM

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend at this point in the RECORD a release of a speech I am making.

The SPEAKER. Under the established procedure the gentleman may not do that if it exceeds what could be stated in a minute's time; if it does it will have to go in the Appendix.

Mr. WHITE. I assure the Speaker that it will be less than a minute, that it will not amount to more than half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, the Treasury silver-purchase program has been a godsend to the American people in the present financial and war emergency. In buying silver under the provisions of the Silver Purchase Act, the Government has acquired a stock pile of unobligated silver amounting to 45,000 tons which is now being delivered to our war industries, as fast as it can be used, through the Defense Plant Corporation. The allocation of the Treasury silver stock piles and the current importation of foreign silver is providing a surplus to supply every demand for silver both for consumptive and nonconsumptive needs of our war industries. As another result of the Government silver purchase program, we have $2,000,000,000 in circulation with the necessary legal silver reserve being held in a separate fund to redeem every silver certificate that has been put out. All of this silver has been acquired at no cost to the taxpayers. In buying this silver, we are also financing the production of the critical war metals, copper, antimony, zinc, and lead. To strike down the silver-purchasing program now, would be a blow at the very vitals of our war industry and would help Hitler and Japan by slowing up the production of munitions sorely needed by our boys at the front.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Springfield Union, of Springfield, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix by printing two speeches, one delivered by myself and one by Mr. Lasseter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FARM-LABOR SHORTAGE

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to call to the attention of Members of the House a bill I introduced last Friday, H. R. 1728. I hope you will get a copy of this bill and read it. Unless something is done, and done promptly, to help solve a serious problem confronting the farmers of this country in regard to labor shortage, we are going to have a problem in the near future of a serious shortage of food and fiber that is so necessary in not only winning this war, but the peace.

This bill will definitely solve the labor shortage, and it is so written that the administration of same cannot be messed up with the writing of rules and regulations governing the administration of the bill. Let us have a hearing on this bill before the Military Affairs Committee at once.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests: One, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial from a Bucyrus, Ohio, paper, and to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and the other to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under a special order this afternoon, I have time in which I intended to discuss the advisability and the need of withholding further appropriations to the National Resources Planning Board. Owing to the large amount of business, I will probably not have the opportunity to give all of this discussion today and will have the same inserted in the RECORD. May I request all Members who are interested in abolishing this vicious body to read my extension.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests, one that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include an editorial and the other to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

WALTER WINCHELL

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, last night the keyhole peeper gave us two pieces of news which he seemed to think of great importance to the Nation. He said that two women, and he named them, were about to experience the "blessed event." I hope that the Army and Navy, particularly the Navy in which he serves, takes notice of the valuable contribution to the war effort of this individual.

What he forgot was to advise the people of this annual report of the Federal Trade Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942. I read from page 42 of this report a few days ago. On page 62 of the same report I find this statement:

> Jergens-Woodbury Sales Corporation, Cincinnati, sixth circuit (Cincinnati), misrepresentation of germicidal properties of cold cream and soap.

That is notice of a case which was then pending in the court at Cincinnati, Ohio.

He forgot to tell the people about that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, but I do it so in order to ask the gentleman a couple of questions.

Mr. RANKIN. All right, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. On Friday afternoon while we were real busy here the gentleman made some request about the observance of Washington's birthday.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; that is right.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I did not get the name, and I am not informed now and do not care to be, but I am wondering if it is really important that we observe Washington's Birthday any more for the duration.

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly it is.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Further reserving the right to object, and I feel kindly to the gentleman——

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is going to read Washington's Farewell Address to the House on February 22.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Did not the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Mississippi both vote for the third term?

Mr. RANKIN. We certainly did not vote for Wendell Willkie. Please do not insult us by that question. It is bad enough for the Republicans to have to listen to it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Well, you had Norman Thomas on the ballot.

Mr. RANKIN. Now, the gentleman says something about Norman Thomas. That may have been an outlet for his outraged feelings, but did he take advantage of it or did he eat the crow?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. On advice of counsel, I refuse to answer.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is bogging down very fast.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I have a high regard for the gentleman from Alabama, but I would like to know if he is just going to give us a little elocution when he reads the Farewell Address, some tinkling symbol and sounding brass in it. Does he believe what is in the Farewell Address? Is he going to put his heart in it?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Alabama and I believe a great deal more in Washington's Farewell Address than the able gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] did when he fell for Wendell Willkie's bunk, or campaign oratory, 2 years ago, and I know the distinguished gentleman from Kansas will enjoy hearing our colleague from Alabama read Washington's Farewell Address.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

ISOLATIONISM

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, on front page of the Christian Science Monitor of January 11, 1943, first two columns, we have the headline reading, "Americans lose illusions of safety in isolationism."

The American Council on Public Affairs sets out in that issue five things about the American people, and it says:

1. That with Pearl Harbor having blasted the Nation's illusions as to security against attack, the American people are today intellectually invincible.

Then they proceed to set forth four or five additional points and Mr. Schnapper, executive secretary of the council, makes this statement:

All things considered, the American public has been superbly armed with the facts during the past year. It has the benefit of constant and detailed information about every major aspect of its participation in the war. As a result, the American people are today fulfilling their responsibilities with a determination based upon facts rather than upon propaganda. They understand the fundamental issues of the war far more than is generally appreciated.

I bring up this point in connection with our liability to the country and to its war effort in paying those taxes assessed against us in 1942 and which we are now able to pay. I cannot understand why the men and women of this country who are able to pay and who participated in that income now want to duck the responsibility of paying that tax. I hope this Council on Public Affairs will look into that particular phase of the tax payment proposition. We now have over 39,000,000 nonagricultural workers on the pay rolls of our industry and economic activities. For all manufacturing industries—war and civilian—weekly hours averaged 44 a week in November as compared with 43.6 in October, and 40.3 in November 1941. Hourly earnings of 89.9 cents were 1.2 cents above the preceding month. Our people have to their credit in our banks over $74,000,000,000 of demand and time savings deposits—this includes individuals, partnerships, and corporations. Fifty million of our people have an equity of over $16,000,000,000 in savings bonds and about 25,000,000 pay rollees participated in purchase of savings bonds this last December. Our people have about $15,000,000,000 circulating outside the Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks and unquestionably several billions of this is in hiding—being hoarded. Yet, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee states that a great flood of demands for cancelation of the 1942 Federal tax liability is rolling into his office from our people. I submit these questions: Are the American people fulfilling their responsibilities? Are we today intellectually invincible?

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein some editorials and an article from the press of the Nation's Capital, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein editorials from the Louisville Courier-Journal, the Anniston Star, and the Atlanta Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech I made last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

SILVER

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, as the lone representative of the silver State of Nevada, I appeal to you to reconsider the silver amendment that was adopted by the Committee of the Whole on last Friday. If you recall, it was the silver taken out of the mines of the Comstock lode, Virginia City, that saved the credit of this Nation during the Civil War. The amendment that was adopted on last Friday is purely in the interest of the silver manufacturers of this country. They can get all the silver they want if they will pay the Government the same price the Government is paying for the silver. We all know they make a net profit when they manufacture and sell their goods. I appeal to you to consider changing your vote when the question again comes to a vote on the floor of the House. If silver is allowed to remain as it is, it will save the credit of this Nation in this war. If I had my way I would prohibit the coining of all one-dollar bills and make everybody use silver dollars.

[Here the gavel fell.]

INVESTIGATION OF ACTS OF EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 102) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House, which said committee is authorized to conduct investigations of any action, rule, procedure, regulation, order, or directive taken or promulgated by any department or independent agency of the Federal Government where complaint is made to said committee that such action, rule, regulation, procedure, order, or directive—

(1) Is beyond the scope of the power or authority granted to such department or independent agency by Congress or by Executive order.

(2) Invades the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of citizens of the United States.

(3) Inflicts penalties for failure to comply with such rules, regulations, or directives, without affording those accused of violation an opportunity to present their defense before a fair and impartial tribunal.

The said committee shall report to the Congress from time to time the results of such investigations and such recommendations as they see fit with respect to the personnel of those administering any such department or independent agency, or shall recommend such legislation or amendments to existing legislation as they deem desirable.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act anywhere within or without the District of Columbia whether the House is in session or has adjourned or is in recess; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents; to administer oaths; to take testimony; to have printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable within the amount appropriated therefor. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in the case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein some editorials and articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a poem entitled "A Soldier Speaks."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an interesting letter received from John L. Rogers, Director of the Division of Motor Transport of the Office of Defense Transportation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was on objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 5]

| | | |

| Engel | McGranery | Treadway |
| Fay | McGregor | Wasielewski |
| Fish | McKenzie | Welchel, Ohio |
| Ford | McLean | |

The SPEAKER. On this call 376 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means be permitted to sit during the sessions and the recesses of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution (H. Res. 103) which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on the District of Columbia, to rank as follows:

Third, THOMAS D'ALESANDRO, Jr., Maryland.
Fifth, SAM M. RUSSELL, Texas.
Sixth, OREN HARRIS, Arkansas.
Seventh, F. EDWARD HÉBERT, Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Arthur Levefre, Jr., of Houston, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a radio speech I delivered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a statement on the submarine menace by Sir Percy Noble, of the British Admiralty, at present in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a brief editorial from the Houston Chronicle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter that I have written to the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend in the RECORD the text of several letters to which I expect to refer in debate this afternoon in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1648) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1648, with Mr. COURTNEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CUSTOMS

Salaries and expenses: For collecting the revenue from customs, for enforcement, as specified in Executive Order No. 9083, of certain navigation laws, for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, and not to exceed $100,000 for the securing of evidence of violations of the customs and navigation laws; for expenses of transportation and transfer of customs receipts from points where there are no Government depositories; not to exceed $84,500 for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a), but not to exceed $1,700 for any one person; not to exceed $500 for subscriptions to newspapers; not to exceed $85,000 for stationery; not to exceed $12,000 for improving, repairing, maintaining, or preserving buildings, inspection stations, office quarters, including living quarters for officers, sheds, and sites along the Canadian and Mexican borders acquired under authority of the act of June 26, 1930 (19 U. S. C. 68); and for the purchase (not to exceed 150), maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary for official use in field work; for the payment of extra compensation earned by customs officers or employees for overtime services, at the expense of the parties in interest, in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the act approved February 13, 1911, as amended by the act approved February 7, 1920, and section 451 of the Tariff Act, 1930, as amended (19 U. S. C. 261, 267, and 1451), the receipts from such overtime services to be deposited as a refund to the appropriation from which such overtime compensation is paid, in accordance with the provisions of section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended; for the cost of seizure, storage, and disposition of any merchandise, vehicle and team, automobile, boat, air or water craft, or any other conveyance seized under the provisions of the customs laws, for the purchase of arms, ammunition, and accessories; not to exceed $665,108 for personal services in the District of Columbia exclusive of 10 persons from the field force authorized to be detailed under section 525 of the Tariff Act of 1930, $22,481,585: Provided, That the offices of 7 comptrollers of customs, with annual salaries aggregating $43,950, are hereby abolished. The duties imposed by law and regulations upon the comptrollers of customs, their assistants and deputies, are hereby transferred to, imposed upon, and continued in positions now established in the Customs Service by or pursuant to law, as the Secretary of the Treasury by appropriate regulations shall specify; and he is further authorized to designate the title by which such positions shall be officially known hereafter. The Secretary of the Treasury, in performing the duties imposed upon him by this paragraph, shall administer the same in such manner that the transfer of duties provided hereby will not result in the establishment of any new positions in the Customs Service.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 15, lines 22 and 23, strike out "$22,481,585" and insert "$20,481,585."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is an effort to save $2,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States by reducing the appropriations for customs by approximately 10 percent. The work of the customs has gone away down. The collections are not more than a third of what they were a couple of years ago, and there are no importations of any great amount coming into the country at this time—a very small amount from England, and a small amount from South America. I am getting verbal reports from all over the country to the effect that employees of the Customs Service do not have enough to do to keep them busy, and that many of them are idle. The committee has cut the item only $43,000. It could really stand a cut of 20 percent instead of 10 percent, but I am being very careful about what I am submitting here and for that reason I am asking for only 10 percent, $2,000,000. Let us save $2,000,000 which can be done without the slightest impairment of service, simply putting those people in the Customs Service who do not have enough to do at work somewhere else. The Customs Service can get along without so many people, and these people can be sent to those departments of the Government which have not any duties as a result of the war.

It is our duty to see that the manpower of the Nation is conserved. The only way we can do it is to fail to provide funds to keep people in positions who are not needed.

I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is not difficult in an appropriation bill of this character to make just general statements and say, "Now, we should cut it," and not be specific. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is one of the most valued Members of this House. He is always careful, he is always practical, and in the committee there is very little disagreement in getting together on any cut that is justified. However, in discussing this item in the committee I do not recall that the gentleman from New York offered any such amendment. I do not recall any reason in the hearings how we could afford to make such a cut as $2,000,000 as proposed by the gentleman.

On the floor today I waited during his presentation of this matter to find out where he thought it could be cut and why and what specific services of the Customs Bureau should be curtailed. He made no such definition. He did not analyze it. The fact remains that he just offers a blank cut, simply on general principles.

Now, the gentlemen who testified before our committee were very frank in their statements. They said certain of their work had fallen off, but they had many other new duties imposed upon them. There is the censorship duty in connection with travelers going out of the United States. There is the policing of exports and imports. The border-patrol work has increased materially. They had to put on 600 new guards. I cannot see where this proposed amendment is justified on facts.

Not only that, there are a great many promotions and increases in pay under the Ramspeck bill, all of which have been absorbed by the Department in asking for what they had last year. Due to the fact that their personnel is busily engaged working on Government work—and no one is complaining that they are loafing and not doing their job—that their duties have increased during the war, I fail to see the logic of trying to make an automatic cut. I think when we cut in this way we are not acting the way we should act with reference to personnel matters and expenditures. Let us be able to know where and why a thing should be cut and not just cut it.

I think for that reason and many others the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman just said their duties have been increased during the war. Will the gentleman kindly point out specific instances on which we could base our judgment as to whether or not their duties have increased?

Mr. O'NEAL. The statement of these responsible officials is that their duties have increased; that they put on 600 new men, and that they have duties now which they did not have before war was declared.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] would have the author of this amendment reduce it to a bill of particulars and to specify the exact place in this appropriation where a reduction can be made. I have too much confidence in the ability of the gentleman from Kentucky to expect that he is really serious about that. He knows that in the appropriating machinery and technique it would be impossible, with the limited facilities at hand, for this subcommittee or the entire Committee on Appropriations to specify with absolute certainty whether or not each particular item in this huge Customs Service ought to be cut down a specified amount. We must operate by rule of thumb, as I remember the President once said. You simply cannot do it any other way. We make lump sum appropriations and must reduce them the same way.

Now why has the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] offered this amendment before the committee this afternoon? Let me call your attention to the fact that subsequent to these hearings and subsequent to their printing we called before our subcommittee the representatives of the Bureau of Foreign Funds Control and representatives of the Alien Property Custodian. Sometimes a little thing will pop up when you least expect it. When the appropriation for the Foreign Funds Control was under consideration, at this hearing Mr. Paley, head of that Division, testified, and it is notable that in connection with his testimony, and it must appear in the printed hearings when they are available, that he told our subcommittee of the tremendous amount of work which his organization was doing, and he referred to the fact that they had utilized much of the personnel of the Bureau of Customs. He said, "It is well known that the work of the Bureau of Customs has greatly receded," or words to that effect, and that they could take the personnel of the Bureau of Customs and use it in Foreign Funds Control work without interfering with the work of the Bureau of Customs.

Now I am not attempting to quote his testimony exactly, but any member of the subcommittee who was there—and they are all present—can take exception to what I have said if it is not the fact.

You will find that despite the fact that imports into this country have gone right straight down according to the findings of the Bureau of Customs which is affected by this bill, that the bill carries substantially $2,000,000 more in appropriations than has been requested since 1920. It is the largest appropriation by nearly two millions, the Bureau of Customs has asked for since 1920, and this in face of the fact that it appears conclusively to me from the hearings that the work of the Bureau of Customs has subsided very, very much.

If you will turn to page 331 of the hearings you will observe that in 1942 they had 8,309 employees in this Bureau; 1,879 are inspectors; 1,113 are guards; and 5,317 are in other categories. They can absorb a cut of $2,000,000 in the Customs Service without in any way interfering with the work of the Customs inspectors or the guards; they can absorb this cut and save $2,000,000. That is what the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York proposed to do.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and to supplement the strong presentation made by my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL].

It is traditional in the Customs Service that the amount of personnel required is not based on the volume of customs receipts, but on the number of transactions; that is what they always tell us. I direct your attention to page 327 of the hearings where is set forth in detail the customs transactions for 5 consecutive years, including the last fiscal year, 1942. Looking at that you will find that in nearly every category of the Service there has been an increase in transactions. However, small a transaction may be, it requires as much personal service as one involving a much larger amount. This table shows that the total number of persons who entered the country in 1942 was 39,798,676 as against 36,900,584 in 1941—and immigration cases have not been the least of the transactions involving the Service. In nearly every category the number of transactions has increased instead of diminished. In addition to that, you will find that the Customs Service as a result of the national situation has taken on a new jurisdiction; it has had censorship added to its other duties.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The table of customs transactions shows a reduction in the number of persons entering the country from 52,000,000 in 1938 to 39,000,000 in 1942.

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes; but it shows also an increase for 1942 over 1941.

Mr. TABER. Very little.

Mr. LUDLOW. The jurisdiction of the Customs Service has been greatly enlarged, for it has taken on censorship. There has been a great increase of work at Miami, Fla., where the daily arrival of planes has reached 80 according to the testimony set out on page 326 of the hearings; and, as Mr. O'Neal has said, they have been obliged to increase their guard force by some 600 men throughout the Service. You will find that statement on page 321.

If you just want to cut these bills generally without any regard to rhyme or reason you can, of course, do it, but you will be cutting this Service far below its actual requirements if you adopt this amendment; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUDLOW) there were—ayes 116, noes 69.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. LUDLOW and Mr. TABER.

The Committee again divided; and the teller reported that there were—ayes 158, noes 92.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses in connection with the assessment and collection of internal-revenue taxes and the administration of the internal-revenue laws, including the administration of such provisions of other laws as are authorized by or pursuant to law to be administered by or under the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, including one stamp agent (to be reimbursed by the stamp manufacturers) and the employment of experts; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts, the cost of chemical analyses made by others than employees of the United States and expenses incident to such chemists testifying when necessary; telegraph and telephone service, postage, freight, express, necessary expenses incurred in making investigations in connection with the enrollment or disbarment of practitioners before the Treasury Department in internal-revenue matters, expenses of seizure and sale, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, including stenographic reporting services; for the acquisition of property under the provisions of title III of the Liquor Law Repeal and Enforcement Act, approved August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 872–881), and the operation, maintenance, and repair of property acquired under such title III; for the purchase (not to exceed 34), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, for official use of the Alcohol Tax and Intelligence Units in field work; printing and binding (not to exceed $1,606,850); and the procurement of such supplies, stationery (not to exceed $675,800), equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, laboratory supplies, periodicals, and newspapers for the Alcohol Tax Unit, ammunition, lawbooks and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary, $24,821,735, of which amount not to exceed $11,111,885 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That not more than $100,000 of the total amount appropriated herein may be expended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for detecting and bringing to trial persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violation.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, on Friday I took the floor and made the statement that during the period from 1936 to 1940, inclusive, there were exported from this country to Japan 717,277,918 pounds of refined copper, and in the course of my remarks I said further that we had exported during that same period 36,000,000 pounds of scrap copper; that the school children are now requested to bring their pennies to school in order to make up for the great deficiency resulting from the export of copper to Japan which she is now using to battle our boys in the Pacific. I was urging in those remarks that our silver be put to work now as a fighting metal to overcome this deficiency in copper, to replace it.

I was talking, of course, on the Celler amendment, as amended by Mr. WOLCOTT's amendment.

When the men who opposed the amendment took the floor they pointed out that if we failed to mine the silver we would cut down the supply of copper and these various other minerals which were essential to the war. I was interested in that, so I called an expert on Sunday and asked him to write me a letter with reference to that situation.

I have here a letter from Mr. Herbert M. Bratter, who is a student of the silver question, located at 3000 Thirty-ninth Street NW., Washington, D. C. The letter is dated February 7, 1943, and reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1943.

Hon. DANIEL A. REED,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN REED: In response to your request on the phone today, I am pleased to give you below my comment on the arguments made on the floor by silver-State Congressmen in opposing the Celler-Wolcott amendment to the bill H. R. 1648.

It is interesting to note that the silver Congressmen no longer defend the silver program on monetary grounds, but frankly classify it as a subsidy to mining, which after 10 years of silver buying puts the discussion on the level where it belongs.

The silver spokesmen, in opposing the Celler-Wolcott amendment, asserted that the silver subsidy is necessary as a war measure, because it is in reality a subsidy to the miners of copper, lead, and zinc, with which three metals most United States-mined silver is produced. Thus, Congressman ROBINSON of Utah told the House (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 677):

"A vote for this amendment is a vote to stop the mining of copper, lead, and zinc * * * it is absolutely necessary to have so much money for silver in order to mine copper, to mine zinc, and to mine lead. * * * Do away with all this monetary talk * * * about silver as money, wipe that off the books if you want to, but * * * are you willing to stop the mining of copper, to stop the mining of zinc, to stop the mining of lead, when you know these minerals are necessary in order to win the war?"

The same argument was made by Congressman MURDOCK, Congressman WHITE, Congressman ROCKWELL, Congressman CHENOWETH, etc. What is the answer?

In the first place, a very large part of our production of copper, lead, and zinc does not depend on silver in any way, because any silver content of the ore is insignificant.

As to the remaining copper, lead, and zinc production, this is already directly and amply subsidized by the premium price plan, which the Office of Price Administration and the Metals Reserve Company introduced on January 13, 1942, to last for 2½ years, or through July 1944. Under that plan the Metals Reserve Company, through October 1942, paid out premiums of $12,573,000. What does this plan provide?

The premium price plan provides that all mine output of copper, lead, and zinc above that which could be reasonably expected from a mine is paid for as follows:

Copper, 17 cents a pound, instead of the ceiling of 12 cents.

Zinc, 11 cents a pound, instead of the ceiling of 8¼ cents.

Lead, 9¼ cents a pound, instead of the ceiling of 6½ cents.

Instead of ceiling prices, for all output above the quota fixed for a mine, that mine receives stratosphere prices. And note, too, that for some mines the quota is fixed at zero, thus giving the premium on the entire output.

Concerning the adequacy of the premium price plan without the additional aid of a silver subsidy to bring out copper, lead, and zinc we have the significant testimony of a War Production Board official, Mr. Harvey Anderson, before the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures on December 3, 1942 (pp. 29–30), testified:

"The survey made of prices of copper shows with a 12-cent ceiling originally established we would bring out slightly over 90 percent of the potential copper that could be produced in the country; with a bonus permitting payments up to 17 cents * * * we could bring out somewhere around 90 or 95 percent of the maximum total production; and beyond that further price increase offered as a stimulus to the operator for producing largely is bringing out relatively small amounts of high-priced copper. * * *

"There is [already] a financial incentive for a mine to turn out just as much copper as it can."

In connection with financial inducements, note further that the Revenue Act of 1942 exempts from the excess profits tax any bonus payments made by the Government under the premium price plan. The act also permits deduction from the income subject to excess profits tax of certain proportions of the earnings that come from production in excess of 1936–39 average production. Thus, the mining industry has been accorded material financial inducement through the tax law.

To sum up, the proper way to subsidize copper, lead, and zinc production for war purposes is directly, as is being done, and not through unnecessary additions to the Treasury's stock of monetary silver, impounded by statute at West Point and elsewhere. On the contrary, the legal bars to the use by war industries of the silver already so impounded should be repealed by Congress.

Yours very truly,

HERBERT M. BRATTER.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, we are discussing metals. If conditions that exist in northeast Nebraska respecting the procurement of radio batteries are general throughout the United States, thousands of radio listeners who must depend upon battery receiving sets will be cut off from valuable radio service.

Hundreds of owners of battery receiving sets in northeast Nebraska cannot get batteries. One radio station has told its listeners that because zinc is needed so badly for war purposes it may be impossible for them to get batteries, and as a result a great many letters have been received indicating that large numbers of radio receiving sets have already been put out of use.

There are hundreds of families in my district who do not have electricity. Many of them have applied for R. E. A. hook-up. In some parts of my district the poles, insulators, and transformers have been installed, but, due to the inability to get copper conductors, these projects must wait over until after the war for completion. This means that hundreds of people who have planned to convert their battery receiving sets to electric-powered sets will have to rely on battery sets for the duration.

A very great number of families that depend solely on radio for news and information are threatened with the discontinuation of this service because they can get no batteries, and the result will be that radio stations will lose thousands upon thousands of listeners.

There are many farmers in my district who do not take newspapers, who do not have telephones, and who have depended entirely on radio for news about livestock markets, and so forth.

One radio station in my district made a survey a few days ago and received over 300 letters from owners of battery receiving sets. Out of the first 234 tabulated, the report is that in a very small area 384 radio sets are now out of use or soon will be. Forty listeners mentioned the time that their machines have been out of use as follows:

One, 6 months.
Four, 5 months.
Eight, 3 months.
Twenty-five, 2 months.
Two, 2 weeks.

Radio is a valuable and absolutely necessary part of the life of the people of my district. The people there are most patriotic. They have sent their sons to war. With less than the needed amount of farm help, they have produced a record-breaking amount of food. They are preparing to follow the suggestions of our Government to plant more and more in order to raise more crops, and to produce more meat to feed our fighting men, our allies and our own civilian population. The work of our farms will be more important than ever before in the history of our country during the coming planting time and the time when harvest approaches. The farmer, his wife, and children are and will continue to be the busiest people in our land. They will work from the early dark hours of the morning until far into the night without regard to minimum hours or minimum wages. Their time is just as precious as is the time of the factory or the office in the cities. They must depend upon information about conditions of roads, weather, markets, and so forth, which is so vitally important and necessary to keep the farm business going. These farmers have conducted their business in spite of the fact that they face this labor shortage and have faced a shortage of farm machinery and repairs for that machinery. Many of them would like to have their farms electrified through the extension of R. E. A., which had to be curtailed because we could get no more copper and other material for projects, even those partially completed. Now, hundreds of them have a just complaint because they cannot get a battery to keep the medium of information—the radio receiving set—in condition to get the valuable reports which are so necessary to keep the farm fully informed on conditions as they exist in our country and elsewhere, the progress of the war, markets, and weather and road conditions. These farmers listen carefully to the Government-planned programs on drives for the sale of bonds and other matters so vital for the successful prosecution of the war. They invest heavily in bonds and the Treasury Department is largely dependent upon the information which the radio stations broadcast regarding the bond sales and other matters. Should the radio stations lose hundreds of thousands of listeners because these listeners can no longer get batteries for their receiving sets, our Government departments that depend upon the radio stations to furnish that information to these listeners, will lose, in my opinion, thousands of supporters of their programs and, as a result, the war effort will be the loser.

You may be interested to know that the Treasury Department, in its war savings program publicity, does not pay anything for radio announcements and radio programs which the stations use. The Department has prepared radio announcements and there is a little printing expense, but the radio stations have not charged the Government 1 cent for millions of dollars' worth of free publicity which has gone to our people over many of these stations.

I am not prepared to say that zinc or other materials which go into the construction of a radio battery are so scarce that we must now discontinue service for the people who have no means of receiving absolutely necessary news over the radio other than battery receiving sets. I feel that the situation is so serious that immediate attention should be given to it in order that something be done, if that is at all possible, to give these people some immediate assistance. If some assistance could be given to them now. I am sure that we will not only be aiding them to continue to receive the radio service to which they are entitled, but we will be doing a service to our war effort by keeping thousands of people fully informed, whereas, if the service is discontinued, our Government will lose the attention of some of the most patriotic people in our land. Do not forget that a radio receiving set is almost as necessary on a farm today as is a plow.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is with temerity and due humility that I have this day filed a resolution requesting the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, to take up with the Lend-Lease Administrator the question of increasing the allocation of lend-lease materials to China from 2 percent, which it is at present, to 10 percent.

I have no quarrel with the Lend-Lease Administration for their allocations of 77 percent of the money available in 1942 to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and 17.7 percent to Russia. Unquestionably due in no small part to these allocations are the glorious victories that have been achieved by the Russian people and a large measure of the success achieved by Great Britain but I believe that equally great success would be possible of accomplishment provided a more equitable proportion of lend-lease materials were sent to China, which has received but 2 percent of the total; and of this 2 percent, less than one-fourth of the total of 2 percent, or a half of 1 percent, ultimately was received by the Chinese forces.

When we consider the accomplishments of the Chinese people during the past 12 years, fighting not only an exceptionally well-organized nation, the Japanese, but fighting the scourge of famine, which in one province in the year 1930 resulted in the death of six and a half millions of persons, and this famine more responsible than any other agency for the development of the cruel bands of brigands which left a trail of blood from one end of China to the other.

The group now in control of the Chinese Nation, as a consequence of the invasion of China by Japan, have developed a united China and this unity of the Chinese has made it possible for them to carry on a warfare with Japan now in the sixth year with limited resources and with a reasonable measure of success.

The joint declaration of the United Nations sets forth, as follows:

The government signatory hereto, having subscribed to a common program of purposes and principles embodied in the joint declaration of the President of the United States of America and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland dated August 14, 1941, known as the Atlantic Charter, being convinced that complete victory over their enemies is essential to defend life, liberty, independence, and religious freedom, and to preserve human rights and justice in their own lands as well as in other lands, and that they are now engaged in a common struggle against savage and brutal forces seeking to subjugate the world, declare:

1. Each government pledges itself to employ its full resources, military or economic, against those members of the tripartite pact and its adherents with which such Government is at war.

2. Each Government pledges itself to cooperate with the governments signatory hereto and not to make a separate armistice or peace with the enemies. The foregoing declaration may be adhered to by other nations which are, or which may be, rendering material assistance and contributions in the struggle for victory over Hitlerism.

It must be exceedingly difficult for our comrades at arms, the Chinese, to understand just what this agreement between nations means insofar as China is concerned.

The report to the Seventy-eighth Congress of lend-lease operations is a staggering indictment of our neglect of the great storehouse of manpower represented by China with its population of 450,000,000; largely defenseless, they have carried on now in the sixth year against the Empire of Japan, and provided they had received in some degree the measure of consideration to which they are clearly entitled as an ally, it would be unnecessary to expose our boys today in the Solomons, Guadalcanal, and the other places to diseases, destruction, pestilence, and death. The allocation of lend-lease aid to the United Kingdom, including Australia, New Zealand, India, Egypt, and other British territories represents the staggering total of $6,353,143,000, as against one-quarter of this amount to the mighty fighting forces of Russia who have contributed more greatly in the last 6 months to the shortening of the war and the destruction of Hitler's army than any other agency. The total allocated to Russia has been $1,532,230,000, while China, in need of every character of armament, has received but $156,738,000 or one-fortieth as much to China as was sent to the United Kingdom and British territories.

China, with its cities burned, its defenseless women, children and men destroyed by air raids, obliged to leave their homes and seek shelter in far distant portions of China, exposed to pestilence, disease and famine due to the ravages resulting from the invasion of the Japanese, received no foodstuffs for the maintenance of its people from March of 1941 to December 31 of 1942, while $880,000,000 worth was sent to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

In the matter of aircraft and parts so essential to the combating of the Japanese Army and Air Forces, the total allocated to China represented but $37,336,000 and only one-fourth of this amount or a little not in excess of $9,000,000 ever reached the Chinese Army. While this amount was allocated to China, there was allocated to the United Kingdom and its territories $827,000,000 worth, the major portion of which reached its destination.

In the matter of tanks and parts the total allocated to China was but $922,000 worth as against $315,000,000 worth sent to the United Kingdom and its territories, a sum 340 times greater than that allocated to China.

In the petroleum products so vital to the operation of aircraft, tanks and motor vehicles, China received $3,237,000 worth while the United Kingdom alone, without its dependencies, received $2,252,862,000 worth or more than 8 times as much as was allocated to China.

I am in receipt of letters every day and undoubtedly, every Member of Congress is, directing attention to the physical disabilities resulting to our boys from fighting in the Solomons and Guadalcanal. These men are not inured to the privation and the hardship and the atmospheric conditions that obtain in these regions. This is a section where the yellow man fights best and why, in God's name, is not China, with its army of 5,000,000 trained, seasoned troops, with its reserve of 15,000,000 troops and its potential reserve army of 50,000,000 men, permitted to take the offensive through the back door of Japan, which they are ready and eager to do if given some of the resources vital to success.

When I say that arming China, putting it on the offensive, putting its vast armies into action, would result in the saving of the lives of 500,000 American boys, from the experience we have had in the Guadalcanal and the Solomons, I am setting the figure low. We owe it to America to save the lives of 500,000 American boys and the American people are asking again why it is not done. I appreciate that perhaps I am treading on dangerous territory when I present these facts since I am not a military expert or a strategist in any sense of the word, but I am voicing the opinion that is held by the average American who is continually asking "why" and will continue to ask "why" until we take advantage of this opportunity to crush and destroy Japan, our Far East enemy.

It is difficult for the average American to understand the underlying motive that prevents the adoption of a policy whereby the lives of American service men, the ships of the American Navy, and the cause in which we are engaged should be denied the services of the huge reservoir of manpower inured to hardship, borne to privation, and who by their courage, tenacity, patience, and vitality have earned the right to take their place among the nations of the world—the Chinese Republic.

Surely America or our great leader, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, would not, knowingly, be a party to the policy of openly condemning to death 500,000 or more American boys through failure to utilize the fighting forces of China.

The success achieved by Russia during the past 4 months could be achieved in the next 6 months in a similar manner by China provided we furnished the resources so that the termination of the war would be short-lived.

I believe the time has come to utilize the forces that have been developed in China not only for the defeat of Japan and the speeding up of the winning of the war in the East, through the utilization of the Chinese veterans which in active service, reserve units, and training camps represent a total of 20,000,000 men and with a reserve of 50,000,000 able-bodied men of military age available for service.

These are trained soldiers who from July of 1941 to June of 1942 fought nearly 5,600 engagements resulting in 180,000 casualties and the capture of over 5,000 Japanese soldiers. The failure to utilize this tremendous storehouse of trained manpower is a something that the average American citizen cannot comprehend. Personally, I want to see the Japanese and the Empire destroyed, but if it can be destroyed without the loss of a single American boy, then it is about time that the American public were informed as to the reason for the failure to provide the engines of war which is all that China asks to accomplish the destruction of Japan.

For more than 5 months American fighting forces have been carrying on under brilliant and able leadership in the Solomon Islands, thousands of miles from Japan and with an endless number of islands yet to be taken before direct assault is possible on Japan.

If it required 5 months of intensive fighting with a loss of many hundreds of American boys killed and maimed and the huge army of China with empty hands and empty guns waiting to enter Japan by the back door and destroy her, I submit that there is a duty which we owe to the mothers and fathers of America, and that duty is to put the weapons in the hands of the Chinese that will make possible the character of offensive that they have demonstrated they are capable of making. China found herself and became unified when invaded by Japan; it ceased to be a combination of warring groups raiding various provinces; unified, trained, inured to privation and hardship, this great army of nearly 20,000,000 men stands idly by while American fighting forces are struggling in the islands of the Pacific.

The invasion of Japan by China would relieve the pressure in the Pacific islands and would result in the saving of the lives of thousands of American boys.

I appeal to the President of the United States, in the name of the fathers and mothers of American boys who are destined to die to the number of perhaps 500,000 if we fail to do what is clearly our duty. The allocation of 10 percent of lend-lease materials to China would in nowise impair our present efforts in any of the other fighting areas. I have conferred with competent authorities and have been informed that with 500 bombing, pursuit, and fighting planes and a reasonable amount of other war materials that success would be possible by the Chinese over the Japanese within a period of 6 months.

I want to see this war ended and ended quickly and provided at this crucial hour we can arm the Chinese and put them into offensive combat against the Japanese, I believe we cannot only speed up the winning of the war but we can accomplish that which is equally vital—preserving to American homes 500,000 or more American boys who are destined to die unless the war relief so vital to China and the winning of the war is made available.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 3 words, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman second next preceding me, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], recalled a few things regarding the debate that occurred here on Friday and he read portions of a letter concerning arguments put up by some, including myself, who were opposed to the Celler and the other amendments pertaining to silver. Let me make this clear at the outset: I am not here solely or primarily in the interest of protecting the so-called subsidy for silver. I do have sincere doubts whether we may rightfully say the Government has been subsidizing silver, for a subsidy implies outgo without income to the Treasury.

If you will refer to my speech of Friday last I pointed out that silver comes in complex ores. Anything done to reduce production of silver will tend to reduce production of needed war minerals. I have this on the authority of mining men, and I know from the facts that exist in my own State, some of the greatest camps in Arizona, that there is a large admixture of silver in them. That is also true of the mining of lead, zinc, and other ores. I state without fear of contradiction that if we hamper or forbid the production of silver we are going to handicap the production of copper, lead, and zinc. I refer you to mining engineers for the proof of this and not to economists or theorists on money matters.

Mr. Chairman, let us get right down to the crux of this matter. The Celler amendment put in here on Friday ought to be subjected to a roll-call vote. I hope the leaders in charge of this measure will insist on a roll-call vote. I fear gentlemen on both sides of the aisle have given too little thought to what the Celler amendment tries to do to one of the greatest assets of our Nation—and claims to do it in the sacred cause of patriotism. I want to put these gentlemen on record by a roll-call vote when we get this bill back to the House.

The gentleman from New York tries to tell us through the letter which he has read that there is no need to favor silver in order to encourage production of copper, lead, and zinc, because, as is explained, the Government is furnishing a sufficient subsidy for them through a bonus price for such strategic minerals. Now, I happen to know something about that encouraging higher price which was allowed on copper, lead, and zinc. I fought with Leon Henderson for weeks and months when he pegged the price of copper at 12 cents per pound, telling him many times that it was not enough under these war conditions to bring out the production. A committee of western Congressmen, of which I was one, called in Leon Henderson and several mining experts on the pegged price of lead, and eventually the pegged price was bettered somewhat; it was placed up to 17 cents for copper.

Those better prices have done a little for the production, but not very much—not as much as our desperate need for war metals requires. The 17 cents is only for surplus copper over former production. Really the main price is the pegged price of 12 cents per pound for copper and relatively few companies get the 5-cent bonus price, and that on only a relatively small part of their total production. Do not let anybody kid you into believing the copper companies are getting too much of a good thing. The 17-cent price permitted new copper producers is not sufficient to bring many small, new mines into production. The present price for silver does help materially, and under the present system costs the Treasury nothing.

What is this whole controversy? The men who are offering these amendments are undoubtedly hoping to do more than the amendments would directly do. They want to repeal all the silver legislation on the books since 1934. Look at the act of 1934 and you will find that it gives a certain amount of discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury. I have heard it said here that the Secretary of the Treasury is not interested in this silver purchase legislation and would like to have it wiped out. Let us review some silver legislation. That may be true.

I call to your attention that back near the close of the last century, in 1878 and again in 1890, when silver legislation was put on the books, some discretion was lodged in the Secretary of the Treasury and he held down the purchase of silver to a minimum because he was unfriendly to the idea. Even so, in spite of an adverse Secretary of the Treasury, this country accumulated a great hoard of silver, which it had on hand at the time of the first World War, and found the possession of it a great advantage to have at that time.

We have accumulated a huge stock of bullion, which will be one of the greatest assets the Nation has at the peace table when we come to deal with the Orient and later with Latin America, where the white metal is as highly regarded as gold is in western Europe. Although the average cost of producing silver throughout the 400 years of record since the discovery of America has been 92 cents per ounce, they want our present store sold for 50 cents per ounce.

I have heard some of the most absurd statements made on this floor. If a chunk of anthracite coal were placed on this table and I should affirm that it was black in color, is there any man among us who would affirm that it was white? Yet equally contradictory statements have been made, diametrically opposed to each other, concerning the purchase of this silver. Somebody must be telling the truth and somebody must be in error.

I have heard it said that this huge pile of metal we have at West Point cost the taxpayers of this country so many hundreds of millions of dollars. I have heard other men say, and I know this cannot be successfully contradicted, that that hoard of silver has not cost the American taxpayer one penny in purchase price. Why? Because since 1939 we have taken 55 percent of it and converted it into money. The other 45 percent is virtually clear gain to the Treasury. The Treasury's profit on silver was even greater part of the time between 1934 and 1939.

Not only that, but in connection with putting silver into the war, that 45 percent, or about 47,000 tons of silver, has been turned over to the war effort. It was turned over more than a year ago. During that time less than half of it, only about 22,000 tons, has actually been put into uniform and put in the Army. However, some of it is now going steadily into the war effort just as fast as is needed.

What I have just said refers to Government-owned silver in nonconsumptive uses. There is plenty of silver from abroad going into consumptive war uses. In 1942, so I am informed, 90,000,000 ounces of foreign silver, purchased at a price ranging from 35⅜ to 45 cents per ounce went into our war industry, and 45,000,000 ounces went into the nonmilitary trades. Today silversmiths can get plenty of domestic silver at 71 cents per ounce.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

DID CONGRESS HEAR THAT MANDATE?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, last November by a majority of more than a million, the American people told candidates for Congress that the waste and extravagance, the muddling and the confusion, the crackpot plans and schemes of the starry-eyed New Deal dreamers should be brought to an end.

Since 1938 the Dies committee has turned up for the information of the public, and the perusal by Congress, the records of many of the so-called crackpots on the Federal pay roll. That committee has also demonstrated that there are on the Federal pay roll some who follow the Communist Party line. On at least two former occasions Congress directed that funds then being appropriated should not be used to pay named individuals. Nevertheless, those two individuals later were found on another Federal pay roll.

Last Monday Chairman DIES of the committee gave to Congress a list of 38 Federal employees who were by the committee deemed unfit for public service. Nevertheless, when the question of continuing to hire those individuals came before Congress Friday, the administration was able to muster a majority of seven for their retention. The argument was made by some who overlooked the real issue that Congress should not try, condemn, and politically execute these individuals without a hearing. Those advancing the argument forgot that Congress was not sitting as a trial court, but as an employer.

The individuals named have no property right in the jobs which they hold; and if in the judgment of the people their theories of government run counter to those held by the majority, and proof of that proposition was given at the last election, then certainly the Congress, which appropriates the money for the jobs, has the right to say who shall hold those jobs or if it desires to abolish the jobs. We may even end the agency in which they are employed.

Congress may have overlooked the fact that the individuals sought to be separated from the public pay roll belonged to that group, or advocate theories of government similar to those held by the group, which for more than 2 years has been dissatisfied with our Constitution, our constitutional form of government, and desires to remake America.

We have had some 6 years of the advancement of that theory by that particular political faction, and it seems to some a little strange that a Congress which was elected in spite of the opposition of that group and with a clear-cut mandate to get rid of the bureaucrats, the crackpots, the Communists, and the New Dealers should now hesitate to obey the instructions given it by the voters on November 3 last.

Ever since election lame duck after lame duck, would-be officeholders and officeholders, rejected by the people, have by this administration been placed in positions of power where they can perpetuate the very theories and practices repudiated last November.

The Senate decreed that "Paving Block" Flynn should not go upon the public pay roll.

Are we to disregard the instructions of those who sent us here by continuing in public office, in positions where they can make the policies and continue to issue orders against this, that, and the other, those who were condemned by the voters? Is the will of the people who voted to end the New Deal to be thwarted by the action of Congress, which furnished the money and then permits the New Deal and the crackpots to continue in power? That is a question which if not answered correctly now may end the political life of those who refuse not only to listen but to act. Are we so naive, so silly, that we will vote the money to continue in power those who not only sought to destroy this Congress, but who are still seeking that same end?

The issue is not whether the individuals named by the Dies committee are Communists or something else. The issue is, do the people want on the public pay rolls those new dealers, those dreamers, those bureaucrats, those purge-smearers who have carried on as have those named by the Dies committee?

This Congress is sitting, not as a trial court, but as an employer, a hiring and a firing agency, charged with the expenditure of public money. The taxpayers indicated in no uncertain terms that they had grown weary and wanted fired employees who held views similar to those of the 38. Proof of that is found in the defeat of many a new dealer and in the election of some 69 new Members of Congress. Most of the 69 followed the mandate given them. A few old timers missed the point at issue.

Mr. Chairman, when we get to the last three sections of this bill, unless someone else does it I shall offer an amendment to the provision that none of the money appropriated by the bill shall be paid to any of those who advocate the overthrow of this Government by force or violence. My amendment will be, after the word "violence", add "or by subterfuge."

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. I submitted that amendment last Friday.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We have not yet reached that section. Last Friday, when the question of discharging from the Government service some 38 people was under consideration, there was more or less talk on the floor of the House about discharging those people without giving them a hearing or a trial, and that Congress was sitting as a prosecuting attorney or a trial judge and executioner. To my mind, that is not the issue.

We were not sitting here then, and we will not be sitting here today when we come to this amendment in such capacity. We are here as a hiring and a firing agency. We appropriate the money, and we have the right to say who we want on the pay roll. Because I may not have made myself clear, let me restate the situation and the issue.

Last November, if you remember, I think it was on the 3d, some 69 Members of this House were discharged. They were fired. Those Members of Congress were not fired because they were Communists; they were not fired because they were disloyal or because they were unpatriotic; they were severed from the pay roll simply because the people did not want them any more. Do you get the idea?

Sitting here, this Congress is the agent of the taxpayers, appropriating money. We say whether we want to put money in the Florida ship canal, up on Passamaquoddy, or here, there, or any other place; whether we want to build dams in the West. We designate the project we want. So, too, we have the right to create jobs—positions—and then to determine how much, if any, money we will appropriate for those holding those positions. We have the right to say we do not want a certain class of people or certain individuals on the pay roll. It may be because their hair is red, because they are bald, or because they wear it down over their coat collars. It makes no difference at all. The money is the money of our constituents, and we are their agents to direct the spending of that money. The responsibility for the spending of that money rests upon our shoulders. We cannot follow through on every individual in the Government employ, because there are too many of them, but we can take a stand as to the kind of people we want, and, when necessary to protect our Government from wasters or incompetents or those with plans repudiated by the voters, to name individuals.

Let me go back. On November 3 our people said in no unmistakable terms, by a majority of over one million votes, that they were through with the crackpots, the new dealers, the planners, and this, that, and the other. In spite of the verdict of the people—and I placed in the RECORD today an editorial from the East which lists some of them—we find that almost all of those who were defeated are coming back and being appointed by the President and put on the pay roll. The people said they did not want them, nevertheless, the President intends to continue the new dealers in power.

The President is the Commander in Chief of our armed forces but is not our boss on civil matters. Nor did he receive a mandate last November. Quite the contrary. November 3 was the day, another Fourth of July when there was a declaration of independence. November 3 was the day Congress was given a mandate to kick the impractical theorists out the window.

The people did not want 69 of the Congressmen any longer. So they got themselves some new ones—and I hope the gentleman noted that when these new Members voted the other day, they were not deceived by any sophistry or specious argument, or by the plea that we might condemn someone without a hearing. Of course, those purgers and new dealers condemned us in the last campaign without a hearing, but we are trying to go along with the Golden Rule, and give them a hearing and on their loyalty they had one so far as that goes by the Dies committee. Suppose the Dies committee was mistaken? Still, we do not want those 38 because they are monkey wrenches in the Government machinery.

Mr. FORD. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, bless your dear heart, by the counting of the votes. Did not the gentleman hear about the election? Did he not know that the people were sick and tired of the New Deal? They may not yet have heard about it in the White House, but come 1944, even the gentleman from California may hear of it, even he.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I shall not take up the 5 minutes as I simply want to take time to make an announcement to the effect that the committee that was appointed this morning during an informal meeting to discuss the pending Halleck resolution is asked to meet with Mr. LEA, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, out in the hallway here at 2 o'clock.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, after listening to the eloquent and illogical statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], I rise at this time to call attention to the fact that the House on Friday last, by a teller vote of 163 to 111, passed the Hendricks amendment to the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill, providing that "no part of any appropriation in this act shall be used to pay the compensation of William Pickens."

All I have to say is that I seriously question the authority of this House or of this Congress as a whole, including the other body, to pass such an act.

You ask me why, and my answer is—as every lawyer in this body knows or should know—that article I, section 9, of the Constitution specifically says, under the powers denied Congress, that "no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed."

What is a bill of attainder? For the benefit of those members who are not lawyers, let me define a bill of attainder according to annotations of cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to January 1, 1938.

BILL OF ATTAINDER

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. If the punishment be less than death, the act is termed a bill of pains and penalties. Within the meaning of the Constitution bills of attainder include bills of pains and penalties. A bill of attainder may affect the life of an individual, or may confiscate his property, or may do both. In passing such an act the legislative body, in addition to its legitimate functions, exercises the powers and office of judge; it assumes, in the language of the textbooks, judicial magistracy; it pronounces upon the guilt of the party without any of the forms or safeguards of trial; it determines the sufficiency of the proofs produced, whether conformable to the rules of evidence or not; and it fixes the degree of punishment in accordance with its own notions of the enormity of the offense.

The amendment is in fact a bill of pains and penalties, which being contained in the bill of attainder as to penalties less than death.

This amendment, which should be voted on in the House by a separate roll call, comes completely within the definition by the Supreme Court as a bill of pains and penalties, and it should not pass.

If it should pass, as have similar amendments, it will add one more blot on the escutcheon of Congress as a body that is going on record as preferring to legislate its prejudices in defiance of article I, section 9, of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I presume that the Members of this House are anxious to hear, or to have in the RECORD the complete incontrovertible record of William Pickens. I have the the record here, not a record based upon any verbal testimony, not a record based upon what anybody said of him, but a record which he himself made, a record which no one can dispute, and because of the importance of that record I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes, so as to discuss that record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, last week I brought to the attention of the House a long list of the bureaucrats who symbolize this disease of bureaucracy which threatens the parliamentary system of democracy as we have known it in this country from the days of our founding fathers. I want the House to know that I assume full responsibility for placing the names of these persons in the RECORD. As the question of appropriations for the respective departments and agencies arises, I will be prepared to back with incontrovertible and documentary evidence my assertions concerning these individual bureaucrats whom I name and many more whom I did not name in my recent address to the House. I described these individuals who are on the Government pay roll as irresponsible, unrepresentative, radical, and crackpot bureaucrats. I am prepared to prove just that and nothing less than that.

Today, I am prepared to take up in detail the case of William Pickens who is employed as promotion specialist in the Treasury Department at a salary of $5,600 a year. I have been informed that William Pickens gave, or caused to have given on his behalf, certain testimony before the Appropriations Committee of this House in which testimony Pickens denied that he was the same man as the person whose affiliations I cited in my speech on February 1, 1943. Such testimony, if given by Pickens or on his behalf, was absolutely false both in its general import and in its details. Such falsehood compounds the seriousness of the case against William Pickens, and we dare not let this false testimony go unnoticed.

In order to keep my speech within reasonable limits, I cited only seven Communist front affiliations which William Pickens has had as a matter of public record during the past 10 years. Furthermore, there is no question here of mistaken identity. This William Pickens of the seven Communist front affiliations is the same William Pickens who is now employed in the Treasury Department. Instead of the seven Communist affiliations which I cited on Monday a week ago, I shall cite three times seven such affiliations today.

I hardly need to point out that we labor under certain difficulties in having these radical and crackpot bureaucrats removed from the Government pay roll. One of these difficulties, perhaps the chief one, arises from the fact that their superiors or their associates in the respective departments and agencies are forever trying to whitewash them. Such an effort at whitewashing is illustrated by the letter of Harold Graves of the Treasury Department which was read on the floor of this House last Friday. Mark you, the case of William Pickens is not one of a man who comes forward and says frankly that he has had numerous important Communist affiliations in the past but that he now repents of and repudiates his former record. On the contrary, the Appropriations Committee is confronted with false testimony in an effort to conceal Pickens' past Communist record and this House itself is confronted with a feeble effort at whitewashing which ignores the incontrovertible facts in Pickens' public record. These tactics of concealment and whitewashing only add to the gravity of the charges against this Government employee.

First, I wish to call your attention to a circumstance in which the case of William Pickens is unique. In his decision in the case of the deportation of Harry Bridges, the Attorney General, Mr. Biddle, named four Communist-front organizations with which Bridges had been affiliated and found in Bridges' affiliation with these four organizations one of the principal grounds for ordering his deportation from the United States. Now imagine the utter absurdity of the Treasury Department's position when we find that William Pickens was prominently identified with three of these four Communist front organizations. In fact, William Pickens was far more prominently associated with these three Communist front organizations than was Harry Bridges. The three organizations to which I refer were the International Labor Defense, the All America Anti-Imperialist League, and the American League Against War and Fascism. I shall presently show the extent and nature of Pickens' affiliation with all three of them. If the Justice Department finds ground for deporting Harry Bridges in his affiliation with these three Communist fronts, what leg has the Treasury Department to stand on in keeping William Pickens on its pay roll.

It would be hard to find a man anywhere in the United States whose extensive affiliations with Communist-front organizations were of a more serious nature than those of William Pickens, especially in view of the effort which has been made to conceal those affiliations from the Congress. I now propose to take up those affiliations one by one in chronological order.

First. League Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism: Early in 1927, the League Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism held a world congress in Brussels, Belgium. William Pickens was one of four American delegates to this gathering. The Daily Worker of March 9, 1927, gave a complete roster of the delegates from all parts of the world. The list is headed by the name of William Pickens. The other three American delegates were Roger Baldwin, Richard Moore, and Manuel Gomez. Moore and Gomez were prominent leaders of the Communist Party of the United States—known at that time as the Workers Communist Party. Most of the delegates from other parts of the world were the leaders of the Communist movement in their respective countries. The League Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism was under the direct and complete control of the Communist International.

Second. Daily Worker: William Pickens has written numerous articles which have appeared in the Daily Worker. I cite three issues of this official Communist newspaper as samples of those in which many of his articles have appeared. They were the issues of April 5, April 7, and April 20, 1927. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] intimated in his remarks on last Friday that the name of William Pickens might have appeared in the columns of the Daily Worker simply as a part of some news story. I wish to assure him that such was not the case. His name appeared as an active and long-time collaborator with the Communist Party and its front organizations.

Third. Hands Off China Association: In his report to the Sixth World Congress of the Communist International, the secretary of the Communist Party of the United States gave a lengthy report on the work of his party in organizing Hands Off China committees in this country. Any doubt about the strictly Communist control of the Hands Off China Association may be removed by a perusal of the Daily Worker of May 9, 1927, where William Pickens' name appears as a member of the general advisory committee of this organization. In that issue of the Daily Worker, the names of the organization's speakers at a mass meeting in Union Square in New York are listed, and those names read like a roster of the leading Communist Party functionaries of that day. Furthermore, William Pickens, according to the Daily Worker was chairman of the Hands Off China Association. Furthermore, William Pickens, as chairman of this Communist front organization, was in close collaboration with Earl Browder who at that time was in China on an important organizing mission for the Communist International. The New York Herald Tribune of April 27, 1927, contains an excerpt from a letter which Browder wrote to Pickens from China, in which Browder appealed to Pickens for greater financial support for his work. Obviously, Pickens alone was in a position to release this letter to the press. It would appear that Pickens was not at that time concerned about concealing his relations with Earl Browder.

Fourth. All-America Anti-Imperialist League: The letterhead of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League for 1928 lists the name of William Pickens as a member of the national committee of the organization. The fourth national convention report of the Communist Party, a copy of which is in our committee's files, says: "Our party was largely instrumental in the establishment of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League * * *." I could provide a very voluminous file of evidence to show that this organization was one of the Communist Party's front organizations, but suffice it to point out that the Attorney General himself, in his decision on the deportation of Harry Bridges, has characterized it as a Communist front.

Fifth. International Labor Defense: William Pickens was a member of the national committee of the International Labor Defense, according to the organization's letterhead of February 1929. Elizabeth Gurley Flynn was then the national chairman of the International Labor Defense, and the organization was affiliated formally with the International Red Aid of Moscow. Earl Browder and a score of other prominent Communist Party leaders were comembers with Pickens on the national committee of the International Labor Defense. But here again, it ought to be sufficient to call your attention to the fact that the Attorney General in his Bridges decision has branded the International Labor Defense as a Communist front organization.

Sixth. League Against Imperialism: In July 1929, the League Against Imperialism held a world congress in Frankfort-am-Main, Germany. This organization was the parent body, internationally speaking, of the All America Anti-Imperialist League. William Pickens was not only a delegate to the world congress of the organization in Frankfort-am-Main, but he was also one of the leading speakers at the gathering. A portion of his speech at the congress appeared in the Daily Worker of July 30, 1929. The leaders of the congress were by and large avowed Communists of international reputation, and the Communist International was in complete control of the gathering.

Seventh. Prisoners Relief Fund: According to the July 1931 issue of Labor Defender, a Communist publication, William Pickens was a sponsor of the Prisoners Relief Fund whose avowed purpose was to assist in the support of class-war prisoners and their dependents. The Prisoners Relief Fund was organized under the auspices of the International Labor Defense and claimed as cosponsors with Pickens such prominent Communist Party members as Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Michael Gold, Jack Hardy, George Maurer, Anna Rochester, Grace Hutchins, and Bernhard J. Stern.

Eighth. National organizing committee of the United States Congress Against War: On the letterhead of this committee, the name of William Pickens appears as one of the members along with those of William Z. Foster, Herbert Benjamin, Clarence Hathaway, Robert Minor, Gilbert Green, and other equally prominent members of the Communist Party in this country.

Ninth. United States Congress Against War: The program of the United States Congress Against War, held in September-October 1933, lists William Pickens as one of the seven most prominent speakers of the gathering. Earl Browder was one of the other six speakers listed. The Daily Worker of October 2, 1933, carried an account of Pickens' speech immediately following that of Browder.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Pickens did not appear before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DIES. Who appeared for him?

Mr. TABER. The representatives of the Division of Expense and Loans came up with a statement signed by him indicating that he was not the same William Pickens.

Mr. DIES. Remember that the President last year established or had established an interdepartmental committee to determine what organizations are subversive and what organizations are not and that committee found some 12 organizations as subversive, including the National Federation of Constitutional Liberties that had the full page advertisement in this morning's paper. In that case the interdepartmental committee and the Attorney General found that the organization was not only Communist, but that its Communist nature was so well known and established they could not see how anyone could be innocent of the connection.

Furthermore, Pickens is quoted in the Daily Worker report of the meeting as having given voice to the following Marxist viewpoint:

> To take the profit motive out of war, we must take the class-profit opportunities out of our economic system.

Again I call your attention to the fact that the Attorney General has branded the United States Congress Against War a Communist front enterprise.

Tenth. National Committee United States Congress Against War: The Daily Worker of October 3, 1933, reported that William Pickens had been named to the national committee of the United States Congress Against War. This national committee was composed almost exclusively of well-known Communist Party members and a sprinkling of equally well-known Communist fellow travelers.

Eleventh. American League Against War and Fascism: Shortly after the meeting of the United States Congress Against War, William Pickens was made one of the two vice chairmen of the American League Against War and Fascism. The other vice chairman was Earl Browder. The Attorney General has branded the organization as a Communist front. Its program called for the sabotage of our national defense both in time of peace and in time of war.

Twelfth. Medical Bureau and North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy: According to the New Masses, Communist Party weekly, of September 27, 1938, William Pickens addressed a mass meeting of this organization which our committee unanimously found to be a Communist front. Speaking with Pickens on that occasion was the well-known and avowed Communist Edward K. Barsky.

Thirteenth. New Masses: William Pickens contributed an article for the issue of the New Masses of May 30, 1939. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that the New Masses is a strict Communist Party publication which has never deviated one jot or tittle from the Communist Party line.

Fourteenth. Workers School: The official school of the Communist Party where the party's members are trained in revolutionary tactics for the overthrow of the United States Government is known as the Workers School. According to the New Masses of November 14, 1939, William Pickens was a lecturer at this institution.

Fifteenth. American Rescue Ship Mission: According to the Daily Worker of December 2, 1940, William Pickens was one of the headlined speakers at a mass meeting under the auspices of the American Rescue Ship Mission. The meeting and the organization which controlled it were both completely Communist. The tone of the meeting may be accurately gaged by the following Daily Worker account of the speech which the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] delivered on the occasion:

The fighting Congressman pledged that he would never cease his fight against the war which the American imperialists were rushing into headlong.

Sixteenth. Council for Pan American Democracy: According to the New Masses of December 3, 1940, William Pickens was one of the signers of a public manifesto issued under the auspices of the Council for Pan American Democracy on behalf of Luiz Carlos Prestes. Prestes was a member of the executive committee of the Communist International. In 1935, Prestes led an armed Communist insurrection in Brazil, and as a result of his treasonable enterprise was sentenced to a prison term of 16 years. It was on this Communist leader's behalf that William Pickens joined with a group of American Communists and fellow travelers. Earl Browder's own statement on the subject of Prestes' activities and imprisonment appeared in the Daily Worker of January 3, 1941, and is so enlightening that I quote it at this point:

Today when our own American ruling class is desperately trying to drag our country into the present imperialist war and is carrying through a policy of economic and political aggrandizement aimed at the further subjugation of the peoples and nations of this hemisphere, the struggle to liberate Luis Carlos Prestes becomes an integral part of the fight for freedom, peace, and against imperialist war * * * Facing his enemies and the enemies of his country—after being held in jail for more than 5 years—Prestes used this only opportunity to appeal to his people, encouraging them to unite and to follow the example of the great October revolution as the only path that can lead to their final liberation.

Seventeenth. United American Spanish Aid Committee: According to the New Masses of December 3, 1940, William Pickens was a prominent speaker for the United American Spanish Aid Committee. This committee was a strictly Communist Party enterprise whose executive secretary was the well-known and avowed Communist Party member, Fred Biedenkapp.

Eighteenth. National Federation for Constitutional Liberties: According to the Daily Worker of December 19, 1940, William Pickens joined in an appeal on behalf of the notorious Communist, Sam Darcy, who had been convicted in the State of California. The appeal was issued under the auspices of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, which the Attorney General himself has branded as a subversive organization. Sam Darcy, whose real name is Dardeck, was candidate for Governor of California in 1937. At the seventh world congress of the Communist International, Sam Darcy delivered a speech against the United States which was so insurrectionary in character that the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, issued a vigorous protest to the Russian Government.

Nineteenth. American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born: According to the organization's letterhead, William Pickens was one of the sponsors of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born. Our committee has found this organization to be a Communist front.

Twentieth. Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights: According to its own literature, William Pickens was one of the sponsors of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights This organization was one of the chapters of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, which the Attorney General has branded as subversive

Twenty-first. American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom: According to its own literature, which is in our committee's files, William Pickens was also a sponsor of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom. In our report to the House on June 25, 1942, our committee found this organization to be a Communist front.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the record of William Pickens' Communist affiliations. It is a long record which extends over a period of 16 years The record leaves absolutely no doubt about Pickens' close collaboration with the Communist Party and its front organizations.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said that William Pickens is a colored man, and that, therefore, there is some attempt to single him out. Let me make this very clear, that our committee has said or rather I know that I have said as chairman, and I am sure the other members of this committee concur in it, time and time again, that the great majority of the colored people of this country are loyal, patriotic Americans. In all the names that I have given to the Congress there have been only two or three who happen to be colored people. I want to make that absolutely clear, because I think it would be most unfortunate if it were to go out to the country that this amendment is based upon any prejudice whatsoever against William Pickens on account of his race. He happens to have been active in Communist movements, like James Ford was, but when you consider that 99½ percent of the colored people have been loyal at all times to the Government, that they have time and again rejected every appeal made by the Communist leaders in their attempt to capitalize upon prejudice or the feelings that might exist between races, in order to build up their strength, when you consider that, I think it is only fair that I and other Members of this House should pay a sincere tribute to the millions of loyal patriotic colored people in the United States.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I did not understand the statement of the gentleman with reference to what the Attorney General said about the organization.

(During the delivery of the foregoing Mr. DIES asked and received unanimous consent to print in full certain quotations and excerpts.)

Mr. DIES. The Attorney General designated in his Bridges opinion 4 organizations that were controlled by the Communist Party. William Pickens was prominently identified with 3 of those organizations. Then the Interdepartmental Committee, established at the instance of the President or Attorney General a year or a year and a half ago, found some 12 or 13 organizations to be subversive organizations. On the floor of this House last September, I placed in the RECORD the findings of this committee, a committee that did not confer with us, did not consult with us, but a committee selected down in the departments, and which confirmed what we had found. More than that, they found in stronger language than we ever did that those 12 organizations were controlled by Communists. Now, gentlemen, I read into the RECORD at the time the name of 19 officials of this Government who were officers and officials in one of the organizations which the Interdepartmental Committee and the Attorney General found were communistic, so communistic that no one could be mistaken about its identity. I then ask the Attorney General and the Department of Justice, "Under your own findings, you say these organizations are subversive, and here are the letterheads of the organizations showing Government employees who are officers in them."

Mr. COX. Let me ask the gentleman, was the organization that carried the full-page ad in this morning's Washington Post one of them?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

Mr. FORD. Assuming all you say is true, are we still entitled to violate the Constitution by passing a bill that violates article 1, section 9?

Mr. DIES. The gentleman knows what I said on Friday. I said that I thought the proper procedure and what I wanted was for the appropriations committee to hear the evidence that we had, and then to bring the parties themselves before the committee. Certainly if that is done, if we cannot make out a case, then the Appropriations Committee can say, "Well, we heard this evidence, but we will not agree with it." What I want the gentleman to agree to is this, that if there are organizations that the Department of Justice and the Interdepartmental Committee and our own committee and everyone else in authority who has studied it, have found to be subversive organizations—organizations that the gentleman himself would not defend, and here are Government officials who are officers in those organizations—and many of the organizations are actively engaged in smearing Congress—that these Government officials must be dismissed.

Mr. FORD. Oh, everybody smears Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last sentence.

Mr. Chairman, I voted for the creation of the Dies committee and for its several extensions. I expect to vote for another extension, because I feel it is doing a necessary work. But there is an angle to this question that I would like to discuss in the brief time that has been allotted to me, and that should not be overlooked.

This body is made up of 435 men and women, of whom 434 belong to the Caucasian race and 1 to the Negro race. I voted to expel from or to prevent any Government bureau employing the 38 Communists Chairman DIES read to the House one day last week. I am wondering what the country will say when the people find out that we rejected, by a small margin, the proposal to place an embargo upon their employment in Government service, but that when the name of this man Pickens came up, a colored man, a descendant from people who were brought here in chains and against their will, brought here in servitude, this great body singled out a poor colored man for punishment and practically gave what amounts to a whitewash to the 37 white companions who were equally or more guilty. I understand all these fine distinctions, or I hope I do, but the cold fact remains that we voted on Friday to bar from public employment one poor colored man and we refused to take similar action with 37 white men. My God, that is almost lynch law. It is what is termed shotgun justice out in my country.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes, I yield if I have any more time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think I can help the gentleman out. I know that the gentleman wants to be perfectly fair about this and he has shown a fair attitude, I know, when he went along with the other 38 or 39 persons.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is right.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we ought to expel all of them, but let me tell the gentleman why we returned to the one name. It was because this one man was the only one affected by this particular bill. When the whole amendment was not adopted, I turned around and got the one man affected by this bill. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that anybody can accuse us of having any feeling against the colored race, when we had two Negroes on the list and 37 or 38 or 39 white people. The only reason we singled this one man out was because he was the only one that was actually and directly affected by the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me say to the gentleman from Florida that the proposal to bar the 38 from Government employment was not made on a point of order. Had it been I would not be on my feet today. It was made by a vote of the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is correct.

Mr. KNUTSON. That changes the picture altogether.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But when the other bills come up we are going to take them also.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, maybe we will and again, maybe we will not. I am not going to gamble on what this House will do later. I cannot approve of what we have done. It is un-American and contrary to the spirit of the Bill of Rights.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes and to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes and to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, it is with the greatest measure of hesitation that I, a new Member, rise to address this august body at this time. I am sustained only by the knowledge that I can bring to this committee an understanding of the background of this subject matter better than any other person in this assembly.

I have known William Pickens for more than 40 years. I know his activities among my people; and when I say "My people" I am not one who is sensitive to color; I am not one who is ashamed of what God made me. I stand before you further sustained by the knowledge that no one can question the loyalty of WILLIAM L. DAWSON to the United States of America. During the last war although I was above draft age and did not have to go, yet, believing it was the duty of every citizen to rally to the colors in time of danger I volunteered, was commissioned a first lieutenant of infantry and led black Americans in battle. I saw them fight and I saw them die for this flag and country of ours. And if the years had not shattered this old frame of mine, and accident had not maimed me, instead of standing in Congress of the United States, I would today, if I had my way, be back once again defending the flag, the only flag we know.

William Pickens has been charged with being a Communist. The gentleman who recited the great organizations that he belonged to, and so forth, referred back to 1927. I wish I could command words well enough to convey to you something of the psychology of an underprivileged people, something of the psychology of a people who are told they have every right in fact, but who know they do not have those rights in actuality. I wish you could envision in your own minds how we struggle wherever we can to make the Constitution and our democracy a living reality. I know something about communism; I know how the Communists have tried to infiltrate among our people, playing upon the ills we have suffered, and so forth; and I know how often they did not come to us under the name of Communists, but came with loud-sounding names, talking of freedom, talking of democracy, and talking of inalienable rights, things that are dear to the heart of every American, be he white or be he black. At some time or other the names of many of us might have been found connected with some of these organizations before we knew their true complexion, because the more prominent the individuals were the more insidious was their approach. I am telling you things you know.

You refer back to 1927; that is a long time ago. Many names might be found on the rolls of some organization that has since been deemed a subversive organization.

I say to you that William Pickens is not a Communist and has never been a Communist. William Pickens has not knowingly affiliated himself with a Communist organization, knowing it was Communist. Certainly he might have spoken at communistic meetings; I have done the same thing; in fact, I do not fear Communists, I do not fear them, I fight them and I know that is the only way we can hold to our ideals. We have not yielded to them in their effort to infiltrate our group; and certainly I know the voice of William Pickens has been heard ever in defense of the high ideals of this country.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that his name has been used, but I know of my own knowledge that when he found it out he sent in his resignation. This has been done by many a loyal American, white and black, who went into the thing for an ideal only to find that the thing had been organized for another purpose.

Mr. Chairman, this thing is far reaching in its effects. I know this Congress will not condemn any man because of his race, and I am not standing here pleading for that reason, because I have seen the American sense of fair play demonstrated on many an occasion. The only hope "black" America has is the fundamental ideal of fair play that we know rests deep down in the bosom of the majority of the American public. So I am not saying that this thing is done on account of color, but I am saying to you that those who make the charge are not in a position to know of their own knowledge whereof they speak. I do not know who their agents are. I know William Pickens was never called before the committee and given an opportunity to answer any charge against him. I do not know who their agents are, but let me tell you their agents do not know William Pickens like we know him.

They only know what might be seen in a list of a certain number of organizations. But we know William Pickens in the flesh. We know that William Pickens has been the means of going up and down the length and breadth of this country teaching Americanism. I tell you of my own knowledge, and from my knowledge of doing work among my own group, that he was deserted by a certain crowd that was insistent on certain demands and William Pickens demanded that the Government be placed first. He was for the preservation of America above all domestic problems, and for that reason he was deserted by many of those who at one time had been associated with him.

He has been the means of millions of dollars of our money going into War bonds. One insurance company alone has bought over a million dollars' worth of bonds. Others have bought up to the limit and will buy. The rank and file of us are going down in our pockets to buy. We do not care what the organizations may be, I may say to the gentleman from Texas, but this we do know, that William Pickens has never been a Communist. William Pickens is a true American and I state that with all the integrity of a man who would fight and die for America today.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, if you will be so good as to think for just one moment with me, I shall try in my own humble way to assign another reason why this House took the action it did last Friday. We did not as a body—I know I as a Member did not—charge or believe in the charges that were made against William Pickens or any other of the 38. I did not try them before any bar of justice. They were not arraigned. I was not a juror nor was I a judge. I was a servant of the American people, and I believed then and I believe now that William Pickens and those other 38 members have no property right in those jobs which they now enjoy. I knew then and I know now that there are other Americans in this country whose loyalty has never been questioned, who in 1927 or in any other year did not subscribe their names to any roster not knowing what it was. Since they have no property right in those jobs, I believed then, and you and I believe now, that their loyalty has been questioned and that is a mandate that their names be stricken from any pay roll where they receive money of the taxpayers as their reward.

That is what this House did. This House tried no one. This House listened to no charges and as for me, and I think the majority of this membership, any man who has ever willfully with knowledge or without knowledge had his name appear in some funny organization that turned out to be not what they proclaimed, I say that in itself is quite enough for me insofar as my vote is concerned to strike his name from any taxpayers' pay roll.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to point out one other thing. The gentleman from Illinois made an able speech, and we all admire him for it. He says that the chairman of the committee investigating un-American activities, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] pointed out organizations in 1927. But William Pickens belonged to some of these organizations in 1940. If he has the educational background he claims he has, and he is worth $5,600 a year to the Government as a specialist, he has better sense than that.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. The more education and the more ability he has the more dangerous he is if his loyalty has ever been questioned.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. It ought to be pointed out that the Treasury Department appeared for him before the Appropriations Committee, as I understand it, and submitted an affidavit in which Pickens denied all these things. If he had come before the committee and said, "Yes, I was in them, but I was misled" or if any of these people would say that it might be different.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. The Treasury Department never appeared before the Appropriations Committee that I know anything about.

Mr. DIES. That is what the gentleman said a few moments ago. Did the Treasury Department submit an affidavit of William Pickens?

Mr. TABER. No; they came up here with a signed statement that they had in their files. I asked them to come up and show it to me. Mr. Adams, representing the Division of Loans and Currency, came up here and showed me his file.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. I decline to yield any further.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry this House insists on operating on the theory that charges were placed or sustained or denied or were not denied. We have not operated on charges. Constitutionally, and as the mechanism is set up, you and I cannot entertain charges. But it has been sufficient for you and me to be informed that the character and the loyalty of the 38 persons have been questioned. That is enough for me to suggest, making it mandatory perhaps, that they be stricken from the pay roll, just as though I would fire an employee of mine who had been disloyal to this Government or disloyal to me.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Florida. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. The gentleman knows as I know and every other informed Member of this body knows, that if these "reds" are ever stricken from the pay rolls of the Government, this Congress has got to do it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to no one in defense of the dignity of this House, and I shall always take a place in the front line to fight for its prerogatives. Because of my jealousy for the standing of this legislative body I was troubled over the week end at the vote that was taken on Friday last, which in effect removes one, William Pickens, from the public pay roll.

I rise to express the hope that somehow this great body may be persuaded to strike from the pending Treasury-Post Office Department appropriation bill this amendment. I cannot believe that this House, custodian of the people's rights and liberties, will permit itself to follow a course of action which arbitrarily denies a citizen a right to be heard on charges against him. Such procedure makes us unworthy of our trust. It establishes a precedent foreign to American principles of justice.

That it is within the power of Congress to place this limitation in an appropriation bill, denying some officeholder a salary, I do not dispute. Nor do I question but that this is the only way we have to remove from public office people who are undesirable because of their subversive activities, in view of the apparent unwillingness of the executive branch of the Government to deal with the problem. It is because of this failure of the executive branch to carry out the expressed will and intent of Congress that we are required to act.

But, Mr. Chairman, we must not ourselves become arrogant and arbitrary in our acts. I am in sympathy with the suggestion made last Friday that each of these individuals alleged to be undesirable be given the opportunity to appear before the Committee on Appropriations to answer the charges made against them by the Dies committee and be confronted with that committee's evidence. We will then be in a position to act and to act judiciously. If the committee should find the charges to be substantiated and to be true in fact, and accordingly present its findings and recommendations to the House, we shall then be in a position to act on a limitation of this character.

In the instant case, Mr. Chairman, whereby William Pickens, of the Treasury Department, is being removed from his office, he has never had his day in court, so to speak. He has never appeared before any committee of this House to answer the charges made against him. He has never had an opportunity to deny, disprove, or even explain those things which some consider acceptable evidence of his undesirability as a public servant. I cannot approve such procedure. It is un-American in the fullest sense of the word.

Let us not forget that when we take such action as this against an individual we brand him for the rest of his life. As long as he lives he will be exploining this incident in his life. To convict a man is a serious act, and to convict a man without giving him an opportunity to be heard is arbitrary, to say the least.

I doubt if there are three Members who have ever seen Mr. Pickens. I did something I think any committee could have done. I sent for Mr. Pickens and he came up to my office. This I did as a single Member, having nothing to do with the investigation of subversive activities, but merely seeking the truth. I went over the charges made against him and Mr. Pickens denied categorically having any connection with any communistic body. I then contacted his immediate employer, the son-in-law of Mr. Frederick Delano, uncle of the President, a man by the name of Lawrence Houghteling, whom I have known all my life, and I asked him about William Pickens.

This man William Pickens has had an interesting and a very American history. Born of slave parentage, as a child he carried on a little business of rowing a ferry boat across a river. After attending a secondary school he entered Talladega College, which he left to enter my own alma mater, Yale University. He graduated from Yale with Phi Beta Kappa key, taking the Ten Eyck prize, and standing among the first seven men of his class.

I would like only one thing to be done. I do not like ex parte, star chamber procedure to take place in our Government. If Mr. Pickens is convicted of committing one of the most heinous crimes for which a man can be indicted, that of being disloyal to his country in time of war, then let him pay the penalty, but give him a day in court.

I hope that when this Committee rises an opportunity will be given to do the American thing—to give this man a chance, together with the 38 others the Dies committee has listed, to defend himself before his peers.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have had a lot of talk here today, and I want to get one or two things cleared up in the minds of everybody.

In the first place, there has been a lot of talk here about discrimination against the colored race. I say to you that any man coming from the South knows that a southerner does not refer to a colored man as "mister." When I started talking about this man and getting information on him I did not even know he was a colored man. I got in the habit of saying "Mr. Pickens" and made that statement on the floor two or three times, which is evidence to you that I did not even know he was a colored man and did not care about it.

If we are going to keep one of these Communists in the Government, let us keep them all, and keep William Pickens; but if we intend to get the others out in the bills by which they are covered, then let us get Pickens out, because Pickens is just as much of a Communist as anybody else.

You say he has had no day in court. We keep talking about court procedure here. I disagree with anybody that this is a court. If it were, let me give you just one little example of court procedure, and let you clear up your minds once and for all concerning certain people who have been heard in court.

We have had a sensational trial out in California for about 3 weeks, in which the actor, Errol Flynn, was charged with certain statutory crimes against young girls. Last Saturday, I believe it was, a jury came in and cleared Mr. Flynn of those charges after he had had his day in court. The jury, in effect, said that Mr. Flynn is not guilty. But I ask every Member of this House to ask himself this question: "In spite of the fact that the jury said Mr. Flynn was not guilty, would you want your daughter to take a trip with Mr. Flynn on his yacht to Catalina Island?"

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking within the purview of the bill and is not in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am talking within the purview of the bill. If the gentleman wants to have something to say against what I am saying, he can take time to speak against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am in order, I have been in order, and I expect to stay in order.

That was just one little example. It might have sounded facetious, but let us carry it a little further. I know good and well there are many men in this House who are loyal and who have sat upon juries and, after men have been acquitted of certain charges made against them, were still convinced that the men were guilty. It may be that we could not take any one of these men before a jury and convict him of being a Communist, but in our minds when we go back and look at the record we know good and well that they are Communists, and there is no question in our minds about it.

With regard to the day in court, let me give you an example of something that happened. When it was found out by the Treasury Department that an amendment of this sort was going to be offered they sent young Mr. Charles Adams to see the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. They thought he was going to offer the amendment. Then Mr. Adams came over to see me. He pushed in front of me the investigation made by the special investigator of the Treasury Department and said, "See here, they cleared him." I said, "I have a file, and I want to ask you some questions. Did you know so and so?" "No, I did not know that." I said, "Well, makes notes on it.

He did make notes on it, and said, "I will go back to the Department this afternoon and go into this matter fully." I said, "Well, hurry up; I am going to tell the House today that I am going to offer this amendment."

He went to the Department and took a deposition from William Pickens. He came back up here while I was on the floor telling the House I was going to offer the amendment when we reached the reading of the bill for amendment under the 5-minute rule. Then I went out to see him. He said, "Here is the deposition we had from Mr. Pickens." I said, "Thank you. I will take it over to the office and read it." He said, "Wait a minute. That is the original, and I cannot let it go." I said, "Give me a copy." He replied that he did not bring a copy with him; and I said, "Why in the hell didn't you. You know I wanted one?" His reply was, "I don't know; I just forgot it." Then I said further, "Will you give me one tomorrow?" He said, "Yes." I waited for him all of the morning, and I instructed my secretary if Mr. Adams made any attempt to get in touch with me, to be sure that he got in touch with me, and until this day I have not had another word from Mr. Adams. I say to you that that deposition was nothing but a simple evasion.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman will not agree with his colleague Mr. CANNON and myself, and many of us, in the statement if the Communists are ever taken off the Government pay roll, Congress has to do the job.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is correct. Congress is going to have to do the job in spite of the Board that the President appointed, and I shall not consent to the withdrawal of my amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing and binding: For printing and binding for the Bureau of Narcotics, $4,000.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall try not even to use the 5 minutes, because as I said at the beginning of the day, I have a special order which I intend to use at the close of the day, to discuss this whole question thoroughly; but there is one thing that I am impelled to say at this time, because I do not think any more time should elapse before it is said. I am not addressing myself to the individual case of William Pickens, but to the general proposition. The list of the 39 people submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] was, as he said himself earlier today, submitted by himself, and not by the action of the Committee on un-American Activities. Indeed, I have tried myself since the list was submitted, to see the evidence. The gentleman from Texas, of course, told me I could see it, but so far I have not been able to. It has not been available.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; not at this time. According to the statement of the gentleman from Texas himself he submitted this list, and he said it was not a list of people who necessarily were even charged by him with being Communists or having Communist affiliations. He said today, and he said before, it was a list of people who were covered by the category of being "crackpots." Those people are in that category in the opinion of the gentleman from Texas. He is entitled to that opinion, of course. But the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has defined the issue in all its great seriousness when he said he believed the House had a right to take people off the Federal payroll if in the opinion of the House there was something objectionable about them, regardless of what charge was made against them, regardless of whether they were loyal to our Nation, regardless of whether they were doing a good job. There you have the issue and for my part I am of course completely opposed to such arbitrary and unfair action. Over and over again it has been said today that this is an issue of disloyalty. It is no such thing. If it can be shown that these people are disloyal to this Nation, if it can be shown that they are Communists or Nazis or Fascists, that is a different matter. But this is not at issue.

This is an issue as to whether people are in the category of being crackpots in somebody's opinion. Anybody in the House could rise and make up such a category and dump some Federal employees into it, but if the House proposes to proceed that way we are going to make terrible mistakes. On Friday last we might have passed an amendment if seven more votes had been given it, which would have proscribed a man in the Federal Army of the United States and another man elected by the votes of the Army and the Navy and the Maritime Commission to the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee, and a woman whose character and loyalty are vouched for by a priest of the Catholic Church in a letter I have in my possession. Such mistakes ought not to be made. The House should not say that people who are more progressive in their thoughts than the majority of Members should be accused of disloyalty any more than you would want to say that people who are conservative in their thoughts, more so than the majority, ought to be proscribed. Let us be clear; let us be fair; let us call a spade a spade; and let us keep the issue where it really and truly belongs. It seems to me that it is perfectly fair and just, and the gentleman from Texas himself made this condition, that every last person should be heard by the Committee on Appropriations before the House takes action in a matter of that kind.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The country has the impression that this list was submitted to the Dies committee. Do I understand that the committee as such has never considered this list?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is correct. I think the gentleman from Texas himself made that point. It has not come before the committee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Was it ever presented to the committee?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; it was not.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Is the gentleman a member of that committee?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I was, but I am not at the moment because there is no such committee now.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The gentleman means that no list was ever submitted to him as a member or a former member of a former committee, as presented by Mr. Dies?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; it was not. I think it is important for the House to understand that. The gentleman had a right to make his speech. I believe the gentleman said himself he took the sole responsibility for it, but I believe before action like this is taken a committee of the House ought to go over these matters. I am positive that list, taken as a whole, is not a list where the charges of disloyalty, communism, and Communist affiliations can be fairly made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not intend to object to the gentleman's request, but I think we had better get along with this bill. We have had a great deal of speechmaking today on all sorts of things. After this I think I shall have to adhere to the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the request of the gentleman is granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing that has been made clear by this debate, and that is that the American people are opposed to communism in this country, and that practically every Member of Congress is either opposed to it or else lacks the courage to defend it.

That does not mean that we are criticising Russia about her form of government. That is Russia's business. But we are opposed to these American Communists who are dedicated to the overthrow of this Government; and it is our duty to see that they are every one driven from power, and from the Federal pay roll.

I am convinced that this Negro, William Pickens, who is now employed in the Treasury Department at $5,600 a year, is a Communist. The Dies committee has so found, after a most careful investigation. It is known that he has addressed Communist meetings in this country and abroad, and that he has been affiliated with 21 subversive organizations. But his supporters say that he was ignorant of the fact that they were Communist meetings; and yet they say he is a graduate of Yale. I suppose if he had taken a post-graduate course at Harvard he would have known when he was addressing a Communist meeting.

In my opinion he did know, he is bound to have known, that these were Communist meetings, and that these were Communist organizations he was joining, and serving. By all means he should be stricken from the Government pay roll.

When the Nation's life is at hazard, it is no time to quibble over a man who has been connected with 1 subversive organization, much less with 21 of them, even though he pleads ignorance of the probable consequences of his own acts and at the same time exhibits a diploma from Yale as an evidence of his qualifications.

To keep this Negro on the pay roll of this Government in a key position at $5,600 a year is simply unthinkable to me. Yesterday you voted to strike him from the pay roll because he was red; today you propose to vote him back on because he is black, although the facts have not changed.

I voted to strike him off when I thought he was a white man, and I shall certainly not vote to put him back on because he is a Negro.

The other day some Member arose and said that because we mention the word "communism" we are criticizing Russia. That is a mistake. As I said, we are not trying to dictate the form of government that Russia has. We are not trying to dictate the form of government that China has. But we do propose to perpetuate the form of government we have here—the one our forefathers established for us.

I call your attention to the fact that communism is disappearing in Russia today, if it has not gone entirely. I pointed out sometime ago that when these Communists who had been preying upon the people of Russia, as some of them in this country are preying upon us, saw guns given to the Ukrainians, the Cossacks, and the White Russians, and realized that those guns would shoot in any direction, they would take to cover. A short time ago it was announced that every political commissar had been driven from the Russian army. Why? Because those Russian people have gone back to their workship of God. They have gone back to the Christian religion. They have gone back to the fundamentals of civilization. When this war is over those men who are today baring their breasts to German bayonets are going to have their land back, their homes back, and their freedom back, and, above all, their right to worship God to suit themselves.

Now, to show that I was right in that contention, I want to read an article that appeared in the Washington Post this morning. It is very short and I want to call your attention to it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will yield after I read this article. It is headed "Mold of communism broken," Russian writer declares here:

A noted Russian writer yesterday declared her homeland had "broken the mold of communism" and expressed the belief that the war may mark the end of the revolutionary form of government which Lenin established in 1917.

Addressing the Charles Carroll Forum in the Willard Hotel, Helen Iswolsky said communism never had expressed the "deep aspirations of the Russian masses" and that the people always had resisted both its methods and antireligious measures.

CURRENT TRENDS CITED

As indications of what the future may hold for Russia, she cited these current trends:

Current literary works no longer have Communist themes; many national heroes—"they weren't Communists"—have been revived; the slogans of Lenin do not furnish battle cries for Russian armies; military leaders rather than political commissars are now in control of the fighting fronts and largely of the home front.

And Stalin no longer leads the Russian people; he follows them, said the speaker, who is the author of Soviet Man Now and Light Before Dusk, and the daughter of the late Alexander Iswolsky, Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs in 1906–10 and Ambassador to Paris during the last war.

"If the sins of bolshevism are great, and I do not seek to diminish them," she declared, "they have been washed in the blood and tears of the Russian people—in the blood and tears of the innocent," for the masses are not, she said, and never have been, godless Communists. "Russia has entered upon a period of deep revival and purification."

ALWAYS CHRISTIAN LAND

Her homeland, Miss Iswolsky said, always has remained a Christian land, peopled by free, loving, and humane individuals.

She indirectly attributed the "miracle of faith" which lifted the siege of Leningrad and made of Stalingrad a graveyard of German ambitions to another "great miracle"—this one wrought by Hitler, who united all the Russian people against him and awakened their strong national spirit.

The speaker found in the guerrilla fighters, who have wrought such havoc upon German armies, something of the true spirit of Russia and said that they and people like them would have a large share in molding the Russia of the future.

"What they want," Miss Iswolsky reported, "is the freedom of all, the protection of the weak, and a good Christian peace."

But the unfortunate thing is that these Communists have flooded into this country, and some of them seem to have wormed their way into key positions in various departments of government.

Do you think when one of our boys on Guadalcanal sees a bush shake and observes a bayonet sticking over the brush and behind it a slant-eyed Japanese, that he is going to wait to investigate to see whether or not he is a friend or an enemy?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman, of course, knows that the question is the propriety or impropriety of striking these names off of the pay roll.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. If the Congress has the power to appropriate money for the salaries of the directors of the different departments, has it not the power to withhold money from individuals employed in the departments?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly; and the Dies committee has found, on positive proof, that this Negro, William Pickens, has been connected with 21 of these Communist organizations that were dedicated to the proposition of destroying this Government.

There is a Japanese organization in this country known as The Black Dragon Society that is operating among the Negroes all over this country. It has been organizing the Negroes in every State in this Union, and members of that society have been praying for Japan to win the war. They have gone into the hardware stores in many places and bought up all the firearms and ammunition in stock. Do any of you doubt that? If so, make some investigation. They are all over the country. They are in Washington and on streetcars and busses today; they are stirring up all the trouble they can. Less than 3 days ago a secretary to a Member of Congress heard one of them say:

> Well, just wait until the Japs get through cleaning them up, and then we will have our own way.

Are we going to sit here and wait until this trouble comes, this revolution that Japan and her satellites have been praying and working for? This Black Dragon Society has been operating in this country for more than 30 years. Until Russia entered the war, it was linked up with the Communists throughout the world; and in my opinion it is linked up with the American Communists now.

The F. B. I. planted a dictaphone in a large hall in Harlem, N. Y., and recorded 3 hours of speeches made by members of this Black Dragon Society to a large audience of Negroes celebrating the Japanese victory at Pearl Harbor.

Several of those Negro speakers were tried and convicted.

In a trial held in East St. Louis a few days ago, in which some Negro members of this Black Dragon Society were convicted of subversive activities, they testified that there were hundreds of thousands of members of this organization among the Negroes of this country.

Their plan is to stir up trouble with the white people in every way they can. The better element of the Negroes are worried over the situation, and if something is not done to drag these traitors into the open, prosecute them, and break up this subversive movement, I fear we are headed for serious race trouble; and that is exactly what Japan and Germany want.

The Dies committee has rendered a wonderful service to this Nation. It has not been a pleasant duty for them to perform, to run down and expose individuals who occupy important positions in this Government of ours, which they were working to destroy. Now when this committee has performed that patriotic duty and laid the evidence before Congress, it is our duty to back them up; and I, for one, expect to do so and to vote to remove this Negro, William Pickens, as well as the rest of them from the Federal pay roll.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I serve notice that at the conclusion of the gentleman's speech I am going to ask that the reading of the bill be continued.

Mr. DIES. Let us have the full record of this case so the House may have the facts.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think it has been very full up to now.

Mr. DIES. I have no desire to talk at all, but I have here the full and complete record, and I think the House ought to have it. I did not finish when I had time before.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. DIES. Let me say in the beginning, Mr. Chairman, that in only very few cases can you prove by direct evidence a man's membership in the Communist Party. We have had them before us many times. We undertook to subpena their membership records, but they came before us and perjured themselves and said they did not have any membership records. They come before us and deny that they are members of the Communist Party. It is a secret organization. Very few of them, with the exception of the recognized leaders, ever admit that they are members of the organization, yet we have membership cards that have been obtained under subpena showing that not less than 165,000 people in the United States are members. So if one were compelled to prove communism by membership cards, in 99 percent of the cases one would be unable to do so. The next best proof is to find out what the associations of a man have been, what organizations he has been affiliated with.

I have given for the RECORD 21 Communist front organizations that William Pickens has been prominently identified with. Let me read some more of them, so you will have the complete case up to 1940. Let us take, for instance, the Prisoners' Relief Fund.

Seventh. Prisoners' Relief Fund: According to the July 1931 issue of Labor Defender—a Communist publication—William Pickens was a sponsor of the Prisoners' Relief Fund, whose avowed purpose was to assist in the support of "class war prisoners and their dependents." The Prisoners' Relief Fund was organized under the auspices of the International Labor Defense and claimed as cosponsors with Pickens such prominent Communist Party members as Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Michael Gold, Jack Hardy, George Maurer, Anna Rochester, Grace Hutchins, and Bernhard J. Stern.

Eighth National Organizing Committee of the United States Congress Against War: On the letterhead of this committee the name of William Pickens appears as one of the members along with those of William Z. Foster, Herbert Benjamin, Clarence Hathaway, Robert Minor, Gilbert Green, and other equally prominent members of the Communist Party in this country.

Ninth. United States Congress Against War: The program of the United States Congress Against War, held in September–October 1933, lists William Pickens as one of the seven most prominent speakers of the gathering. Earl Browder was one of the other six speakers listed. The Daily Worker of October 2, 1933, carried an account of Pickens' speech, immediately following that of Browder.

Furthermore, Pickens is quoted in the Daily Worker report of the meeting as having given voice to the following Marxist viewpoint:

> To take the profit motive out of war we must take the class-profit opportunities out of our economic system.

And I am quoting Mr. William Pickens:

> To take the profit motive out of war we must take the class-profit opportunities out of our economic system.

Again I call your attention to the fact that the Attorney General has branded the United States Congress Against War as a Communist front enterprise.

Congress Against War and Fascism. That is an organization our committee found to be Communist, as did the President's Interdepartmental Committee, and the Department of Justice concurred in the findings.

Tenth. National Committee United States Congress Against War: The Daily

Worker of October 3, 1933, reported that William Pickens had been named to the national committee of the United States Congress Against War. This national committee was composed almost exclusively of well-known Communist Party members and a sprinkling of equally well-known Communist fellow travelers.

Eleventh. American League Against War and Fascism: Shortly after the meeting of the United States Congress Against War, William Pickens was made one of the two vice chairmen of the American League Against War and Fascism. The other vice chairman was Earl Browder. The Attorney General has branded the organization as a Communist front. Its program called for the sabotage of our national defense both in time of peace and in time of war.

Twelfth. Medical Bureau and North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy: According to the New Masses, Communist Party weekly, of September 27, 1938, William Pickens addressed a mass meeting of this organization which our committee unanimously found to be a Communist front. Speaking with Pickens on that occasion was the well-known and avowed Communist, Edward K. Barsky.

Thirteenth. New Masses: William Pickens contributed an article for the issue of the New Masses of May 30, 1939. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that the New Masses is a strict Communist Party publication which has never deviated one jot or tittle from the Communist Party line.

Fourteenth. Workers School: The official school of the Communist Party where the party's members are trained in revolutionary tactics for the overthrow of the United States Government is known as the Workers School. According to the New Masses of November 14, 1939, William Pickens was a lecturer at this institution.

Fifteenth. American Rescue Ship Mission: According to the Daily Worker of December 2, 1940, William Pickens was one of the headlined speakers at a mass meeting under the auspices of the American Rescue Ship Mission. The meeting and the organization which controlled it were both completely Communist. The tone of the meeting may be accurately gaged by the following Daily Worker account of the speech which the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] delivered on the occasion:

> The fighting Congressman pledged that he would never cease his fight against the war which the American imperialists were rushing into headlong.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes to complete this statement, because the Members ought to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, how does the gentleman react to the proposition that hours are being devoted here to a discussion of the political opinions of one darkey man over in Chicago when we had only 45 minutes in which to discuss one of the most important and complex monetary questions of this Government last Friday? I refer to the silver amendment.

Mr. DIES. I can only say to the gentleman that the real issue here is not William Pickens; that he is immaterial insofar as the real issue is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the issue here is this: We are asked to appropriate billions of dollars which must come from the taxpayers of America. We are asked to send our boys to the trenches to fight in defense of our constitutional form of government. Yet in the Government itself are men who over a long period of time have been identified with movements and organizations that are opposed to our form of government and are seeking to destroy it.

That is the issue involved, an issue as to whether or not we as Members of this Congress will place our stamp of approval upon employment by the Federal Government of anyone who is identified with any organization that does not believe in our form of government.

Council for Pan American Democracy: According to the New Masses of December 3, 1940, William Pickens was one of the signers of a public manifesto issued under the auspices of the Council for Pan American Democracy on behalf of Luis Carlos Prestes. Prestes was a member of the executive committee of the Communist International. In 1935 Prestes led an armed Communist insurrection on Brazil, and as a result of his treasonable enterprise was sentenced to a prison term of 16 years. It was on this Communist leader's behalf that William Pickens joined with a group of American Communists and fellow travelers. Earl Browder's own statement on the subject of Prestes' activities and imprisonment appeared in the Daily Worker of January 3, 1941, and is so enlightening that I quote at this point:

> Today, when our own American ruling class is desperately trying to drag our country into the present imperialist war, and is carrying through a policy of economic and political aggrandizement aimed at the further subjugation of the peoples and nations of this hemisphere, the struggle to liberate Luis Carlos Prestes becomes an integral part of the fight for freedom, peace, and against imperialist war. * * * Facing his enemies and the enemies of his country—after being held in jail for more than 5 years—Prestes used this only opportunity to appeal to his people, encouraging them to unite and to follow the example of the great October revolution as the only path that can lead to their final liberation.

Seventeenth. United American Spanish Aid Committee: According to the New Masses of December 3, 1940, William Pickens was a prominent speaker for the United American Spanish Aid Committee. This committee was a strictly Communist Party enterprise, whose executive secretary was the well-known and avowed Communist Party member, Fred Biedenkapp.

Eighteenth. National Federation for Constitutional Liberties: The Department of Justice said that this organization was clearly communistic; that it was doubtful if anyone could be mistakenly a member of that organization.

According to the Daily Worker of December 19, 1940, William Pickens joined in an appeal on behalf of the notorious Communist, Sam Darcy, who had been convicted in the State of California. The appeal was issued under the auspices of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties which the Attorney General himself has branded as a subversive organization. Sam Darcy, whose real name is Dardeck, was a candidate for Governor of California in 1937. At the seventh world congress of the Communist International, Sam Darcy delivered a speech against the United States which was so insurrectionary in character that the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, issued a vigorous protest to the Russian Government.

Nineteenth. American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born: According to the organization's letterhead, William Pickens was one of the sponsors of the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born. Our committee has found this organization to be a Communist front.

Twentieth. Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights: According to its own literature, William Pickens was one of the sponsors of the Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights. This organization was one of the chapters of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties which the Attorney General has branded as subversive.

Twenty-first. American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom: According to its own literature which is in our committee's files, William Pickens was also a sponsor of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom. In our report to the House on June 25, 1942, our committee found this organization to be a Communist front.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the record of William Pickens' Communist affiliations. It is a long record which extends over a period of 16 years.

That is the record William Pickens has made for himself. Nowhere else, so far as I have been able to learn, has he ever repudiated his associations, his expressions, his identity with these organizations. If a man over a long period of time identifies himself actively with such organizations, then I submit to you that he should not be on the Federal pay roll.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I request that the Clerk read.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last seven words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIFFORD. How could the Chair rule me out and rule him in?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I asked a parliamentary inquiry. Why recog ze me, then rule me out and rule him in?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had not recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I though he looked at me with a favorable expression on his face.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman later.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have been on my feet so many times I am really tired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on title I be concluded in 20 minutes, and I include all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman's request to be that all debate on title I and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Title I refers to the Treasury Department appropriation bill only?

Mr. LUDLOW. I understood there were no more amendments to title I and I think we can easily conclude it in 20 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. So there may be no question about this, the purport of the gentleman's request is simply to limit debate so far as the Treasury Department appropriation is concerned?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. That would permit reading of the Post Office Department appropriation bill and the offering of amendments thereto?

Mr. LUDLOW. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to speak today, but I found that under the rule tomorrow there is only going to be 1 hour on the Dies committee extension and I was fearful I could not get time, so I am taking this 5 minutes now.

I read that page advertisement in the morning paper. One of the pleas was that we should not extend the Dies committee because we are at war and it might offend Russia. Now, I want to go back 3 years, this week. I attended at that time the Youth Congress Convention in Washington which was held in Madam Perkins' big auditorium down there in the Labor Building. They were avowedly Communists. I stayed there all afternoon and all evening and it finished up with a speech of the First Lady of the land. There were four or five of their leaders housed in the White House. This was just 3 years ago this week and it was on Lincoln's birthday that I rose here to say something.

Finland at that time was our hero nation, but every time in that convention that the name of Finland was mentioned it was hissed, and every time Russia's name was mentioned the roof was raised. Remember that at that time Russia was a fighting ally of Hitler's. You cannot say that the influence of communism and the encouragement of communism have just been since Russia became our ally. She was the fighting ally of Hitler 3 years ago. Communism has been catered to in high places right here in the Capital City.

These delegates were told to visit the next morning the House and Senate galleries. It happened to be Lincoln's Birthday.

I got up here to defend John Hamilton, my constituent, acting chairman of the National Republican Committee, because he refused to send a delegate to speak at the Youth Congress. They hissed me roundly. I was the best hissed man, they said, this House had ever seen, because I congratulated John Hamilton for not sending a delegate to speak to them. The Democrats had.

I am just bringing this instance back to you. It happened 3 years ago. The last evidence the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] had was just 3 years old. That happened 3 years ago this week. Five of them were housed in the White House. They had their meeting in the Labor Building, the department of Madam Perkins. The First Lady of the land spoke to them the last thing Sunday.

While Russia was not our ally then—keep that in mind, Russia was not our ally then—we were catering to them because we loved them, we loved their kind. That is the reason they have been kept in high places in this Democracy of ours for the last few years, largely by that same influence.

Where does the labor racket get its influence, finally? Is it just Madam Perkins, after all, that holds it up? Who is responsible for Madam Perkins? I am fearful of what the set-up we have in America today will do after the victory to carry on the Communism that has come from over there and festered here.

I just wanted to recite this instance to you again. I was so proud of John Hamilton, my constituent, the acting chairman of the Republican Committee, because he had not sent a delegate to speak to them. I sat there till 11 o'clock at night, all through Sunday afternoon. Ate with them in the evening in the Labor Department dining room, which was thrown open to them.

They had Gen. Smedley Butler to speak to them a year before. A young Communist from Veracruz, introducing the general, undertook to chastise him for what he and his marines had done in Veracruz. Smedley, in his direct way, just walked up and pushed this young Communist away from the mike and started speaking himself.

I see here my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]. He and I with others helped to bury the general the very first day of the Philadelphia convention, just out of that city.

Nobody denied what the background was of these people. This Youth Congress came here for years. This was only 3 years ago. Four or five of them were sleeping in the White House. The First Lady of the Land addressed them on Sunday night, and they hissed me here Monday morning when I congratulated John Hamilton for not sending a delegate to speak to them, and there was no excuse to defend it for the sake of battle unity.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this seems to be the most important feature of this bill. I do not think we are wasting time in considering this amendment. Many very prominent and able men regard this as a first step in violation of the constitutional rights of individuals and it makes me feel a little uncomfortable. I had thought that we were simply dropping from the rolls someone we did not want there. We have done it several times before. I can refer to the Saposs case. Not much protest was made, as I recall. But now, as indicated by this discussion it is deemed as important as a bill of attainder, as suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD]. How can the gentleman from California talk about a bill of attainder? By that process you put a man in jail and hold him. How about those native-born Japanese you put in concentration camps? Did you take each and every one of them and give them an opportunity to prove their loyalty? You did not.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. FORD. What would the gentleman do with them?

Mr. GIFFORD. If I followed the gentleman's principle, I would have to see that every one of them had a day in court, and then perhaps in the Supreme Court.

Mr. FORD. Does Mr. Pickens represent a country at war with the United States?

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope he does not.

Mr. FORD. Then, what would the gentleman do with him?

Mr. GIFFORD. I did not know anything about William Pickens until this debate opened. I did not even know he was a colored man. I do not like the idea of bringing the color issue upon the floor in this manner. Most of us did not know Mr. Pickens was a colored man. That should have nothing to do with it. Why drag that red herring across the trail? We love the colored man. I wish he was not colored, because my feeling is more favorable toward him in that he may have done something of which he was not fully conscious, in his enthusiasm to help his race. The gentleman from Illinois made a splendid speech of defense, but he stated that Mr. Pickens was deserted by those with whom he had formerly been in company. That is what I thought he said. How could he have been deserted if he had not previously been in company with them? This troubles me. If they had not been with him, they could not have deserted him, could they? Who were they, who deserted him?

This House is making a very serious matter of this. Maybe we should. I had not thought it was so serious.

I rather think that if those 38 men came before the committee personally, accompanied by their attorneys, their attorneys would as usual adyise those men that they ought not to talk. If they did come before the committee and the committee cross-examined them, the committee might even find something more that they might have to explain. Are some gentlemen trying to make us believe that we ought to employ a person we suspect of disloyalty until all legal processes of a trial are granted? Some claim they have had no trial by a proper tribunal. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] made a splendid defense of their rights last Friday. We sat here as a jury and listened to both sides. Were we not the jury? We heard the plea of these able lawyers regarding the principle involved and voted our verdict. True, there could be no exceptions taken by which the matter could go to a higher court. Of course, there was also no chance to challenge and "thin the jury." Each side of the question of principle was well and fully presented and we as jurymen voted as we felt we should. I really think that we are making too great an issue of this matter. Why was not the question raised when we acted in this manner in other cases? If these people really desire to be heard personally in their own defense, I do hope that privilege—it is only a privilege—will be granted. I do not think many would avail themselves of it. They would, of course, detail their friends to plead for them.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. If I had the time, I would be glad to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The fear has been expressed that if this House in its sound judgment refused to take the money of the loyal people of this country and pay it to men who have been affiliated with communistic organizations, that Russia will, on that account, quit fighting.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, really this is not germane.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order, if I am out of order.

Mr. LUDLOW. I dislike very much to object——

Mr. JENNINGS. Oh, everybody has been out of order, and I want the privilege myself. Secretary Wickard said the other morning that it was our food that was keeping Russia in the war. Russia is not going to strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. Russia is fighting a victorious war for the preservation of the liberty of her people, and the integrity of her nation, and I yield to no man anywhere in my admiration for the Russian people. I have voted for every appropriation to implement their great effort. It was said here awhile ago that we could not get these men off the pay roll because that would be a violation of article I, section 9, of the Constitution, which provides that the Congress shall pass no bill of attainder. That has not anything on earth to do with our right to withhold money for the purpose of paying any one of these ex-Reds. Of course, there are no Reds today. In the twinkling of an eye, in a time too short to put into words, they became red, white, and blue not long ago, and, of course, none of them is going to say now that he is a Communist. What is the language of this bill?

> No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates or who is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence.

That is now. They are not now, of course, but they have been, and we do not have to employ a man who has been that sort of a fellow, or who has kept that sort of company. No man can say that I have any antipathy toward the colored man. The first vote that I cast on coming to this Congress was in favor of an antilynch law for the protection of the rights of the colored people in States where they had not otherwise been protected, and, for that matter, the rights of anyone whose rights were violated, and were not protected by the officers sworn to enforce the law. I voted for the bill to extend the right to the armed forces of this country to vote without the payment of a poll tax. I have always been a friend of the colored people, but the fact that a man's skin happens to be black does not give him a license to violate the law. If this man is a Communist, or has been a Communist or has associated with them, or if he has been in bed with them, I have a right to look at him with a suspicious eye. You cannot lie down with dogs without getting up with fleas, you cannot fool with pitch without becoming defiled, birds of a feather flock together, and when I see a fellow coming here from under that sort of influence, or emanating from that sort of organization, I do not have to ask myself whether he is that sort of a fellow today or not. Ordinarily men do not change themselves, and I do not know of but one instance where a man absolutely became transformed, as it were, in the twinkling of an eye, and that was Saint Paul, and he afterward went out for years in the wilderness and took a course in repentance before he became a real apostle.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I would rather not. I want to talk a little about this effort on our part to get rid of these Reds being in violation of the provisions of the Federal Constitution forbidding the passage of a bill of attainder. Let me give you the definition of a bill of attainder as it appears in Webster's dictionary:

> Attainder: Extinction of the civil rights and capacities of a person, consequent upon sentence of death or outlawry; as, an act of attainder. Formerly attainder was the inseparable consequence of a judicial or legislative sentence for treason or felony, and involved the forfeiture or escheat of all the real and personal property of the condemned person, and such "corruption of blood" that he could neither receive nor transmit by inheritance, nor could he sue or testify in any court, or claim any legal protection or rights. In England attainder upon judgment of treason, or felony was completely abolished in 1870.

And by article I, section 9, clause 13, of the United States Constitution it is provided, in reciting the powers forbidden to Congress:

> No bill of attainder of ex post facto law shall be passed.

It has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a statute excluding ex-convicts from the practice of medicine is not a bill of attainder, even when applied to a person who has been convicted of a felony and has served his sentence prior to the enactment of the law, and who was again practicing medicine at the time said law was enacted. What we are doing here is simply refusing to take any more of the taxpayers' money and turn it over to former enemies of our Government.

We are simply saying that we are not going to appropriate any money to pay people like Pickens, and that is all that we are doing, and no lawyer would ever say that there is a property right in an office, such as the appointive positions occupied by these pink and red persons we are attempting to rid the taxpayers of by refusing to appropriate money for their salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Office of the First Assistant Postmaster General, $570,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, charges made during the consideration of this bill relating to the loyalty of employees of the Government raise an issue requiring prompt and urgent attention. At any time—even in time of peace—the possibility that there are in the service of the Government employees who are disloyal, or who advocate disloyal theories or who are engaged in subversive activities should be investigated and acted upon with firmness and dispatch. It is even more imperative that charges of disloyalty be investigated in time of war when a single disloyal employee might imperil the safety of our armed forces or the delivery of critical material, or the maintenance of public morale itself.

For this reason, and in conformity with the understanding reached in my colloquy here on the floor Friday with the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that a committee should be appointed which could hold hearings and take appropriate action without unnecessary delay, and after consultation with the leaders on both sides of the aisle I shall, in accordance with their views, introduce before the House adjourns today a resolution authorizing a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, composed of five men who have the confidence of the House to hear such charges against any employee of the Government, and if the charges are sustained, take immediate action to see that he is promptly separated from the public pay roll.

This resolution will be presented to the Committee on Rules tomorrow morning and will be the first order of business when the House convenes for tomorrow's session. I trust the resolution will meet with the approval of the Members of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman also recite the fact that this committee to be appointed from the Appropriations Committee immediately will hear whatever charges are made and consider whatever evidence may be in the possession of the Dies committee or any other agency against employees, and will also give ample opportunity to the employee to present his side of the case, and that will not only apply to future bills coming in, but it will apply to names which have been discussed and voted on in the last few days, the names of those in the Treasury-Post Office bill, and names which are in the independent offices bill, which will shortly be before the House? In other words, the House can be assured that there will be prompt and serious consideration given to those charges and that a report will be brought to the House from a responsible committee of the House and that the House will then be given an opportunity to act with all of the facts before it?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Under the proposed resolution prompt attention will be given to charges against employees paid from funds provided by the two pending bills and all appropriation bills to be presented at this session of the Congress. If there are disloyal employees in any department, they should be removed without unnecessary ceremony or delay.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me that we are faced with this problem: Any limitation that is placed upon an individual appropriation bill relates, of necessity, only to the money that is carried in that particular bill. Many employees of the Government are on the pay roll out of funds that have previously been appropriated. Many of them will be on the pay roll out of funds hereafter to be appropriated. Unless there is authority to bring in a bill which limits anyone who is found guilty from receiving money from the Federal Treasury, that has heretofore or will hereafter be appropriated, we will accomplish nothing. That is what I conceive to be one of the things that might be accomplished under the gentleman's resolution.

In addition to that, it would give every person who is accused a fair and impartial trial before a special committee, that I understand the gentleman would appoint if the resolution were agreed to, and that the thing would be done promptly, just as rapidly as the committee could proceed. Do I understand the matter correctly?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman states the situation clearly and accurately. In other words, instead of leaving such men in the departments a day longer than necessary to reach them, this committee will meet and take summary action to dispose of such gentlemen without waiting for the next bill to be reported.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Do I understand this will offer a means of a fair trial in the case covered in this bill, the case of William Pickens?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. His case, if still pending when the committee is appointed, will be taken up first.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I want to get this point clear: Unless the House stands by its action which it has already taken in the William Pickens matter, this subcommittee to be appointed has no power to remove him from the pay roll?

The procedure involved here on Pickens is the only procedure we can follow in order to reach these men as we come to the various appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is the reason the committee is being appointed. Under the present system there is no way to reach such cases except through the long and tortuous proceeding of amending an appropriation bill; and inasmuch as the salaries of many of them are provided for in bills which will not come before this House for months, the method provided by the amendment to the pending bill involves interminable delay. Under the proposed resolution such cases could be disposed of in the next few days.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If this proposal which the gentleman from Missouri is making goes through tomorrow as it is suggested, would it be contemplated that the cases included in the Independent Offices bill would be disposed of before that bill is read for amendment on the floor?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is not expected that the Independent Offices bill will be taken up in the House before Monday. In the meantime this committee will meet as soon as authorized and should be able to take up the seven cases in the Independent Offices bill before that bill is called up for consideration.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am in full accord with the plan the gentleman is now proposing. I proposed the same thing one year ago to the Appropriations Committee. I will be delighted to go along with one exception, and that is that when we have passed this bill today it is too late then to do anything about William Pickens. I am willing to go along with the procedure requested, but I say we should stick to this one amendment today.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We would be glad to comply with the gentleman's suggestion insofar as circumstances permit.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Did the gentleman understand that we were to permit this bill to go through with the amendment it now carries throwing Pickens off without his having an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This resolution will be before the House in the morning before the vote is taken on the pending bill, and if the proposed committee is afforded time it will be glad to pass on the Pickens case. But, of course, action on the Pickens case is contingent on the disposition of the amendment—whether it is voted up or down when final action is taken on the bill tomorrow.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I am interested in the type of remedy this special committee will follow. After it has found that someone should be removed from the pay roll is it proposed to bring in legislation that must not only pass this body but also pass the Senate and have Executive approval to get these people out of Federal employment? Or does the gentleman expect to resort to the method we are following today, that of denying funds for their employment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We will bring in legislation in accordance with the findings of the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. But that must be submitted to the Senate and also to the signature of the President.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly. It would be disposed of in the only way in which legislation can be disposed of.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say in reply to the gentleman from Nebraska that the procedure being followed in the present instance is no different, for this bill must pass not only this body, it must pass the Senate and must be signed by the President.

Mr. CURTIS. But this item is part of a larger bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is true. I believe, however, that there is some confusion here that ought to be cleared up about the Pickens case, I may say to the gentleman from Missouri; I do not think that is clear.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Let me make it a little clearer: If it can be arranged to defer action on the Pickens case tomorrow, or if the House votes down the amendment, if a vote is taken tomorrow, this committee will have authority to take up the case and hear it, and bring in legislation for its disposition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. What is the purpose of asking for a special rule? I wish to clarify the situation; what is the purpose of asking for a special rule if it is not to send the name of William Pickens to the Appropriations Committee for their consideration? Is that one of the purposes in asking for this special rule?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The purpose in asking for the special rule is to authoritatively adjudicate all charges of disloyalty of employees who draw their salaries from funds provided by the supply bills.

Mr. FISH. All of them, including the Pickens case?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Including the Pickens case if it is not sooner disposed of by the House.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman intend to dispose of the Pickens case before this bill is completed?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We hardly have time. The pending appropriation bill is scheduled for final action tomorrow; but should the House fail to act on the Pickens case, or should it vote down the amendment then the proposed committee will deal with the Pickens case first.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is asking for a special rule—and I am in sympathy with him—to send the Pickens case to the Appropriations Committee with the other 37 names so they can decide on the merits of each case.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Of course, if the House should prior to that time make final disposition of the case, that is something else.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the situation, it is this: The present bill has been amended, disposing of the Pickens case. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], suggests that his committee will submit to the Rules Committee a resolution creating a special committee consisting of members of the Appropriations Committee to investigate these Dies cases and all this type of cases. In these circumstances would it not be well to ask to vacate the proceedings by which the Pickens amendment was adopted, thereby dealing with the Pickens case exactly the same as we deal with all the other similar cases, including the 38 cases discussed in this debate? I am going to vote to continue the Dies committee. But in fairness to everybody, including our membership, I think the gentleman who offered the Pickens amendment—the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS]—should assist in vacating the proceeding adopting the Pickens amendment in the committee.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Doubtless the gentleman would prefer to submit that question to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is a question of vacating the proceedings on that amendment pending?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Michigan wishes to address a question to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let me make this clear. I am perfectly in accord with the chairman's proposal to set up a committee. As I said a moment ago, I proposed that a year ago. We could have had it working now and we could have given everybody a fair hearing. I have just talked with William Pickens on the phone and I told him that this amendment may or may not go through, but in case it did, before it reached the Senate he would have an opportunity to be heard before this committee and if he cleared himself then the Senate could take it out or we would do it in conference. I do not agree to vacate these proceedings now because if we have passed this bill, even though he may be found guilty of communistic activities, we may not be able to reach him. I am in accord with the agreement on these other matters. I think we ought to give him an opportunity to clear himself and take it out in conference.

Mr. MICHENER. It might place many sincere, honest persons in this body in the wrong position when the roll call on the Pickens amendment comes tomorrow before the special committee has had an opportunity to give Pickens the same forum for a hearing the same as the 37 others accused. The Dies committee, something like a grand jury, has investigated and presents an indictment. Pickens should be accorded the same treatment as the other 37 indicted. I shall vote to give him consideration.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I know everybody wants to be fair, but under the evidence given this House up to now, I could not possibly agree to withdrawal of this amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to state to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that last year the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations eliminated a name from the pay roll. That man was called before the committee later on and before we made our final report, he was restored because he proved himself innocent. I feel every man should receive the same chance and opportunity.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is the purpose of the resolution. Every man would have his day in court. There would be no star chamber proceedings.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield to see if we can reach an agreement on time?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this proposal close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the proposal correctly, it would authorize a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee to hold hearings. In turn if they found that someone should not be on the pay roll they would bring in special legislation barring that person from the Government pay roll. This means that we would rely on separate legislation that must pass that "other body" and be signed by the President.

It just will not work. I have seen legislation pass this House before, go over to another body and then disappear. Where is the Smith bill now? As well as other meritorious measures. The framers of this Government gave the House of Representatives the authority to start appropriation bills. I do not believe anyone here feels that we can take anybody off the pay roll unless we withhold the funds for that purpose. So far as I am concerned, this appropriation bill, in my opinion, ought to be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations until it holds a hearing and determines whether or not Mr. Pickens should be employed. I do not believe anyone here holds any hope that this proposed corrective legislation, if brought in by the Appropriations Committee, will be passed by the Senate and given Executive approval. Such a proposal would merely be a means for getting these appropriations through the House without amendments denying funds to subversive individuals.

Mr. JENNINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. If this committee reported Mr. Pickens or any one of those other 38 of his associates as communistic, and then brought in a bill providing that they be not eligible to appointment or to serve under this Government, does the gentleman believe such bill would ever become law?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not. But in the meantime the appropriations here discussed would have passed beyond our control. Furthermore, may I say that I am in favor not only of recommitting this bill to the Appropriations Committee, but I do not want the Appropriations Committee to bring in a bill for any amount unless they have ascertained that none of it will go to subversive sources or persons. I believe this body has the right to expect that of the Appropriations Committee. If the Hendricks amendment is rejected because Pickens has not had a hearing, then the bill should be recommitted to give him one.

Mr. MUNDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I wonder if we cannot arrive at a happy solution to this whole problem and enable the House to reverse its tentative proposition in reference to the Pickens matter without losing its authority of depriving him of a place on the Government pay roll by having a public statement of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee now that if this resolution which he will submit tomorrow passes he will withhold bringing the bill back from conference until the committee has disposed of the Pickens case and made a recommendation one way or the other?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman wants to postpone bringing this bill back from conference?

Mr. MUNDT. I would like to know whether the gentleman would be willing to assure the House that he will postpone bringing the bill back for final action until the Pickens case has been disposed of.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is a rather serious action to hold up a bill of this character carrying all the appropriations it does, but I may say that if an agreement could be reached with the gentleman from Florida under which we would vacate the proceedings, we would get much quicker action on the Pickens case than otherwise, because this bill will not be back from conference for 2 months, whereas the resolution we would introduce to dismiss all the men who are found to be disloyal will be back within a few days.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further.

I hope, however, that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will agree to have this bill recommitted so that they can determine the Pickens case before any money is appropriated for him by this House. The people back home do not want you to pay their money to subversive individuals. We should not pass this bill until the Appropriations Committee have held hearings concerning Mr. Pickens.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Did it require any legislation to put any of these people on the pay roll?

Mr. CURTIS. It did not.

Mr. DONDERO. If that is true, and it is true, then why should not the same power that put them on the pay roll remove them, without asking Congress to take action?

Mr. CURTIS. It should. At this time the Committee on Appropriations is sifting the activities to which they think money should be supplied. It should do the same thing in regard to these subversive individuals.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I believe the gentleman has presented to the House a very sound program indicating the way out, and that is simply this: There is no hurry about this legislation. It does not go into effect until the 1st of July. Why not hold up this legislation for a period of 1 week? It will affect the rights of nobody. Within a week the Committee on Appropriations can come back and decide on the Pickens case, if we present the rule tomorrow, and then we will have accomplished exactly what the gentleman wants.

Mr. CURTIS. They do not need a rule. The committee ought not ever to ask us to appropriate money for subversive individuals. Again I say if the Hendricks amendment is defeated the bill ought to be recommitted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, just so the Members may understand the situation clearly, I wish to make three or four statements.

It has been the practice when these persons who have been accused of subversive activities by the Dies committee have been removed by a limitation on an appropriation bill for them to slide immediately on to another pay roll, and there has been nothing to stop them.

There are one or two ways of reaching this situation, and these ways ought not to be attempted until the hearings can be completed. The carrying of this provision upon the appropriation bill will accomplish no immediate purpose. One way would be this. After hearings have been had upon all the 38, bring in a rider on an appropriation bill of a deficiency character, which could apply to every appropriation, past and future, so that none of those who were found guilty of subversive activities could draw pay. That would be effective, and it is about the only way you could be absolutely sure of having an effective means of carrying out your purpose. It would be more certain to be effective than a separate resolution, although a separate resolution would accomplish it if it could be passed by the Senate and signed by the President.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe one of the gentleman's plans is very good, but suppose we do pass a resolution with all these names in it, and then the President vetoes it, where would we be?

Mr. TABER. You would not be anywhere. You would have to start afresh. But if you had it tied on as a rider to a major deficiency bill it would go through quickly, and I do not believe it would have a veto.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. I do not like the idea of either convicting or acquitting a man until we hear the evidence.

Mr. TABER. I do not, either.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Why not postpone action on this bill until this committee acts?

Mr. TABER. That could be done if the House elected to do that. Of course, that would have to be done with the approval of the leadership, and I would not have authority to make any such statement as that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to submit two questions. One is this. If this subcommittee is created, can it function quickly enough from time to time so as to meet the demands of the House before the appropriation is voted upon?

Question No. 2 is this: Will this committee as it functions from time to time depend upon the Dies committee to furnish names and give the stimulation, or will it have the effect of displacing or making unnecessary the Dies committee?

Mr. TABER. This committee will not in any way take the place of the Dies committee. It will not undertake an initial investigation or anything of that character. It will take the accusations that have been made, call in these people, ask them if they have any defense to offer, and hear that defense; and if it is necessary to hear rebuttal evidence, they will have to hear it so that they can make a decent determination of whatever is to be done.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What does the gentleman think as to the rapidity with which the committee can function?

Mr. TABER. I do not know how many cases there are. There are 39 or 40 to start with, I suppose. If there are 1,400, we could not possibly reach a determination upon that many in time to have it incorporated in a bill of this type.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But you might in a deficiency bill?

Mr. TABER. It could be done in a deficiency bill, but we would have to do it piecemeal if such a very large number were involved.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In regard to the bill that is before us now, there is only one man affected, and it would not take very long to clear that up, if the committee will recommit the bill until such time as the subcommittee has had to take care of the matter.

Mr. TABER. We do not need to recommit the bill. All we have to do is to leave it on the Speaker's table without calling it up for a final vote. In the present temper of the House, I do not think it is satisfied that the matter has been gone into far enough so that it is prepared to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, $460,000.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following preferential motion which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MUNDT moves that the Committee do now rise with instructions that it report the bill back with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, this is in no sense a pro forma amendment, but I offer it in strict sincerity, believing this is one effective way for the House to extricate itself from a rather difficult situation. Perhaps during my remarks or afterward somebody will propose some more convenient solution. We have just heard the ranking member on the Republican side of the Committee on Appropriations say that it would not in any way embarrass the functions of the Department if these appropriations and the decision upon the matter before us were postponed for 2 or 3 weeks. We have heard the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations say they could take up the case of Pickens and determine it on short notice, and it seems to me that we are not in a position to vote today either for or against Mr. Pickens, and unless we do recommit this bill we can have no assurance but that somebody will move to bring the bill to a roll call and thus compel us to vote yes or no. I think we should exercise our parliamentary function and recommit this bill or by some other device give the Appropriations Committee time to establish a special committee, to bring in evidence for or against Mr. Pickens, and bring back a recommendation that he should either be excluded from the pay roll or not. Then we can vote as intelligent legislators. I see no reason why we should debate this thing by 5-minute stretches all afternoon and into the evening. This is at least one positive way of disposing of it. Mr. Pickens will be given a fair hearing, and this House can proceed in an orderly manner.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion to strike out the enacting clause. I hardly think the gentleman's motion will be taken seriously by the House, but it might be well to call attention to the routine that would result if the motion should be agreed to. To strike out the enacting clause would mean that the bill is dead. It would be reintroduced de novo and we would have to start all over again. While it would not be necessary to duplicate much of the detailed work we have already done on the bill, we would have to again start from the beginning and make up the bill, and the subcommittee would have to report it back to the main committee, and the main committee to the House, and in that way we would throw added work on already overburdened members of the committee and lose valuable time. We will have difficulty in getting all the supply bills through by the end of the fiscal year as it is, and to take such action as that contemplated by the motion of the gentleman would be to throw upon the committee and upon Members of the House a burden of unnecessary routine and would involve a delay which the House would not want to encourage or approve.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. POWERS. I agree with the gentleman that the bill should not be recommitted, but why can we not reach an agreement like this, that after the bill is read, that it should lie upon the Speaker's table, and we should not vote upon it and in the meantime a subcommittee could call Mr. Pickens and give him a hearing, and report back to the House in 2 or 3 days, and then we could vote on the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am anxious to cooperate with my friend from New Jersey in the matter, but this is a large and important bill. Many items are urgent. For that reason I would not feel warranted in delaying it on account of one comparatively inconsequential amendment, the disposition of which is not yet assured. For it should be remembered when the amendment comes up for a vote tomorrow, that the vote will not be on the merits of the amendment, but on the question of deferring action on the Pickens case until a committee can hear it and dispose of it and similar cases on evidence from both sides. As a matter of fact, when the amendment comes up for a vote tomorrow the question actually before the House will be whether it shall be disposed of with expedition and celerity by a special committee or whether it will be left in the bill to finally be acted on when this bill comes back from conference some weeks, if not months, after the special committee has reported.

A vote tomorrow would not be a vote on conviction, on whether a man is a Communist or is disloyal to his Government; on whether he should be taken off or left on the pay roll. The question would be whether you favor turning all such charges over to a special committee, authorized to dispose of them speedily and authoritatively, in accordance with the views expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. POWERS. Why is it necessary to form another subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to handle this matter? Why cannot the present subcommittee handle it, as the subcommittee on the Independent Offices bill has been doing?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The present subcommittees are authorized to hold hearings but are not authorized to take immediate action. They cannot take action until their particular bill comes up, which may be 4 months away, and if there are disloyal men on the pay roll, the quicker they are taken off the better.

Mr. TABER. The question raised by the gentleman from New Jersey is, if you carry a limitation in one appropriation bill, it relates only to that bill, and that same man can be on another appropriation. The whole thing ought to be cleaned up, and it ought to be cleaned up in such a way that it would relate to every appropriation out of the Treasury.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I just want to correct one impression which perhaps the gentleman did not intend to leave. If we adopt this amendment to this bill, that does not prevent your still taking action by your subcommittee, because even if we adopt this amendment, we can still go on and act.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Such a contemplated committee would not feel warranted in attempting to override formal action by the House. A member in heartiest sympathy with the amendment would be justified in voting against the amendment tomorrow in order to get quicker and more carefully considered action by the special committee.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I want to say to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and to the House that in consideration of this new resolution that the Rules Committee will bring up tomorrow, we should keep in mind that there are not just these 38 names. There will be hundreds of names, because as soon as this resolution is passed some members of the Dies committee will recommend to the investigators that they review all the files, and I daresay that we will be able to submit to your committee, if it is created, hundreds and hundreds of governmental employees who have the same kind of record that Mr. Pickens has.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Any employee against whom charges of disloyalty are brought should have a full and fair hearing. That is the purpose of the resolution; to expedite the proceedings and to secure prompt separation from the pay roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. I wish to interrogate the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, because I appreciate some of the difficulties he has set forth if my motion to recommit does prevail. I wonder if I were to withdraw my motion whether the gentleman from Missouri, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, would be willing to assure the House that he would carry out some such suggestion as that made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS], that is, to keep the bill on the Speaker's table until the Pickens problem could be decided by the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is directly in charge of this bill. I am only one member of the committee.

Mr. MUNDT. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the subcommittee, if we may have his assurance that if no motion to recommit is passed, and we proceed now in an orderly fashion, that he will keep the bill on the Speaker's table and not ask for a final decision until the Appropriations Committee has had an opportunity to consider the Pickens case itself?

Mr. LUDLOW. I am afraid the gentleman is asking me something that I cannot promise.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. POWERS. As chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] should be able to tell you that. If he cannot, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is present.

Mr. MUNDT. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana, as chairman of the subcommittee, whether he will use his influence in that direction? May I direct my question to the majority leader to see if we can get an answer? We are all confronted with the same problem.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is a rather amusing situation. Just giving my individual views—I have kept out of this—personally I think the adoption of the amendment was unwise. The leadership on both sides have now offered a proposition which is fair. It is consistent with the fundamentals of decency and of Anglo-Saxon law. I do not want to be convicted without an opportunity to be heard. God knows I do not want the other fellow convicted without an opportunity to be heard. If my friend is asking me to portray to the country that this great House must hold up an appropriation bill carrying an appropriation of over $1,000,000,000 in order to determine the question of one man's status—well, as far as I am concerned, speaking personally—and I am only speaking personally now because my own individual views sometimes conflict with my views as majority leader—speaking personally I have too much love and respect for this House as an individual Member to see the House hold up final passage of a bill after it has been concluded because of this one question involved, when the leadership on both sides is presenting to the House a proposition that is based on fairness; that a man always be given a reasonable opportunity to present his side of the case. I do not know who Pickens is. I did not know what his color was. I do not care what a man's race, color, or religion is. We have to be tolerant and understanding among ourselves. One of the basic considerations of our democratic form of government is to give a man an opportunity to be heard when he is accused.

I do not know whether he is guilty or not. But we are giving him the opportunity. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS] said there would be several hundred. That is all the more reason for a committee of this kind. We certainly cannot come before the country with the spectacle that has been gone through with here in the last few days, on every appropriation bill. All the more reason why a committee of this kind should be appointed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, who do you want it for? For yourself or somebody else?

Mr. MUNDT. I want time enough for the majority leader to finish his statement and then I have a comment to make.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. It seems to me the leadership has presented to the House a fair proposition and it ought to be accepted. Anyone voting to eliminate this amendment is not voting on the merits involved, because certainly the debate this afternoon has clarified that situation. From my personal reaction, as far as the resolution is concerned, after participating in the conference, I think the resolution is for the best interests of the House. It is for the best interests of the integrity of the House. I think if we are going to give everyone else an opportunity to be heard by this committee, it is only fair that this particular gentleman whose name happens to be Pickens, should also be given the same opportunity.

Mr. MUNDT. Before yielding further I should like to say to the majority leader that I agree in everything that he says. Apparently he must have misunderstood my question relayed from the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to the chairman of the subcommittee to him.

I am trying to seek some way in which we can apply the principle of giving this man Pickens a chance to be heard before we act either one way or the other; trying to find a concrete way in which that can be done. We find ourselves, however, in this position: An amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole is to be resubmitted for a vote in the House; so I was wondering whether the majority leader could explain some parliamentary device whereby we should not be called upon to vote either for or against Pickens on a roll-call vote until the case has been further heard. I suggested, or rather the gentleman from New Jersey suggested, that by letting the bill lie on the Speaker's table for a day or two until the Appropriations Committee had heard Pickens we could accomplish that.

Mr. McCORMACK. And it was to that suggestion that I addressed myself particularly. Personally I think it would be unwise because we would present to the country the spectacle of holding up final action on an important appropriation bill because of one individual employee of a department. That is not going to inure to the benefit of the House. Certainly we ought to be able to assume our responsibility, but as leader I naturally would confer with others, and in such conference—I will be frank—I would express my views as I have stated them now.

Mr. MUNDT. The gentleman appreciated that. Technically speaking, we are not voting either for or against Pickens in the present bill. There is no urgent rush about the passage of this appropriation act. The money cannot be made available before July 1 in all events. By deferring final action on this bill for a few days the Appropriations Committee can bring this House a special report after hearing what Pickens himself has to say.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am getting a little impatient with all this talk saying this is a spectacle. We have done it before. Furthermore, this appropriation bill will not become effective until July, and even though this man's name is included this proposed special committee can still go ahead and make its findings. I see no reason why we should make a mountain out of a molehill.

Mr. McCORMACK. We would still be faced with the same proposition in the next appropriation bill, and in the next appropriation bill, and so on straight down the line. The leadership is offering a solution whereby the Committee on Appropriations can set up a subcommittee which shall have the power of subpena, to summon witnesses before it and pass upon the facts.

Mr. MUNDT. Is it the opinion of the majority leader that if the House reverses its position and exempts Pickens from this employment embargo, passes the bill in its original form, and should the Appropriations Committee later find that this man should be stricken from the rolls because of his subversive activities, would the Appropriations Committee representatives in conference be empowered to remove Pickens from the pay roll?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; they would not have that power, because if the bill passes the House with Pickens' name out and passes the Senate with Pickens' name out, the conferees, in my opinion, would not have the power to insert his name back in the bill. That is my opinion.

Mr. MUNDT. In that event, unless final action on this bill is deferred until the Appropriations Committee can investigate Mr. Pickens or unless the Senate votes Mr. Pickens out, we might still find him holding office after we had lost all power of ouster and given approval to his salary. I shall not press for a vote on my motion to recommit, but I hope some method may be worked out so this body, after having access to all the facts, can exercise its right to bar Pickens from the pay roll if no flaw is found in the evidence which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has presented and which makes a mighty damaging case against Mr. Pickens. I want him to have a right to be heard, and I want this House to have the right to remove appointees from office who may be either unfit or un-American, or both. I hope both of these rights may be protected in the case in point.

Mr. LUDLOW. I ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS], to simplify this situation and see that justice is done, why he does not ask that the vote by which his amendment would pass to be vacated? I do not think we ought to make fish of one and fowl of another; I think Pickens should have exactly the same kind of trial as all the others. Why not vacate this vote and treat him as we treat the others? Why not treat all alike?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, replying to the gentleman from Indiana, I would remind him that last year we did not give David Lasser a hearing; we just cut him off. We did not call others in, and I do not see any reason why we should call this man in.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota insist on his preferential motion?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Accounts, $300,000.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: Page 33, line 13, after the word "account", strike out $300,000 and insert "$133,640."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I think more debate should be allowed than that; I shall have to object.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's intention to finish the bill today?

Mr. LUDLOW. That is our expectation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And vote on it today?

Mr. LUDLOW. No. We will vote on it tomorrow, but we will finish it under the 5-minute rule today.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment reduces the amount which the committee allowed the Bureau of Accounts in this bill from $300,000 to $133,630, which is the same amount allowed this Bureau last year. This amount has been asked for to establish a new cost accounting system in the Accounts Bureau. I will read what it says here on page 14 of the report:

The amount carried in this bill, $300,000, is $28,200 below the Budget estimate of $328,200 and $166,360 above the total appropriation of $133,640 for 1943. The large increase in this item is required to establish a new cost accounting system in the Postal Service.

Mr. Chairman, it was my privilege to serve on the Post Office and Post Roads Committee during the Seventy-sixth and Seventy-seventh Congresses. During that time I learned something about the personnel and the functions of that Department and have the highest regard for the Department, but, strictly speaking, this is legislation on an appropriation bill. I think this should have gone before the proper committee, the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, before it went to the Appropriations Committee.

The Post Office and Post Roads Committee is headed by the able gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH], for whom I have the highest regard. He has done a fine work, and the other members of the committee have done fine work. I know he would allow all the hearings necessary and the proper consideration to this new set-up.

It does not take a smart man to know that during these very abnormal times any cost ascertainment figures arrived at today will be completely upset and useless tomorrow, and this will hold true until the war is over and for quite some time afterward.

Mr. Chairman, this is no time to take 30, 40, or 50 people away from essential industries and put them in this new Bureau or in this new set-up. Every one of us has promised our people that we would not create any new or unnecessary governmental set-ups. Whether you call them bureaus or not, it is a new set-up. Our manpower problem is very desperate right now. We do not want to take these men from the farms or from the factories or from other essential industry and put them in this new set-up, which, in my estimation, will serve no good purpose, especially at this time.

I earnestly plead with the Members to think well before they vote, for certainly if we let the great reorganizers start reorganizing the Post Office Department, which has been almost simon pure for all these years, that Department will soon be in the very same fix as all other departments of the Government find themselves in today. I am sure none of us want to have that to happen.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I could not hear all the gentleman said, but I got the idea that this is some new agency that is being set up.

Mr. JENSEN. It is not a new agency. It is a new cost accounting system which I maintain will be of no use. I contend that any costs which are arrived at today during these abnormal times in this Department will be of no use. They will not hold good for any length of time, anyway, and we are just wasting a lot of money starting another set-up here which will take the employment of 30, 40, or 50 people away from essential industry where they are so desperately needed now.

I can see no reason at all why this $166,640 of the taxpayers' money should be spent in this way.

If we want to do something for the Postal Service, if we want to spend some of the taxpayers' money we should give the star-route carriers the extra pay which they deserve, and also some other postal employees in the lower pay brackets.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. And we could give some service on the holidays we are going to have this year for the rural carriers?

Mr. JENSEN. Yes; we could do a lot of things. Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], in my opinion, merits the support of every Member of this House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] has been a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for the last 4 years. Personally I have served on that committee for one term, and I am glad to back him up in this amendment which will prevent the beginning at this time of another division of a bureau. The adoption of Mr. JENSEN'S amendment will keep from developing in this vast mushroom of bureaucracy another cell, to be nurtured by hundreds of thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money, whose administrators will keep coming back to us year after year and not request a mere $166,000 but, in a short time, $500,000, perhaps in a few years, to keep 300 or 400 men instead of 40 now asked for in jobs. Such is bureaucracy. Give it free rein and it will throttle individual initiative and eventually bankrupt our Nation.

We have had a lot of discussion about bureaucrats and bureaucracy. Now is the time to act. If you Members of this House mean what you have been talking about, you will look over this amendment very carefully that has been offered by the gentleman from Iowa and try to cut the head off of this—beginning of another—division or another bureau before you let it proceed to swallow up $166,000. Yes; I know that $166,000 is mere chicken feed to some, but to me it still represents a sizable hunk of money. Unless we chisel away and knock off these corners, the savings that we have promised our people we would try to make will not be effectuated.

Up to now we have done without this division. Why do we need it just now? Is it not rather foolish to start in trying to establish a new section with which to ascertain cost in a division or in a department at a time when costs are abnormal? The Post Office Department has been able to give very good figures on cost of various operations to our committees heretofore. The time to have commenced such a division, if it ever has been needed, was a long time ago and not at a time when everything is out of kilter. Surely we can find a better place for these 40 or 50 men and women to work than to start another division or another bureau. The Lord only knows to what extent, in 20 years, this beginning of another octopus will expand.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Does not the gentleman agree that this bill should go before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. In my opinion, it is clearly legislation and should have gone directly before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads for authorization.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. This amendment involves about $160,000.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. One hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars; mere chicken feed, I will admit, in the belief of many who are accustomed to converse in terms of billions of dollars. To me, this represents at least 10 well-equipped and stocked quarter-section farms.

Mr. TABER. As I understand, the man who was Comptroller of the Post Office Department for years, Mr. Slattery, was finally crowded out.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. He was crowded out last summer, so I have been informed by parties who should know.

Mr. TABER. They put a new organization in there that has not as yet shown any evidence of competency to do this kind of a job.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman is correct. In my opinion, this expenditure will not add one bit to the already splendid operation of the Post Office Department.

In conclusion, may I say that while this $166,000 may not seem to amount to very much, to ne it represents a little rivulet, and when many of these come together you have a stream of waste—waste of money which is criminal at this time—a waste which every individual in this Congress has promised the people who voted for him he would try his utmost to eliminate. This $166,000 as a fighting plane is much more worth while today. Let us give an extra plane to the boys in the Solomons and prevent 40 people from being used in a nonessential division of another bureau.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this amendment should be opposed by every businessman or every man who understands something of the problems of an executive. This is not a request coming from the subhead of some bureau, or from a small department, or from someone about whom we know very little. It is a request from the Postmaster General, the head of a $1,200,000,000 corporation, the Post Office Department of the United States. The head of the Post Office Department, one of the great departments of the Federal Government, handling $1,200,000,000 in appropriations for the citizens of this country every year, must necessarily know something about that business in order to conduct it properly. In the hearings before our committee he told us that in his opinion this is a most important item in the bill, in order for him to know what things cost and how to run his job.

The head of this $1,200,000,000 corporation says to the gentlemen in Congress, "In order to do my job properly and to know how to do it, in the interest of economy and in finding where to save, I ask you to give me $1,700 more than was allowed last year."

This is no new business. It is a new name. They had the cost accounting department last year and they set up a bureau of accounts, which the Bureau of the Budget cut $8,000,000, and part of it was taken from the cost accounting department. The item only represents an increase of $1,700 over last year.

Does the gentleman from Iowa want to say to the Post Office Department, "You shall have no cost accountants, you shall have no one to analyze your costs, to tell you what you are spending here and spending there? You can go ahead without a cost accounting department of that type."

I do not know any big business in the country that does not have a department of this type and that is not dependent upon it for intelligent analyses in handling its business.

These people must decide on the amount of money they pay the railroads for the space they use in handling the mail. Some of it is first-class, some of it is parcel post. They know little about the final analyses of those costs and they cannot talk intelligently about them unless they have a cost-accounting system. On the question of the rent they pay in so many places they must analyze and compare their rents. On the question of handling the heating charges of the hundreds of buildings they operate, they must know something about the handling costs, about the cost of coal, and about many other expenses. In handling a $1,200,000,000 operation, there is no chance for the Postmaster General to do any sort of an intelligent executive job unless you give him, as you would give to the manager of any plant or the head of any business, an adequate cost-accounting organization to tell him what things cost.

Again, let me say that this is not a new bureau. This is authorized by law. There is no new language in this bill, as the gentleman said. It is not a new business. This has been in the law. Incidentally, I may say that I have made inquiries as to the parliamentary system on that point, and it is not subject to a point of order.

What the gentleman is doing is saying to the Postmaster General of the United States, who is handling $1,200,000,000, "You may not have anyone who can tell you what your air-mail costs are or what you can afford to spend to put a new route into South America, or what it will cost you to start another route across the country; you cannot have anybody down there who can give you that information."

I cannot imagine an amendment of that sort being adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me that we are getting a little bit mixed in our thinking in this program. I agree with the gentleman who has spoken, that the head of any big corporation is entitled to have a cost accounting system, but I do not agree that the head of any corporation that desires to change its set-up should not present that changed or new set-up to the board of directors of the corporation, which is the policy-making board for the corporation, and get their approval, before putting it into execution. The natural and logical thing for the Postmaster General to have done when he wanted to establish a new set-up or change the present one, was to present that change to the board of directors, the policy-making group of that organization, which is the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives and not the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. If he had done that, and made his case, before the proper board of directors, then in all probability it might have been approved, and there would have been no question on the floor of this House; but instead of doing that he short-circuited the legislative group of this body that is supposed to consider those things and went direct to the Committee on Appropriations for the appropriation. I ask you men whether this body here, this House, should approve of the method of short-circuiting its legislative committees and go direct to the Committee on Appropriations. That is the whole question involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. O'NEAL. Will the gentleman tell me what piece of legislation would have required them to go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads? They have had a Bureau of Accounts for years and it is still here. It is no new thing.

Mr. MASON. It is a new set-up in the post office, to audit accounts.

Mr. O'NEAL. It is just a little group to handle the matter.

Mr. MASON. They should have received the O. K. of the legislative group before presenting it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. O'NEAL. What is there to the set-up that they do not have already?

Mr. JENSEN. They have $133,644 in last year's appropriation bill, and we are leaving it in this.

Mr. O'NEAL. Oh, the gentleman should not shift his argument. They had a Bureau of Accounts, and they still have it.

Mr. JENSEN. It says that a large increase in this item is required to establish a new cost-accounting system in the Postal Service.

Mr. MASON. That is the testimony before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUDLOW) there were—ayes 81, noes 64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COURTNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1648, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the legislative business is concluded and other special orders I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] for 45 minutes.

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, no more funds should be appropriated to the National Resources Planning Board. This agency is a grave menace to the American people and should be abolished forthwith.

The Subcommittee on Appropriations is again recommending an appropriation of funds to the National Resources Planning Board, and unless some other Member offers an amendment to strike this item out of the independent offices appropriation bill I intend to do so. In the ensuing discussion I shall state the reasons for my position.

I have in this study quoted a goodly amount of material. Practically all of it is taken from the National Resources Development Report for 1942. When it was not taken from that report its source will be indicated. The material quoted was selected with the view of giving as accurate and full a description of the activities of the Planning Board as possible without reading through many volumes of reports, pamphlets, and so forth, put out by it. The method has for its purpose the saving of time for those Members who are interested in this highly important subject, but who do not have the time to read the many reports. I feel quite certain the amount of material quoted is sufficient to give a good understanding of the subject.

The results of last November's election showed a strong protest against the Federal bureaucracy and its dictatorial tactics. They indicated that our people are at last coming to realize the growing menace to our liberties of the New Deal regime. I interpret last November's vote as a mandate to Congress to check the bureaucracy and to restore to the people the powers which the Constitution vested in them and which have been wrested from them by the Executive.

Congress is charged with a great responsibility and I think we should strive to the utmost to carry out the obligation we have assumed.

The National Resources Planning Board is supposed to stem from the Employment Stabilization Act of 1931, and has existed previously under various names—the National Planning Board, the National Resources Board, the National Resources Committee.

Now, so far as I can determine from the reading of the statutes, the National Resources Planning Board has no statutory authority to perform any other functions or to undertake any other activities than those prescribed in the Employment Stabilization Act of 1931. The Employment Stabilization Act of 1931 provided for certain construction agencies "to prepare a 6-year advance plan" of construction, and "such supplemental estimates as he"—the President—"deems advisable for emergency appropriations, to be expended during such period upon authorized construction."

From a reading of this act it is clear that by the term construction was meant the erection of physical structures, which, of course, were for the use of the Federal Government. There is not the remotest possibility of reading into the law any authority whatever for the performance of the wide range of functions that are now being carried out by the National Resources Planning Board. Certainly there is nothing in the act which gives this Federal agency any authority to plan a new economic and social order, as its activities clearly indicate it is undertaking to do.

The fact that at present the number of persons employed by this agency, and the amount of funds allotted to it, as measured in terms of New Deal standards, is small—about a million dollars a year—is apt to give a false impression of its importance and the scope of its activities.

Before taking up the consideration of the program of the National Resources Planning Board, let us examine its organizational structure.

First. It should be noted that this body is now, as the President puts it in his letter of January 14, 1942, transmitting and recommending to the Congress the National Resources Development Report for 1942, "the planning arm of my Executive office."

To comprehend the influence and power this agency can exercise and wield it is essential that we grasp the full significance of its position in relationship to the Executive office of the President. To more clearly elucidate this point it may be well to quote another portion of the letter above referred to:

> The National Resources Planning Board * * * is charged with the preparation of long-range plans for the development of our national resources and the stabilization of employment. At my direction it is correlating plans and programs under consideration in many Federal, State, and private organizations for post-war full employment, security, and building America. In this report the Board outlines some of our major objectives in planning to win the peace.

Thus, it is clear that the National Resources Planning Board is in itself powerless and is merely the instrument of the President. He alone is responsible for its activities.

It should be remarked here that there is a vast difference between the amount and quality of peacetime powers the Chief Executive now possesses and those possessed by the Executive in 1931, when the Employment Stabilization Act was passed. And it is only when we fully realize the extent and kind of powers the Executive has usurped and the Congress has given him in the last decade, as well as the use to which he has been putting these powers, that we can comprehend the importance of the role the President plays in the national planning scheme that is being promulgated in the name of the National Resources Planning Board. The extent and scope of economic and social planning the Board can undertake is as great as the powers the President possesses.

Armed with the powers of the President and the Federal purse, the National Resources Planning Board goes forth to promote the new social order.

The primary elements in the organizational structure of the Board are the Chairman, Frederick A. Delano, an uncle of the President; the Director, several Assistant Directors, and so forth, with offices in Washington.

Next in order are the nine Regional Planning Commissions, with offices located at Boston, Baltimore, Richmond, Va., Atlanta, Indianapolis, Omaha, Denver, Portland, and San Francisco. Alaska comprises another planning region.

Under regional office organization in the 1939 progress report we read:

> Regional office personnel: The regional offices operate under the executive direction of part-time regional chairmen, and are also provided with the technical direction of regional counselors. A full-time planning technician, assisted by a full-time associate technician, is in administrative charge of a nucleus staff in the field office which can be easily expanded to provide the necessary personnel to serve the needs of special studies or programs.

Below the regional planning units are the State planning commissions, then the municipal planning commissions. The following from the 1939 progress report gives some idea of the position of the National Resources Planning Board in relation to State and local planning units:

> Activities of the field staff have continued to develop in six main directions: (1) Stimulation and encouragement of State and local planning—

Stimulation and encouragement, keep in mind, with Federal grants-in-aid, loans, and largesse—

(2) provision of the committee's technical consultants to regional and State planning agencies; (3) interrelating planning activity between planning agencies; (4) sponsorship of drainage basin committees for water resources planning; (5) collaboration with special committees on regional studies within their areal divisions; and (6) acting as a clearing house for information.

It is of interest to note that of the more than 40 States having planning commissions, practically all of them were set up under legislative authority enacted since 1933. A similar situation can be found in the case of the State acts that were passed to permit the establishment of State and local housing authorities, all of which were passed at the instance of the United States Housing Authority. So it appears the Federal bureaucracy is engaged quite extensively in lobbying laws through State legislatures—another way to destroy State rights.

Under the Agricultural Department nearly all 48 States have special planning committees with 1,294 members, and 1,433 active county-planning committees with 34,494 members, all engaged in various kinds of planning schemes for the farmers—Agriculture Statistics, 1941, page 714.

The National Resources Planning Board has numerous other connections, and it is impossible to mention all of them here.

In addition to this vast organization a multitude of Federal agencies are cooperating with the Board in its planning. Under the Employment Stabilization Act of 1931 there were some 20 or 25 construction agencies listed. Executive Order 8455 not only added a great many more—about 70 new ones are listed by the Board—to the list, but brought in a new kind of agency. The Employment Stabilization Act of 1931 applied more particularly to Federal agencies which required construction work to be done for their own services. Under Executive Order 8455, however, agencies "which aid construction activity through grants-in-aid, loans, other forms of financial assistance, or through guaranties from the Federal Government" were added. This included such agencies as W. P. A.—suspended but not abolished—the Federal Housing Agency, the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, which consists of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, Home Owners' Loan Corporation and United States Housing Corporation; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Rural Electrification Administration; Soil Conservation Service; Farm Security Administration and Farm Credit Administration.

Practically all of the lending agencies are under the control of the President, head of the Planning Board. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation alone is now authorized to make loans up to more than $12,000,000,000, and this amount is about to be increased by five billions, mostly for construction.

Nor is it likely the National Resources Planning Board is limiting itself strictly to the use of those agencies listed by it under the Employment Stabilization Act of 1931 and the ones added under Executive Order 8455. I notice in the National Resources Development Report the following:

Through the cooperation of Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board, Dr. Alvin Hansen of Harvard University is working on problems of fiscal policy in the post-defense period with particular reference to financing of public improvement projects.

Yet the Federal Reserve is not among the list of agencies given me by the Board. Dr. Hansen is a special adviser to the National Resources Planning Board, and plays a leading role in the formulation of its planning schemes.

Furthermore, their plans for social, educational, health, so-called security, and what not, would indicate the use of any and all State and local organizations interested in these subjects.

The slightest reflection will show that the use by the President of all these agencies becomes an immeasurable aid to him in his planning scheme. Thus it is seen that the National Resources Planning Board fronts a gigantic movement to plan the new social order.

What are the objectives of the National Resources Planning Board?

What and how does it plan?

Under the heading of "New Objectives" it says:

We look forward to securing, through planning and cooperative action, a greater freedom for the American people.

That is a pretty big order in itself, if it is meant that our people are to have greater liberty than was vouchsafed us under the Constitution and which was enjoyed by our earlier forebears. Apparently we are to believe the liberty we are now enjoying is as great as that which our forebears experienced, and the promise is that still more liberty is to be provided for us, for we are told by the planning agent the—great manifesto, the Bill of Rights, has stood unshaken 150 years. And now to the old freedoms we must add new freedoms.

Further:

Any new declaration of personal rights, any translation of freedom into modern terms—

Note the phrase "modern terms"—

here and now must include—

Not tomorrow, or next year, but instanter—

1. The right to work, usefully and creatively through the productive years.

2. The right to fair pay adequate to command the necessities and amenities of life in exchange for work, ideas, thrift, and other socially valuable service.

3. The right to adequate food, clothing, shelter, and medical care.

4. The right to security, with freedom from fear of old age, want, dependency, sickness, unemployment and accident.

5. The right to life in a system of free enterprise, free from compulsory labor, irresponsible private power, arbitrary public authority, and unregulated monopolies.

6. The right to come and go, to speak or to be silent, free from the spyings of secret police.

7. The right to equality before the law, with equal access to justice and fact.

8. The right to education, for work, for citizenship, and for personal growth and happiness; and

9. The right to rest, recreation, and adventure; the opportunity to enjoy life and take part in an advancing civilization.

It would seem this list would include about everything required to usher in the fully perfected millennium, at least for those of us in the United States, but apparently it does not.

It seems the planning cult has discovered some new amenities and beneficences that the Apostle John had not known, which are necessary to full and universal felicity of genus homo.

There are "plans for the international scene."

The supermillennium cannot be brought about for our people alone. It must be for all or none, for the French, the Turks, Chinese, Hottentots, Hindus, Soviets, English, all—maybe not quite all—there might be a probation period for aggressors.

From this point on—

Says the planning cult—

the American people will never again make the mistake of believing that we can have prosperity while the rest of the world collapses; or peace while the rest of the world is at war; or freedom while the rest of the world is being enslaved. It is therefore assumed that after the war we shall make our international policy and the international private interests conform to our desires for peace and the elevation of human dignity everywhere.

Our foreign policy will have an important bearing upon our domestic employment program when peace returns. Through an extension of lend-lease we shall certainly help feed the starving peoples of Europe—

Which will probably include all of them, for likely all of them will be starving by the time the war ends—until they can get on their feet. This will take all the food, shipping, trucks, and gasoline which we can muster and will call for plans now for the reorganization of this unprecedented gift to humanity.

After Europe's needs for food, clothing, and emergency medical care have been met, * * * perhaps then our greatest opportunity to help others economically will be found in Asia and in parts of North or South America, working in cooperation with the peoples and governments of those lands.

Asia alone is a pretty big place, and it will take a lot of milk to get a bottle a day to each one of its inhabitants.

The model—

That is the goal or program of the planners—further presupposes a figure of $10,000,000,000 for military outlays—

That is per annum—

including post-war international loans financed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as an integral part of some sort of international reconstruction finance corporation set up to engage in international lending and designed to facilitate the rehabilitation and reconstruction of countries devastated by the war, and the expansion of investment in industrially backward countries, including South America and China. (After the War—Full Employment.)

An international economic unit within the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is studying the possible international effects of domestic economic post-war programs. The international balance of payments that would arise from a heavy United States draft upon world raw materials is being postulated. In the light of these possibilities the unit is examining the desirable conditions for a resumption of foreign lending.

Whole groups of the population are to be shifted from one locality or region to another just as Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin have been doing in their countries.

What is the balance of farm and nonfarm families?—

The planning board asks, and then adds—

American agriculture * * * can provide all American balanced nourishment—and, indeed, feed some of the rest of the world—with 3,000,000 fewer people than now live on farms.

Mr. George D. Riley, in his column under the caption "Capital compass," in the Washington Times-Herald of February 3, 1942, says:

It seems the Bureau of Agricultural Economics wants to make 20 percent of the rural population of the United States move to cities after the war, whether the ruralites like it or not.

F. E. Elliott, Chief Agricultural Economist of the Department, says the plan to cut post-war rural population to its 80-percent level is in line with the projected revamping of American economy and possibly that of the entire world.

Nor are the city and town dwellers to be spared from being shifted en masse from one city or region to another.

Some mobility of population is essential in order that the labor supply may be adjusted to long-run regional differences in economic opportunity. There is much to be said, however, in favor of regulation of the rate of change and in many cases of restraining rapid movement. It is clearly inadvisable to attempt to maintain industry at or above previous levels in all areas. A shift of population may be the only way or the most efficient way of avoiding industrial misfits. Where alternative industries cannot be found, it may be necessary to aid in moving out population, to provide special training programs to adapt the populations to new types of work, and, in general, to shift the resource-use pattern of the region.

Labor is to be handled as chattel. Labor ought to see from this where it is headed for, what its real future security will be if the political planners have their way.

New industrial plants are to be located according to plan; old ones are to be shifted about like the tents of a moving army. The political hierarchy of planners in its infinite wisdom gives us the reason for this. It says:

In fact—

In fact, mind you, there being no theory or guesswork about it—the location of industries in their most suitable relation to production requirements and markets is in practice among the least automatic of economic adjustments.

Implying, of course, that said hierarchy of brains can supply the deficiency.

But now notice the sudden and complete mental lapse. Under Locational Programs and Their Possible Application, we read:

Various programs have been proposed in different quarters—

That is, political planning quarters—for the distribution of new industrial activity. Such programs have sought a variety of objectives, among which are: (1) urbanization—the placing of more industry in cities, particularly large cities—

How would the rural folks like that?—

(2) Ruralization—the encouragement of industrialization in small towns and farming areas—

But how would industrializing a rural community "ruralize," or make it more rural? And how would the city folks like that?—

(3) Suburbanization—the shifting of plants out of large cities to surrounding communities—

That is, somewhere between the city gates and where the "rustics" live—

(4) Delocalization—the breaking up of high concentration of single industries in particular areas;

(5) Dispersion—the spreading of industrial activity throughout the country more nearly in relation to population or area;

(6) Diversification—the encouragement of varied local economic structures; and

(7) Specialization—the concentration of an important part of local resources on the making of products for which the locality possesses superior advantages.

Which goes to show the utter lack of agreement, and confusion among the planners themselves as to what they would do with our industrial plants if they were given the power they seek to arbitrarily place and relocate them.

But regardless of utter lack of agreement among the political planners themselves on the subject, openly admitted by themselves, in spite of the fact that nowhere that I have seen do they exhibit any evidence of even elemental knowledge of why or how they propose to carry out this scheme, and notwithstanding the further fact that there is absolutely no demand by the public for this communistic program, they give us to understand that they are going ahead with it whether we like it or not. Feeling its oats, that is the vast powers usurped from the people, the State, operating through the National Resources Planning Board warns us that unless we accept this program willingly it has at hand the knout to bring us to terms. Here is its warning:

The balancing of locational programs and the most suitable means of implementation for public policy remain to be explored. Governmental authority is adequate to the means. Taxation, tariffs, price regulation, transportation and power regulation, labor legislation, public works, credit control, and financial assistance are all potentially effective instruments which the Federal Government may wield in its efforts to promote the development of a nationally integrated locational structure.

To force people to do things against their will we use weapons, not instruments.

Taxation, tariffs, price regulation, transportation and power regulation, labor legislation, public works, credit control, and financial assistance are all.

It might as well have added the police power, but it may have been considered a little early, for this is now to be used by the State as a weapon to bludgeon the American people into servility, into abject submission to its insatiable greed for power and spoliation.

And yet in the same breath the National Resources Planning Board says:

The basis of planning is not violence but reason, and the condition of most successful operation is not force but persuasion, cooperation, common participation in an effort for a common goal.

What duplicity and hypocrisy!

It is planned to raze our cities and rebuild them.

We must build—

The planners tell us—

not by the square block, but by the square mile.

And—

The task of making the Nation the better land we intend it to be is an enormous one. The neighborhood-in-the-city must be of a size and character that do not dwarf its inhabitants into anonymity, but provide a stage of sufficiently intimate scale so that the citizen can grasp it and play his role with satisfaction.

Millions of houses are to be built on farms and rural communities. Millions more in the cities.

T. V. A. is to be enlarged and made more powerful, and many more new T. V. A.'s are to be constructed throughout the country.

Transportation facilities, highways, flood-control education, water power, land use, and so forth, come under the planning program for development on a large scale.

Babies, children, and youth make green pastures for the political planners.

Children and youth cannot be kept in storage—

They say. Further—

They will not stop growing older merely because adults are preoccupied with the immediate aspects of national defense. For any view that looks to the post-war period, children and youth are the most significant among human beings. They are so significant because they are in process of becoming adults and because within limits that process can be guided. The care devoted to bringing young people safely along the paths to maturity will in large part be the measure of the contribution they will make, both as youth and adults, to our Nation's well-being.

We as a people cannot afford to cheapen the civilization we are defending by neglecting the quality of the generation for which we hold it in trust. There is no reasonable alternative to doing all in our power to insure young people the opportunity to grow into the best men and women they are capable of becoming.

Both the infant and the young child need the affection of emotionally mature parents and the atmosphere of security afforded by a stable household.

No wonder the National Resources Planning Board speaks of itself as a national resource when it can unearth such vital new truths as these.

But I do not find anything to show what color shirt they have selected for their youth movement.

And, of course, as could be expected, the schools are invaded. In the 1941 progress report we read:

Twenty-nine numbers of these (New England Planning Bulletin) have been published since October 1935. A major commission activity has been reports designed to interest the New England people in the region's problems and planning as a means for their solution.

Popular among these is the pamphlet From the Ground Up, which presents a series of timely planning discussions, each limited to one page of text facing illustrations of good and bad examples. Several thousand copies are in use in junior and senior high schools, in civics, geography, economics, and sociology courses. Likewise, the commission prepared a report to stimulate interest in local planning, Is Planning Practical for Your Town?

Finally, the National Resources Planning Board reaches the nadir point of its spoliation plan. It proposes, not forthrightly and openly, of course, but insidiously and slyly, to invade the domain of sex life among our young people. Mark well this salacity.

At about this period boys and girls become eager to make new friends. They look for opportunities to meet one another informally, under suitable circumstances. They begin to think vaguely about marrying and rearing families of their own. They need to be informed of the many important factors that enter into founding a successful home. They need help in working out a functioning personal philosophy of life, an attitude toward themselves, their fellow men, and the world in general.

PLANS FOR FINANCING AND FISCAL POLICY

From whence is the wherewithal to be derived for completely razing the American economy and building it anew on another pattern? From the same principal sources to which the Federal Government has resorted in the last 10 or 12 years to pay for the vast public works and relief programs it carried on during that time, namely, taxes and Treasury deficit financing. The latter will probably assume, so perhaps the planners plan, the same forms as they have in the past; namely, first, sales of securities to the public; second, forced loans to the banks.

Also the same irrationalism, confusion, and sophistry are present in the minds of the planners as have dominated the financial policies of the New Deal throughout.

The following is from Dr. Alvin Hansen, of Harvard University, who is working in cooperation with Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board—on problems of fiscal policy in the post-defense period, with particular reference to financing of public improvement projects:

All this expansion of services and improvements means governmental expenditures. The notion that we cannot finance our own production is quite without foundation. Every cent expended, private and public, becomes income for members of our own society. Costs and income are just opposite sides of the same shield. We can afford as high a standard of living as we are able to produce. But we cannot afford to waste our resources of men and material. We cannot afford to use them inefficiently. We cannot afford idleness, the idleness of $200,000,000,000 of income.

The public expenditures required to rebuild America, to provide needed social services, and to maintain full employment can be provided for out of the enormous income which the full utilization of our rich productive resources, material and human, makes possible. The costs of producing this income are merely payments to ourselves for the work done. There is not—there cannot be—any financing problem which is not manageable under a full employment income. From a $100,000,000,000 income we can raise large tax revenue—large enough to service any level of debt likely to be reached and to cover all other governmental outlays—and still retain for private expenditures more than we had left in former years under a $70,000,000,000 income with lower taxes. Taxes are merely one way of paying for social services and public improvement projects which we need. But it is not necessary or desirable under all circumstances to finance all public expenditures from taxes. Whether taxes should equal, fall short of, or exceed expenditures must be decided according to economic conditions.

The following are also excerpts from Dr. Hansen, taken from After the War—Full Employment:

Financial responsibility requires a fiscal policy (including governmental expenditures, loans, and taxes) designed to promote economic stability.

The tax funds collected to meet interest charges are not lost. They are paid right back again, largely to institutions that benefit the community as a whole. At the worst, the taxes are collected from one group of citizens and paid out to another group—the bondholders.

The public debt is something very different from private debt of an individual. An individual will always improve his asset position if he is able to pay off a part of his debt. But a nation may make itself poor by repayment of public debt. This is true because such repayment tends to cause deflation, depression, and unemployment. It is a good thing to pay off a part of the public debt if you want to check an excessive boom. It would be ruinous to pay off the public debt in a post-defense period when unemployment was spreading.

A public debt internally held has none of the essential earmarks of the private debt of an individual. A public debt is an instrument of public policy. It is a means to control the magnitude of the national income and, in conjunction with the tax structure, to affect income distribution.

In brief, it is reasonable to suppose that the ratio of consumption to income in a full employment economy would automatically tend to be higher than the ratio of consumption to income at the peak of a boom in a violently fluctuating economy. A full employment economy would tend automatically toward a distribution of income favorable to high consumption. This affords ground for optimism with respect to the feasibility of a positive program designed to maintain full employment. Such a policy, if successfully pursued, tends to develop repercussions upon the distribution of income which reinforce the program to maintain full employment.

Redistribution of income through progressive individual and corporate income taxes is less disruptive of these relations for the reason that such taxes apply only where the profit and income actually emerge.

The following from the 1942 National Resources Development Report:

We shall have to estimate the needed additions to private capital plant to meet consumer demands and the levels of national investment required to meet general public needs and to insure full employment.

There are many opportunities for government—Federal, State, and local—to aid private business in major fields of activity and investment where only new laws, new procedures, and new funds can unlock the door. Public action must, of course, be planned to meet general public needs. But, those needs which are met by private enterprise reduce by just that amount the remaining load on government.

Or did the persistence of this gigantic problem indicate that our economy of private enterprise and investment could not provide jobs for all?

Note the insinuation that private enterprise may be a failure.

If public provision of income on a substantial scale is not a temporary problem, but is to continue for a long time, are the several measures and methods which we have adopted to administer and finance these activities sound and constructive?

An important feature of the plan was the proposal for advances of funds to power equipment companies by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to insure continued peak production of turbine and generator units.

The full employment and prosperity which is coming with the war effort proves that we can have a full employment system and balance the production-consumption budget at a high level if we are determined to have it so, because we do have the necessary manpower, resources, productive plant, and organizing ability.

We have to make up our minds as a Nation that we will not permit a post-war depression to overwhelm us. We do not have to take economic defeat after the military victory is won. We can, if we will, maintain business prosperity. We can sustain a continuing demand for goods. We can keep industry going at high levels. We can maintain substantially full employment. We can achieve a society in which everyone capable of and willing to work can find an opportunity to earn a living, to make his contribution, to play his part as a citizen of a progressive, democratic country.

From the foregoing excerpts one also sees a continuation and accentuation of the trend of the last decade toward state intervention, control and ownership of property and the means of production and distribution.

Pump priming, though known to have been a total failure in eliminating unemployment in the thirties, nevertheless is to form an integral part of the plan.

In short, the same medicine that was applied by the New Deal in its attempt to cure the depression is now to be used to bring full employment, security for everybody, freedom from want, a higher standard of living for everybody, more leisure, more rest and greater liberty.

And the same medicine is to be applied to the other peoples of the earth to bring to them the good life.

The planners tell us the war has demonstrated that we can have full employment, and seem to think they have thereby found the key to end all unemployment. Mussolini and Hitler demonstrated that war can end unemployment. Just how the war formula is to be applied to achieve this result they do not say. However, the way the bureaucrats are using their powers in rationing, and so forth, it should be easy to see how that would be done.

One of the remarkable things about the New Deal planners is that they have now completely reversed their policy of promising us the good life by a program of scarcity, and instead, are now promising us the good life by a program of abundance.

The goal that is sought to be achieved by the President through the National Resources Planning Board can no longer remain in doubt. The Planning Board, with the approval of the President, boldly speaks of "modified free enterprise," and it is clear, though there is lip service enough to the contrary, that the program outlined involves nothing less than the absorption by the state of all economic functions and the complete demolition of all free enterprise.

With the loss of all free enterprise would go, of course, all liberties—free speech, the right to petition, freedom of worship, and so forth.

Take just one promise alone, that of full employment. What does it connote? If the state undertakes to guarantee to every worker the right to continuous and full employment, the state must of necessity also assume full responsibility for the operation of all industry. This would involve assumption by the state of complete and unlimited control over all industry.

The state would become sole employer, would factitiously fix the value of all services, labor and goods, and working hours. It would use all the force at its command which would be the whole police power including the armed forces, to carry out its decrees. It would involve a dictatorship as absolute as any in the world today. Nor would any worker have any place to go to complain.

But we should not be so foolish as to think if the state were given this absolute power it would of necessity make good its promise of full employment, in the sense, at least, in which we conceive the term. Mussolini, Hitler, and Lenin all proclaimed the right to work and promised full employment. None of them could fulfill his promise except by going to war.

But even suppose it were possible for the state to make good this promise, who wants to live under a state of abject slavery?

The Board, which is the planning arm of the President, speaks approvingly and in support of its planning scheme of "the rise of the national state with its economic programs."

Indeed, and to what countries or country do the political planners refer as having taken on that mode?

Which of the western countries, leaving Russia out, in more recent times has led the way in aggrandizing the state and belittling the individual, where the state became all and the individual nothing? Was it not Germany that made the pattern of "the state with its economic programs"? Perhaps it may be apropos to mention here that Germany also set the example of providing state so-called social security. She began her social-security scheme more than half a century ago.

The state with its economic programs is nothing new. Indeed it is of most ancient origin. Egypt, many thousands of years ago, typified this kind of social organization.

Feudalism was a type of state with its economic and security programs, and all of Europe slaved under it for many hundreds of years. The Incas of Peru developed it to the *n*th degree. Aye, it was "the state with its economic program" that caused all of our American ancestors to run away from Europe and come to this country and found a free people under a true government, which was characterized principally by the absence of the state with its economic programs.

The political planning cult elevates itself to the region of the gods and modestly tells us it "is a national resource."

That we knew before it told us. But what kind of resource is it—good or evil? It is a resource for spoliation, and in its worst form.

Strip their model to the skin, remove the gilding with which they have adorned it, and what do we see? We see the state treasury. We see that bursary become a vast reservoir. We see pouring into it the earnings of our laborers. Behold, we see those fruits of labor being ladled out to placemen and bureaucrats.

Say what you will, here is the hub of their whole planning scheme. All their declamation, all their protestations for the poor and downtrodden, all their promises of Utopia revolve about it.

Oh, yes, they gild their model with strong feeling of pity and love for the distressed. That is old stuff. As Bastiat pointed out, spoliation has always placed the fulcrum of its lever in heaven and sacrilegiously prided itself on the complicity of the gods.

What? They say the Bill of Rights has stood unshaken 150 years and promise us more freedom, when they had already, before the defense program was started, reduced our people to the abject status where they were compelled, in great measure, to appeal to the law to give value to their services; when they had succeeded in reducing at least one whole group, the farming community, comprising a fourth of our population, to the servile condition so as to place its members wholly at the mercy of the law to give their services value. What mockery! How far above the level of slavery has the New Deal planning left the farmers?

But whatever may be our views with regard to merits or demerits of any of the schemes of the planners, it is the exclusive function of Congress to deal with these subjects. That is the purpose for which the people elected us. We shall fail altogether in our duty if we do not eradicate this anomaly from our governmental structure.

There is absolutely no authority in law for the National Resources Planning Board to do anything more than set up a 6-year construction program for Federal public works. The authority it assumes to make our Nation over into a totalitarian regime has been usurped, as so many of the powers the Executive holds have been arbitrarily wrested from us. I repeat, it is a grave menace to our Nation and must be abolished, root and branch.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONTINUING AUTHORITY OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 65) for printing in the RECORD:

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 26, of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 321 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 90 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and continued under House Resolution 420 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1945, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this time in order to speak about the Dies committee and to make some comments on the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], on Monday last, and subsequent events here in the House.

With much of what the gentleman from Texas had to say there can be no disagreement. That he stressed the importance of the vigor and independence of the national legislature every Member of this body will agree. When he states that Communists should not be employed by the Government everyone will agree, and will also add that no one who is a Nazi or Fascist in his loyalty ought to be so employed. When he appeals for national unity everyone will not only agree, but utter a fervent "Amen." But let us go beneath the surface a little in each of these cases.

There are certain things requisite to assure the vigor and independence of the national legislature and they run somewhat deeper I believe than the things mentioned by the gentleman from Texas. As I stated before in connection with a previous report of the Committee on Un-American Activities, it is my opinion that the Congress holds within its own hands the key to its own independence and power. I do not believe anyone from outside of Congress can hurt it greatly, provided the Congress itself and within itself is constructive, farsighted, determined, and unafraid. Neither do I believe that Members of Congress want to represent themselves as being properly immune to criticism or attack. I do not for a single moment excuse false accusations against Members of Congress, particularly when organizations of one kind or another make such accusations. I have suffered from this sort of thing myself on a good many occasions and especially in my last campaign, but I have been inclined to put it down as one of the more or less inevitable consequences of public life in America and have attempted to do the best I could to combat such influences. Above all I do not think it should be represented as an un-American activity, for people who themselves have certain convictions about the right course for this country to follow, to attempt to oppose Members of Congress who do not agree with that point of view.

I have, of course, no defense for action by any organization which fails to consistently and carefully apply the standards it itself has selected for the judgment of Members of Congress records in making its appraisal of them. And I am frank to say that I think this was done by at least one of the organizations mentioned by the gentleman from Texas. It is true, however, that at the present time there are large numbers of people throughout this country who sincerely are committed to seeing that America does not lose the peace after this war is won. They feel desperately that had different policies been followed after the last war and had the leadership of Woodrow Wilson prevailed in this country, the present war might not have taken place. They do not want to see a repetition of those same mistakes. These people it seems to me have a right to express their point of view as freely as they see fit. Members of Congress will naturally want to rise up on this floor and oppose with all the vigor at their command people who attack them or are in opposition to their points of view or attempt to bring about their defeat. But to state or to imply that such action constitutes an un-American or unpatriotic activity is quite another matter and is in my judgment unjustified.

In the second place, the problem of preventing Communists from being employed in the Government is one upon which, as I have said, there will be no substantial disagreement in the House. I want to say that the head of one Government agency called me to ask if I would not help him to see the evidence bearing on one of the employees of that agency in order that he might take such action as seemed called for. I want also to say that I think this responsible head is doing exactly the right thing.

But the standard set up by the gentleman from Texas in his speech was not that of whether or not a person is a Communist, but rather whether or not they fell into a certain category which the gentleman characterized as "crackpot." Now I find it difficult myself sometimes to understand just why some of the governmental agencies cannot do a better job than they do of picking their personnel. Nor do I derive any satisfaction from finding from time to time that individuals with past records which are, to say the least, colorful, are occupying positions on the Government pay roll. But I think it a very dangerous thing, indeed, in America for us to attempt to set up any other standard than that of loyalty to our country as the basic test of whether or not a man is worthy of trust. That standard was not used.

It is important in the first place to understand clearly the circumstances surrounding the speech of the gentleman from Texas last Monday. The speech was delivered at a time when the Committee on Un-American Activities was not in existence. Needless to say none of the material contained in that speech constituted action by the Committee on Un-American Activities. And the speech, therefore, was an expression of the point of view of the gentleman from Texas personally and must be so understood. Nevertheless, the speech was based upon material obtained through the Committee on Un-American Activities by the use of its subpena power and its investigative staff, and it is, therefore, extremely difficult to draw the line between where the activities of the gentleman as an individual Member of Congress end and where his work as chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities begins. No one will question the right of the gentleman from Texas to speak as freely as any other Member of the House in expressing his point of view, nor will anyone doubt the great effectiveness with which he always does this. But it is partly because of the inevitable confusion arising from this situation that I am now speaking.

The gentleman from Texas has, of course, a perfect right to set up his own individual standards and to protest the employment of any person he chooses. And it may be that in some cases, had I seen the evidence I might agree with him. The gentleman told me I could see the evidence, but so far, though I have tried repeatedly, I have been unable to see any of it.

But since I am convinced that a large number of Members of the House conceived the speech of the gentleman on Monday last to be an expression of opinion on the part of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I have been impelled to make this speech. For if the House is to undertake to scrutinize and pass judgment upon the personnel of the various Government agencies, it must have a standard which it can defend when it does so. The gentleman from Texas himself did not claim the list he submitted in his speech consisted necessarily of persons who were Communists or friendly to the Communist cause, though in some instances he did make that charge. In a number of cases, however, he himself stated specifically that the person in question was not a Communist, but that he fell into some other category roughly described as "crackpot."

A few examples will suffice to illustrate my point.

First, I am in receipt of a letter from Father R. A. McGowan of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, regarding Catherine Kellock, one of the persons mentioned by the gentleman from Texas. Father McGowan states he has known Miss Kellock for a long time and can vouch for her in every respect. I find it difficult to believe that a person who receives a recommendation like that can be subversive or dangerous to the country in any way.

In the second place I refer to the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT], regarding Mr. McKee, another man mentioned by the gentleman from Texas. Mr. McKee is a rather well-to-do businessman in Pittsburgh who has been spending his money for the purpose of promoting what he terms the proper foreign policy on the part of the United States, and specifically to try to bring about a greater degree of participation by the United States in international efforts to maintain peace after the war. Regardless of whether one agrees with Mr. McKee's point of view, it seems to me certain that he has a right if he chooses to spend his money to advance the ideas in which he believes for precisely the same reason that a person who diametrically disagrees with Mr. McKee's position has and frequently exercises the same right. It may be interesting as a sidelight on Mr. McKee's political point of view to state that he cast his vote for Mr. Herbert Hoover not only in 1928 but again in 1932.

In the case of Mr. Paul Porter, I am informed that Mr. Porter has been a strong anti-Communist throughout his whole life. And I would also call the attention of the House to the fact that he recently was elected Chairman of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee by the votes of the representatives of the Army, the Navy, and the Maritime Commission. From what I can discover he is doing a very splendid job in keeping shipbuilding production moving. I just wonder whether this activity can be fairly described as dangerous to our country.

Finally, in the case of Mr. Guissepi Facci, mentioned by the gentleman from Texas. From what I can discover this man has been an ardent opponent of Mussolini and Italian fascism ever since that form of government was brought about in Italy. He has made a good many anti-Fascist speeches and in some instances those speeches, as I understand it, were made before groups which our committee has determined to be Communist front organizations. Mr. Facci states that he made no more speeches before any such organizations after he knew what their nature was. He has been very highly recommended by Mr. Henry F. Grady, the former Assistant Secretary of State of the United States, and presently the president of the Dollar Line Steamship Co., who has known Mr. Facci a great many years. It seems a bit strange that we should include on the list of those accused of un-American activities the name of a person because of the fact that he has been ardently active in opposition to the Italian regime with which the United States is at present at war.

On Friday last, the House came within 7 votes of taking what would have been recorded as one of the most unjust actions in the history of the Congress. It came that close to adopting an amendment which would have denied the opportunity to work for the Government of this Nation to 38 people, without giving any of them an opportunity to be heard in their own defense, without any committee of the House having recommended such action, and, in the case of a number of the people, without any charge having been lodged against them except that in the judgment of one member they fall into the vague category of "crackpots."

In that group would have been included, as we now know, one man now serving overseas in the Army of his country; one serving in Africa with the Red Cross; three others who have been off the Federal pay roll for months; a man chosen by votes of Army, Navy, and Maritime Commission to head the work of stabilizing the work of the shipbuilding industry; an Italian-American whose main effort through the years, whatever his mistakes, has been to contact the influence among Italian-Americans of the Mussolini regime against which this Nation is now at war; a woman highly recommended by a priest of the Catholic Church.

As to some of the persons included in the list the gentleman from Texas may have a real case. If so, the facts should be determined, as he himself suggested, by the Appropriations Committee, with recommendations to the House.

I want to say at this point I very much approve of the suggestion brought forward by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations this afternoon.

But the main fact is still clear, and it goes to the very root of what I have been saying for 4 years: Things like this, mistakes like this, ought not to be laid in the lap of the House until the most mature consideration has been given them, not by one Member but by a whole committee working on problems of this sort.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Do you mean that you think this investigation should be by the Rules Committee or by this special committee proposed in the resolution?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, as I understood him, came forward with a proposal that a special group of the Appropriations Committee should be set up to deal with all cases of this character in connection with all appropriation bills, and make an appropriate report of their findings to the House. That is what I had reference to.

And there remains also the more fundamental issue—namely, that in my judgment it is all wrong to submit to the House a list of persons to be proscribed when the basis of that list is not communism, fascism, disloyalty, subversion, or any of these, but only a generalized charge that their views are somehow unacceptable to someone else.

Now, where does that leave us, and what is the ultimate result of such a point of view?

Well, if we are going in for lists of crackpots we ought to be even-handed about the matter. And it is quite as possible to make up a list of persons that one can describe as crackpot on one side of the fence as it is upon the other. A man can be a crackpot conservative as easily as a crackpot radical and you could find things written in the past to indicate it. My own very definite point of view is that unless a person can be shown to be committed to a philosophy of government which is contrary to the basic constitutional institutions of the United States, unless he can be shown to be disloyal to America, he ought not under any circumstances to be placed in the same category with those against whom such charges can be made. And furthermore if this is done, and the line becomes blurred between the real totalitarian at either extreme on the one hand and sincere American on the other, whether they be extremely reactionary or extremely progressive, we are in for trouble. The tendency to describe as unworthy, unfit, or un-American those with whom one does not agree politically will, in my judgment, if pursued far enough, lead inevitably to a situation which will play directly into the hands of the Communists on the one hand and the Nazis and Fascists on the other—and give them the very field and opportunity which they have used most effectively in the past in other countries. It is obviously to their interest to draw into the orbit of their influence as many people as possible and to confuse insofar as they can the public mind in order to lead people generally to think that there is little, if any, difference between a Fascist and a Conservative, or a Communist and a Progressive. If those charged with the task of exposing un-American activities lend credence to these very ideas they are rendering their own cause a disservice and greatly lessening the effectiveness of their work against real totalitarian elements. This has been my position from the beginning.

One of the cornerstones upon which our country has been built is that of the right of political minorities to exist and express their opinions. In speaking of political minorities, I am not talking about groups which seek by unconstitutional methods to undermine and destroy the structure of constitutional government and to impose a dictatorship by a class or group. I am talking about people who believe either in the necessity of very much more conservative policies than those being pursued by the Government or very much more progressive policies than those being pursued by the Government.

And I would like to state at this point that the course of my own political experience has led to the strong belief that progress for the common man is not by any means necessarily to be associated with increased power on the part of a central government, although in the case of certain types of problems governmental action seems to me to be absolutely necessary, if the weak are to be fairly protected and the strong appropriately restrained. The issue here, however, is one which becomes of tremendous consequence in time of war, for at that time the effort of every one of us should be to bind together the efforts of every American who is loyal and devoted to his country's cause.

The war has not yet burned deeply enough into the consciousness of many of us to scorch away the superficial differences which have existed in the past and to make us feel that kinship with other loyal Americans which we shall need before this struggle is over, and which above all we shall need in the reconstruction of our country and the finding of her proper place in the world after the war has been won. In England the experiences of the war have apparently led to that very result. It has for the time being at least obliterated many old antagonisms, has caused people to cling to one another regardless of their differences much more closely than ever before, and it has made people there welcome rather than scoff at proposals that offer substantial hope for a happier day tomorrow for the heroes who will come back from battle. The men who win this war will, as the gentleman from Texas said, want the basic structure of our constitutional Government to remain—they will want us to protect while they are gone a precious heritage of free institutions that no other large nation ever has known. But those men will also demand a chance, a full big fair chance, at a good job with opportunity to grow and develop. And they are going to get it.

The crux of this portion of my speech is a question. Once we depart from the standard of loyalty to our country in passing judgment on people, what standard are we to use? Are we to use the standard of who is a "crackpot" in the judgment of the gentleman from Texas, or in the judgment of the Department of Justice, or in the judgment of the gentleman from California who is now addressing the House? In every case that standard would obviously be different and in every case I submit it would be wrong. The whole future hope of America lies in not dividing ourselves politically between two bitterly hostile groups, one calling the other Fascist and the other calling the one Communist, when neither epithet is true or accurate. Our hope lies rather in our drawing political lines as nearly as we can between the real totalitarians of each extreme and the vast majority of us in the middle fighting out our political battles in the traditional American way.

I come now to a discussion of the necessity of national unity in America. I submit such unity can only be established around a certain point of view which stresses big issues and not little ones. Our greatest issue is the defeat of our enemies in this war. Another issue of importance is the place of the Congress in our National Government. And the third is the winning of the peace and the establishment of a condition of prosperity in our own country after the war.

In order to achieve unity around these issues it is necessary that we combat with all the effort at our command those forces abroad and at home who would give aid and comfort to our enemy. That enemy today is Germany, Japan, and Italy—the Fascist powers of the world. It is for this reason that I have tried to emphasize the importance of this committee's contributing to national unity by laying its major emphasis upon the problem of exposing the propaganda efforts of these powers and their friends and agents. In saying that, however, I want to completely disavow statements which have been made over the air to the effect that pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists were supposed to be included in such a category of people. I do not think there is any more right to saying that a man is sympathetic to Nazis or Fascists because he was isolationist than it is to say he is a friend of the Communists because he entertains progressive political views. My own personal opinion is that the pursuit of an isolationist policy after this war will be dangerous to the future peace of this Nation and the world. But this certainly does not lead me to feel that anybody advocating such a policy is any more un-American that I am.

Concern has been expressed over the difficulty of determining what constitutes a person who is a Fascist or a Nazi in America. I want to say on this point in the first place that I deplore quite as much the tendency on the part of certain groups to shout Fascist at every conservative, as I do the tendency on the part of other groups to shout Communist at people who are not Communist at all. But when people ask "What is a Fascist?" I would reply by asking them "What is a Communist?" If to that question it is replied that a Communist is a member of the Communist Party, then I would set up a standard that a Fascist or a Nazi is a person who is a member of the German-American Bund or an Italian or a Japanese organization and who takes his line from such foreign sources. But if people are going to define a Communist in some big category of people who somehow seem to be too far to the left, then inevitably the corresponding definition of Fascist moves over to include people who in some other people's judgment are too far to the right.

How we can achieve national unity if we are going to use definitions of this sort I am unable to see.

The thing we must look for is efforts on the part of the Axis Powers to break down America's will to victory by various propaganda devices. Undoubtedly this is being attempted every day.

These are some of the forms that Axis propaganda will take:

First. "Germany and Japan can never be defeated, the least we can hope for is a draw. There is no use to count upon a real victory."

Second. "The American cause is being betrayed by our country's own leadership."

Third. "This war is not a battle for democracy, but is the result of a plot by international big business or the Jews or somebody else. Hitler and Hirohito are really not such bad fellows."

Fourth. "America cannot trust her allies so we had better not give any aid to them but instead keep all our material in this country to protect ourselves against invasion."

Fifth. "The President deliberately steered America into the war when it could have been avoided."

Sixth. "The American Government is honeycombed with disloyal people."

Seventh. "There is a plot being developed by capital or labor or new dealers or reactionaries or somebody to take over the country after the war is over. It is more important to prevent this than to defeat Hitler."

Eighth. "America cannot win the war without going bankrupt."

Ninth. "England is not doing her share of the fighting, so why should we?"

Tenth. "The only purpose of this war is to protect the British Empire."

Eleventh. "The war does not need to interfere with the normal way of living of Americans, but the Government deliberately creates shortages, maladjustments, and difficulties just so it can increase its power."

These 11 false ideas are some of the ones which our enemies will try to get the American people to believe.

This is not to say that those who make such statements are necessarily disloyal to the United States. But it does mean that this type of propaganda should be combated by all of us who are devoted to a real victory on the part of our Nation.

Achievement of national unity then calls above all things for the application of a test of loyalty about which I have already spoken, before we pass judgment on any of our fellow citizens.

Young people throughout all history have been inclined to venture farther into fields of new and progressive thought about mankind and its problems than have old people. In my opinion a terrific loss would be sustained by our country and by its free institutions if by the action of this Congress, or a committee thereof, young people were rendered fearful of thinking along progressive lines. I say this particularly because I anticipate that the men now fighting this war will want to have something to say about a constructive solution of the problems of the peace.

For the past 4 years I have been a member of the Dies committee.

As a progressive in my political beliefs, I believe the committee has rendered a service to the cause of true American progressives by exposing the methods used by Communists to attempt either to dominate, use, or destroy progressive organizations. I believe it has rendered a service to the labor movement by pointing out who the Communists in its ranks are. To a lesser extent the committee has rendered a service to sincere conservatives by pointing out how Nazi and Fascist individuals and philosophies have attempted to infiltrate into, to use, and, if possible, to dominate conservative organizations.

A committee of this sort can serve a useful purpose.

But during the past year, in addition to several dissents from personal statements of other members, I have twice dissented from reports of the committee. One of these occasions was that of the last annual report. I did not sign it but appended a statement of minority views to it instead. The New York Herald Tribune, among other established newspapers, agreed editorially and without qualification with the position I took on that occasion.

My position has been, and is, that the committee's work should constitute exposure of all types of prototalitarian activities, Communist, Fascist, or Nazi, and especially to expose disloyalty to the United States and propaganda seeking to undermine that loyalty. I do not believe it is in the committee's province to sit in judgment on the political views of any loyal American, be he reactionary or radical. With the outbreak of war between our country and the Fascist powers, I believed the major task of the committee lay in the field of exposure of activities friendly or helpful to our enemies, and the philosophies they represent.

It has been no particularly easy task to constitute a minority of one on a committee of this sort.

In previous years I have proposed rules of procedure to guide the committee's work and action. I have been 100 percent unsuccessful in getting any of them adopted. I shall attempt at this time to tell neither the House nor myself that such rules will be adopted by the committee. It just is not in the cards.

I believe there are things such a committee should do: first, to investigate with equal zeal all totalitarian movements; second, to avoid accusation against persons in the absence of either substantial documentary evidence or an opportunity to be heard; third, to act as a committee and to afford to all members an opportunity to carry out their responsibilities to the House and to the country as members; and so forth, and most important, to avoid so far as possible domestic political controversy and to give—so long as this war shall last—major emphasis in its work to the defeat of the propaganda of enemy powers.

As I have worked on this speech and thought about the whole matter of my own relationship to the committee I have naturally been confronted with the decision as to whether or not I should remain a member of it. I have told one or two people that I would stay on the committee and do the best job I could along the lines just outlined. But I want in all honesty to say to these people and to the House that as I think about this question it becomes more and more difficult for me to see my way clear to follow that course.

I should like to close by stating that I am devoted to this Congress. My service in it has been the greatest privilege I have ever known. I like to see congressional committees independent of influence from the Executive or any other place. Because, however, I am thus devoted to the Congress, I am at all times concerned that its work be dignified and effective, and I do not want anything done by us here to be recorded in the chronicles of the future as narrow-minded, bigoted, foolish, or unfair.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a chart and table showing inductions, enlistments, and registrations by States, and other information concerning our armed forces in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Texas delegation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] is recognized for 45 minutes.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, in the course of my speech I will explain the necessity for having to take the time of the House at this late hour.

Mr. Speaker, once again the House is called upon to extend the life of the Dies committee. Heretofore on five separate occasions the request has been to extend its term for only 1 year. Now we are asked to grant it a 2-year lease on the power and prestige of the House. Just why 2 years on this occasion has not been explained. Is it because the decisive events of 1943 will reveal more vividly to the American people the exact and true role of the committee? Is it because the execution of the policy of our Nation and of the United Nations to force the unconditional surrender of the Axis Powers will make it clear that the role of the Dies committee is not only incompatible with such a policy, but in fact, a potential obstacle to complete attainment of that goal? Is it because it is necessary to have it on hand to use it as a spearhead in the drive by domestic Fascists to defeat a people's peace after a victorious people's war? Is it to insure its existence as a weapon to be used against Progressives and Liberals in the election of 1944, as it was utilized in the elections of 1938 and 1940? Is it because the chairman of this committee and its defenders fear to meet the test of 1943 and therefore refuse to submit themselves to a verdict of approval or disapproval at the beginning of 1944?

Certainly if the chairman of this committee and its advocates have confidence in its performance of the past, the present, and during this year, they should have no fear of judgment by the Members of this House and by the American people in January or February of 1944. Again I ask, why a continuance of 2 years, and why by virtue of this 2-year resolution, which the Rules Committee has now presented to this House, deprive this Congress of its right to pass upon the continuance of this committee for 1944?

Further, why the blitzkrieg method employed in reporting out this resolution? In the past, Members have had an opportunity, and so have representatives of organizations including labor, church, and civic groups, to appear before the Rules Committee and voice their objections. Why has this practice, which has been traditional in the House, been flagrantly disregarded this time? Why have the 6 or 7 Members who asked to do so been shut off from the opportunity to appear before the Rules Committee?

The resolution for the creation of a committee of this nature originates in the Rules Committee. From the standpoint of procedure it is in the same position as any bill before any of the legislative committees of the House. Members and nonmembers have never been barred from testifying as to the merits or demerits of any legislation before any committee. The resolution for the continuance of the Dies committee, as I have stated, is no different from any other bill and the Rules Committee in this case sits in no different capacity from any other committee of the House. Therefore, why the extraordinary procedure and why was this peculiar protection from the scrutiny of public opinion granted to this resolution?

Instead of allowing full and free discussion, we shall be constrained to vote this resolution up or down with only 30 minutes allowed to the opposition, and when that 30 minutes is divided, Members opposed to the bill who desire to speak will scarcely be allowed more than a minute or two in which to describe the devastating and dangerous role that this committee has played and will play in the most critical period in the history of our country. Just why has it become so necessary to surround this resolution for the continuance of this committee with all of this protection, which makes mockery out of the democratic procedure of this legislative body?

The setting aside of the democratic and traditional procedure of the House cannot be justified by the statement made by the author of the resolution that everybody is for the committee. That smacks too much of the glibness of the language employed by the Nazis to justify the destruction of democratic institutions. Further, the appearance of unanimity which the proponents of this committee seek to give us is not warranted by the facts. The other day 1,250 prominent American citizens signed a petition urging that this committee not be continued.

The following are a few, representing a cross section of these distinguished signers:

Fay E. Allen, member, City Board of Education, Los Angeles, Calif.; Frank E. Baker, president, State Teachers College, Milwaukee, Wis.; Dean Harold Benjamin, College of Education, University of Maryland, College Park, Md.; Mary McLeod Bethune, president, National Council of Negro Women, Washington, D. C.; John W. Bollinger, president, Farmers Union Livestock Commission Co., Flasher, N. Dak.; Mary E. Branch, president, Tillotson College, Austin, Tex.; Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis, Washington, D. C.; Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, president, Palmer Institute, Sedalia, N. C.; Zechariah Chafee, Jr., professor of law, Cambridge, Mass.; Alvin B. Christmas, State director, Pennsylvania Farmers Union, Centerport, Pa.; Harold G. Coffman, president, George Williams College, Chicago, Ill.; Rabbi Henry Cohen, Galveston, Tex.; George Dahl, professor of Old Testament, Yale Divinity School, New Haven, Conn.; John W. Davis, president, West Virginia State College, Institute, W. Va.; Rev. John Warren Day, dean of Grace Cathedral, Topeka, Kans.; Albert Einstein, Princeton, N. J.; Charles A. Ellwood, professor of Sociology, Duke University, Durham, N. C.; Dean Alvin E. Evan, law school, University of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.; Dr. Ernest Feise, professor of medicine, Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, Md.; Robert J. Harris, associate professor of government, Louisiana State University, editor, Journal of Politics, Baton Rouge, La.; Rev. W. H. Jernagin, chairman executive board, Fraternal Council of Negro Churches, Washington, D. C.; Helen Keller, Westport, Conn.; U. S. Lathrop, secretary, Lee County Taxpayers Association, Donnellson, Iowa; Ralph Linton, chairman, department of anthropology, Columbia University, New York, N. Y.; Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, Alma, Calif.; Dudley Nichols, film writer and director, Los Angeles, Calif.; John S. Nollen, chairman of War Savings Committee for Iowa, Grinnell, Iowa; Rev. G. Bromley Oxman, the Methodist Church, Boston, Mass.; Arthur Upham Pope, chairman, Committee for National Morale, New York, N. Y.; Bishop Reverdy C. Ransom, A. M. E. Church, Wilberforce, Ohio; Paul Robeson, concert artist; William Jay Schieffelin, vice president, American Bible Society, New York, N. Y.; Glenn J. Talbott, president, North Dakota Farmers Union, Jamestown, N. Dak.; Mary E. Woolley, president emeritus, Mount Holyoke College, Westport, N. Y.; William Lindsay Young, president, Park College, Parkville, Mo.

Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the executive council and the legislative conference of the C. I. O., speaking for 5,000,000 organized workers, have asked for the discontinuance of this committee.

Hundreds of American Federation of Labor locals have gone on record against the continuance of the Dies committee. Only last week the committee received the condemnation of conservative newspapers such as the New York Herald Tribune and the New York Times and the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser.

Therefore I fail to see how "everybody," as its proponents say, has endorsed this committee. Unless, of course, by "everybody" they mean George Sylvester Viereck, now in a Federal penitentiary, convicted as a Nazi agent, who said:

I have the highest respect for the Dies committee and sympathize with its program.

Or perhaps by "everybody" they mean Fritz Kuhn, leader of the bund, and now serving a term in Sing Sing Penitentiary, in New York State, for grand larceny, who said:

I am in favor of it—

The Dies committee—

to be appointed again, and wish them to get more money.

Or perhaps they mean Mr. Colescott, imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, who said in a pamphlet:

Behind the whole fight on the Ku Klux Klan has been that hand of an insidious alien influence. The vicious fight on the klan sprang from the same source which has fought the Dies committee from the day of its inception.

It is only natural that the klan endorses the Dies committee. Or perhaps by "everybody" they mean Mr. J. B. Matthews, who has been drawing a salary of $7,500 a year from the committee appropriation and who is, indeed, an ambidextrous performer. With one hand he drafts the reports of the Dies committee and with the other, or perhaps with the same, writes articles for the Kontra-Komintern — international propaganda sheet of Adolf Hitler. For a piece of disgusting intellectual debauchery I recommend his book, The Odyssey of a Fellow Traveler, which contains the most lurid confession of duplicity and double-dealing. It is available in the Congressional Library.

I hold here in my hand a photostatic copy of Kontra-Komintern, containing the articles written for Adolf Hitler's propaganda sheet—articles written by none other than the chief investigator of the Dies committee. These are photostats. Any Member of the House who would like to examine them can do so now or come up to my office tomorrow and look at them.

When we indulge in the dangerous practice of withholding funds for payment of salary to employees in the executive branches, we have in Mr. Matthews a very good case for similar treatment for one on the pay roll of our own branch of the Government.

No, Mr. Speaker, it is evident that not everybody is for the committee, when we bear in mind that the Commander in Chief of the United States described the procedure of this committee as sordid; that the Vice President of the United States and the Attorney General of the United States have condemned its activities in even stronger terms.

I may also add the name of Wendell Willkie, titular leader of the Republican Party, among those patriotic Americans who has recently applauded the gentleman from California [Mr. ROGERS] for his statement in opposition to Mr. DIES.

Obviously, not everybody supports the committee, and it is precisely the opposition of millions of people that demands that the traditional democratic procedure of the House not be scrapped in order to protect this resolution and the Dies committee from a thorough airing and a thorough examination before the membership of this House.

As no adequate debate will be had on this resolution, I am compelled to avail myself of this opportunity of drawing the attention of the House to some of the salient points of argument against the continuance of the Dies committee.

The committee has recently published a report, to justify its existence and continuance. The report is divided into three parts, the third containing seven subheadings.

The high light of the first part of the report is:

That the committee originally had 3 file cabinets and now has 135 file cabinets, and that its index "contains over 1,000,000 cards, each containing information on individuals and organizations engaged in subversive activities." According to census reports, this means 1 card for every 130 men, women, and children in the country. I submit this record, without further comment, to the common sense of the membership of this House.

Part 2 of the report deals with so-called Communists in the Government, together with the narrative of Mr. DIES' quarrel with the Attorney General and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It is true, as the report states, that Mr. DIES submitted 1,124 names to the Attorney General for investigation. However, it is likewise true that on September 2, 1942, Attorney General Biddle submitted his report to the House on the investigation called for, showing that only two of the total number were unfit in his opinion to remain in the service, and had been discharged. I pointed out that the Attorney General was assisted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and here we are asked in this report to accept Mr. DIES and Mr. Matthews as better investigators than the F. B. I. and the Department of Justice.

In the first two sections of part 3 of the report, Mr. DIES again raises the Red bogey and again Red-baits American labor. It is to be remembered that this report was published January 2, 1943, when American workers are giving their sons, their toil, their services, and their money for victory against the Axis. The publication of this Red smear on labor at this time furthers one objective close to the heart of the enemy, that is, to injure the reputation of American labor and thereby cause disunity in our ranks.

Subdivision 3 of part 3 is a rehash of the Yellow Book, which I exposed from the Well of this House last year. For the benefit of the new Members, I relate some of the facts in connection with that Yellow Book, issued as a report of the committee of its investigation of Japanese activities.

I charged and proved on the floor of the House that many of its pages were an exact, word-for-word, comma-for-comma, period-for-period copy of material on the Japanese contained in a 10-cent news letter, published by the News Research Service, Inc., located at 727 Seventeenth Street, Los Angeles, Calif., on July 16, 1941, months before the publication of the Yellow Book.

Former Representative Thomas Eliot, of Massachusetts, established beyond reasonable doubt that the other pages were taken from books and publications found in the Congressional Library. Mr. DIES sought to justify this action by producing on the floor of this House a telegram sent to him after my exposure, by the publisher of the news letter, in which he stated that Mr. DIES was at liberty to use this material. As if this changed the picture. The issue raised was not that of technical plagiarism. I exposed the fact that Mr. DIES sought to give to this Congress a report of the work, investigation, research, and findings of the committee which turned out to be written material contained in a news letter, written and circulated to the public at the price of 10 cents, by one not even remotely connected with the committee.

Under the same heading of Japanese activities, Mr. DIES in his report states as follows:

> A direct result of the committee's report on Japanese subversive activities in this country was the removal of the Japanese population from vital west coast areas.

Of course, the War Department had nothing to do with this, nor the President, nor the Department of Justice. If we are to believe this report, the removal of the Japanese was a direct result of the committee's report in the Yellow Book which, I repeat, was a reprint of publications in the Congressional Library and of a 10-cent news letter.

Is it any wonder therefore that we find a member of the committee itself, Mr. VOORHIS, referring to this claim of the committee, saying, in his minority report:

> But when the committee states in conclusion of this section that the removal of the Japanese from west coast areas was "a direct result of the committee's report on Japanese subversive activities in this country," I believe it is making an extravagant claim.

That is the language of one of the members of the committee discrediting one of the claims made by the committee in this report which we now have in the House.

In the light of this exposure the record stands clearly, that the Dies committee has done nothing to further our war against Japan.

In subsection 4 of part 3 the committee seeks to take credit for an alleged investigation of anti-Semitic activities. When this took place and how and where we are not told. All we do know, however, is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] himself, only a week ago, sought to justify a lack of real investigation in this field by throwing a legalistic cloak around anti-Semitism In the record of his speech in the House—page 484, February 1, 1943—we find this language:

> I do not hold with those who condemn anyone on account of his race or creed, but there is no law against a man being intolerant as much as we deplore intolerance.

First of all, this is not true. Laws against intolerance exist on the statute books of many States, and an exposure of those who engage in this practice would help toward a suppression of it. Further, the people have not asked Mr. DIES to be a prosecutor in the courts. The request has been repeatedly made that those who engage in this subversive activity should be exposed.

The committee is supposed to investigate un-American and subversive activities. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] deny that intolerance is an un-American activity? Does he fail to realize that particularly anti-Semitism was one of the main subversive activities with which Adolf Hitler forced himself into power in Germany?

However, it is most illuminating to note what one of the most active anti-Semites and apostles of intolerance in America today, Mr. Gerald L. K. Smith, whose publication The Cross and the Flag was recently mentioned in an indictment as a publication employed in a conspiracy against the security of our Nation in time of war, has had to say in regard to the committee.

> As a national chairman of the Committee of One Million, the writer is proud to report that when Mr. DIES asked for a continuation of his committee, together with an additional appropriation, the Committee of One Million carried a petition bearing more than 400,000 names to Washington, calling for the continuation of the investigation. We placed this petition before the Rules Committee, and it was also presented on the floor of the United States Congress. Expert observers insist that this was the biggest and most effective single effort put forth to support the continuation of this statesmanlike committee.

As for subdivision 5, his attack on the Union for Democratic Action, I say as one who was attacked by this organization during my primary campaign, that this organization exercised its constitutional right in a democracy to call upon the voters to elect or defeat any candidate for public office. It is a violation of the basic principles of democracy for this committee of the House to use its privileges and powers to destroy the reputations of men and women because of their participation in electioneering.

In its subdivision 6 the committee in its report indulges in red-baiting generalizations against the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. That, of course, is readily understood when we bear in mind that the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties has exercised its constitutional rights in consistently opposing the Dies committee.

Finally, we come to the subject given the least attention by the committee, occupying less than 1 out of the 13 pages of the report. This indeed indicates the proportionate importance given by the majority of the committee to the problem of defeating our country's enemies, with whom we are now engaged in a life and death struggle. In this section of the report we find another extravaganza. It is a short, short story with regard to Nazi activities in which the committee seeks to take credit for the prosecution and conviction of Bund members and others, specifically mentioning G. Wilhelm Kunze, national fuehrer of the bund, and Kuhagen, Zapp, and Tonn, who, the committee claims, were convicted on the basis of evidence turned over by it to the Department of Justice.

I just wonder what Attorney General Biddle, Matheas Correa, United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, J. Edgar Hoover, and the F. B. I., who did the work, prosecuted and brought about the conviction of these Nazis, have to say about this section of the report.

The country was amazed to learn that this report was published without any opportunity for discussion or amendment.

Many House Members will be amazed to learn, and I am now quoting the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], a member of the committee that—

> There has been no opportunity for discussion or amendment of the report or for committee members to do any work upon it. No meeting has been held for its consideration. The report was presented to members on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. It is, in my judgment, wrong for such a document as an annual report of this committee to be treated in this manner, particularly at this time.

It is on the basis of this report that the committee asks for an extension of 2 years. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, all I ask is that you read this report, the committee's own report, consider the money expended by the Dies committee during the last 4 years—over $400,000—before you cast your vote on the resolution to continue the committee until past election time in 1944.

Let me examine further: What has been the conduct of this committee in regard to the un-American activities of domestic Fascists?

On January 4, 1943, the Department of Justice announced the indictment, charging 33 individuals and 1 corporation with a Nation-wide conspiracy to—

1. Interfere with, impair, and influence the loyalty, morale, and discipline of the military and naval forces of the United States, in violation of section 11, title 18, United States Code; and

2. Cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States in violation of section 34, title 50, United States Code.

Named as defendants in the indictment were:

31. Frank W. Clark, alias G. P., Tacoma, Wash.
32. Paquita de Shishmareff, alias Paquita de Shismarova, alias Mrs. Leslie Fry, Glendale, Calif., and New York City.
33. Frank K. Ferenz, Los Angeles.
34. The New York Evening Enquirer, Inc., New York City.

(NOTE: The first 23 of these defendants were indicted on July 21, 1942, by another Federal grand jury in Washington, D. C., for conspiracy to violate sec. 11, title 18, and sec. 34, title 50, U. S. C.)

Named as coconspirator but not as defendant, was Ulrich Fleischhauer, of Erfurt, Germany.

The case was handled for the Department of Justice by William Power Maloney and John T. M. Reddan, special assistants to the Attorney General, under the personal direction of Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge, in charge of the Criminal Division.

The Attorney General stated that the defendants in this indictment included all 28 defendants named in an earlier indictment returned by a different grand jury in the District of Columbia on July 21, 1942, and, in addition, six new defendants: George E. Deatheridge, Mrs. Lois de Lafayette Washburn, Frank W. Clark, Paquita de Shishmareff, Frank K. Ferenz, and the New York Evening Enquirer, Inc.

The indictment returned today, the Attorney General said, was the result of intensive investigation by the present grand jury, covering a period of several months. This investigation was conducted by this new grand jury following the indictment returned on July 21, 1942, by the earlier grand jury.

The present indictment, in addition to adding six new defendants, contains additional allegations concerning the scope and extent of the conspiracy, Mr. Biddle said, alleging that the conspiracy began in 1933 and continued up to the time the present indictment was returned. It also names as a coconspirator, but not as a defendant, one Ulrich Fleischhauer, of Erfurt, Germany.

It began in 1933, 5 years before the creation of the Dies committee, and it also named 41 organizations and the same number of publications as being used at the time and as having been created for the purpose of carrying out this conspiracy.

Count 1 of the indictment charges that from January 1, 1933, to the date of the indictment the defendants "unlawfully, willfully, feloniously and knowingly" conspired to commit act in violation of section 11, title 18, United States Code, which would:

(i) Advise, counsel, urge and cause insubordination, disloyalty and mutiny and refusal of duty by members of the military and naval forces of the United States, and

(ii) Distribute and cause to be distributed written and printed matter advising, counseling, and urging insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, and refusal of duty by members of the military and naval forces of the United States.

The indictment charges that this conspiracy was carried on through the printing, publishing, distributing, and circulating of newspapers, books, magazines, leaflets, circulars, pamphlets, and other documents in the following places, among others: Washington, D. C.; Noblesville, Ind.; Muncie, Ind.; New York City; Chicago, Ill.; Wichita, Kans.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Newton, Kans.; San Diego, Calif.; San Bernardino, Calif.; Omaha, Nebr.; Arlington, Va.; Lake Geneva, Wis.; New Haven, Conn.; Seattle, Wash.; Tacoma, Wash.; Erfurt, Germany; Bremerton, Wash., and Stuttgart, Germany.

Among other publications employed in the conspiracy, the indictment charges, were the following:

1. The New York Enquirer.
2. The Defender.
3. The Octopus.
4. The Galilean.
5. X-ray.
6. Publicity.
7. Beacon Light.

40. Democracy on the Nile.
41. Double-Cross in Palestine.
42. Inhumanity Unlimited.

(NOTE.—The first 29 of these publications were listed in the indictment of July 21, 1942.)

The indictment further charges that in furthering the conspiracy the defendants organized or caused to be organized, supported, used, controlled, or contributed financially to the following organizations, among others:

1. Silver Shirts.
2. Black Legion.
3. Ku Klux Klan.
4. German-American Bund (also known as American-German Bund.
5. National Workers' League of America (Detroit).

39. Pan Aryan Conference.
40. Capital News and Feature Service.
41. Yankee Comrades.

(NOTE.—The first 29 of these organizations were listed in the indictment of July 21, 1942.)

I now charge that very very few of those individuals mentioned or the organizations mentioned or the publications mentioned ever received even the semblance of an investigation by the Dies committee.

Here we have 34 individuals, 41 organizations, 42 publications charged as conspirators against the Nation, carrying on their activities against America from Washington to Stuttgart, Germany, over a period of 10 years, and what has the Dies committee done about it, in fact what has it said about it, in reality, what has it whispered about it? We have not even been told what it has thought about it.

This gigantic conspiracy against our country in time of war completely escaped the attention of Mr. Dies and his committee, and their numerous investigators, with their 135 filing cabinets and their million index cards.

Were they too busy seeking out nudists in the Board of Economic Warfare or hounding genuine anti-Fascists, Communists, labor unions, and fighting against the Soviet Union to devote a few moments of attention to this conspiracy, which comes more squarely under the terms of the resolution creating this committee than anything it has done?

Of course, we will be told that of these 34 the committee sought to investigate William Dudley Pelley, James Smythe, George Sylvester Viereck, and George E. Deatherage.

Even though the committee seeks to take credit for the imprisonment of Pelley, the district attorney who handled this case knows better. Pelley's first imprisonment originated from stock frauds and had nothing to do with the committee's activities. When Pelley appeared before the committee he heaped his loathsome praise upon it.

As for Smythe, he has been in contempt of the committee ever since he was subpenaed for not appearing. Had he been a labor leader, a Communist, a progressive, or a liberal, he would have been haled by the committee before th bar of this House to be adjudged in contempt, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] did in the case of two members of the Communist Party.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. In other words, that great mountain from the plains of Texas labored and labored, and finally produced a mouse.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman from Texas did not pay any attention to and definitely overlooked the most gigantic conspiracy this country has ever seen in its history, the conspiracy which was revealed by the indictment of these 34 domestic Fascists, their 41 organizations, and their 42 publications.

The manner in which George Sylvester Viereck escaped investigation is a matter of public scandal. Mr. Viereck was subpenaed to appear before the committee on August 4, 1938. That night he took a boat to Germany where he received further instructions to carry on his dirty work which has finally landed him in jail. Since his return and throughout the period of his pro-Nazi activity, he was never interrogated by the committee nor was the subpena ever enforced.

As for George Deatherage, when he appeared before the committee, he defied it and refused to answer questions as to his organization, the Knights of the White Camellia, also mentioned in the indictment as a vehicle of sedition. He was permitted to go his way and continue in his seditious activities, and was never cited for contempt. He, too, was a domestic Fascist. Compare this treatment with that accorded leaders of labor, anti-Fascists, progressives, liberals, and Communists.

Not only is Mr. DIES' and his committee's record one of negligence and omission, and of failure to act in connection with these domestic Fascists but we find that one Walter S. Steele was the white-haired boy witness before the committee. He was called and considered by the committee an "expert" witness, and some of the committee reports were written on the basis of Walter S. Steele's testimony.

Who is Walter S. Steele?

None other than the representative and leader of the coalition of patriotic societies, listed as No. 12 of the 41 seditious organizations mentioned in the indictment, and a pal and collaborator of seditionist No. 22 in the indictment, Eugene Nelson Sanctuary; seditionist No. 26, James C. True; and seditionist No. 13, Robert Edmondson. What a situation. The leader of an organization involved in this conspiracy, the collaborator of at least 3 conspirators, is the fair-haired star witness of the Dies committee.

Walter S. Steele was following the anti-Communist line of Adolf Hitler before this committee. His testimony was one page after another of anti-Communist propaganda which we have now learned from the realities of the world of today has been and still is Hitler's technique of conquest from within.

And let us see what the chairman himself had to say about the organization mentioned in the indictment as one of the organizations which the conspirators organized or caused to be organized, supported, used, controlled, or contributed to financially. Mr. DIES, in a signed article in Liberty magazine of March 30, 1940, admitted his reliance upon and expressed his gratitude to the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies.

The tragic performance of this committee and its chairman has most definitely forfeited any claim to the confidence of the American people that they may have ever had. This abysmal, to say the least, negligence is merely a repetition of its failure to act in the case of Japanese activities prior to Pearl Harbor. The chairman last year in a speech in the House charged that he had information which, if it had been made public, would have prevented the tragedy of Pearl Harbor. He sought to place the blame for the failure to use this information on the administration. I picked up that charge and challenged it. I challenged it with the statement of Sumner Welles, Under Secretary of State, who authorized me to say that at no time had the State Department received any such information from Mr. DIES and at no time had they suppressed it.

The correspondence between Mr. DIES and the Attorney General is contained in the RECORD of last year. I pointed out and proved conclusively that Mr. DIES never submitted any information to the Department of Justice which, as Mr. DIES said, would have prevented the catastrophe at Pearl Harbor.

What is the record of the chairman and of this committee in regard to our enemies from within and from without? A record of failure as to the conditions of Japanese espionage and sabotage in regard to Pearl Harbor; complete failure as to the Nazis, failure and callous indifference to the diabolical conspiracy against the country on the part of the 34 indicted domestic Fascists, their 41 organizations, and 42 publications.

Again I say that this committee was created to ferret out and investigate subversive and un-American activities. In time of war, it had the highest obligation to carry out the mandate of the Congress to deal with the enemy from within and the enemy's agents from without. Yes; enemies of our democracy, enemies of our institutions, enemies of the Nation itself making war upon us from within and from without. Mr. DIES and his committee failed dismally to live up to that obligation.

There is a reason why Japanese agents and Nazi agents and domestic Fascists escaped the attention of Mr. DIES. It is an old, old story. It is the history of the tragedies of democracies that have fallen. The diversion of the attack from the real enemy by the creation of the Red scare. The war on the Communists, on labor, liberals, progressives, new dealers, and on the Soviet Union, the war against the war administration, now called by Mr. DIES bureaucracy, was what kept Mr. DIES and his committee "too busy."

War against the Communists who, as an integral part of 130,000,000 Americans, are fighting and working like all other Americans for victory against the enemy; war against the Soviet Union, to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] dedicated his energies and his writings and his speeches; this was and is the policy of the Dies committee. But this, too, has been, and is, the war which Adolf Hitler has told the world that he is waging. Only the other day Hitler reiterated to the world in a statement read by Goebbels that he was fighting "to protect the European family of nations from the dangers of the East," and he continued to proclaim his "crusade against bolshevism." He used this anti-Bolshevik game to ride into power. Mussolini, too, raised the anti-Communist cry in his march on Rome in 1922. The Rome-Tokyo-Berlin Axis, which our enemies formed to conquer the world, was announced as a "crusade against communism." It called itself the anti-Comintern. The Lavals and the Petains used it in France. The anti-Communist slogan was and is Hitler's technique of conquest, conceived from the very inception of his plan for world conquest. The democracies that fell for it are no more—divided by this slogan, and then conquered by Hitler.

Hitler and the other two members of the Axis are today again beating the drums of the anti-Communist theme in an effort to split the United Nations and to divide the people within the United Nations.

Thus, while Americans are gloriously fighting at Guadalcanal and North Africa and the Red Army is smashing the enemy at Stalingrad and Rostov, Hitler and Mr. DIES are still crusading against communism.

It was a sin of omission to have disregarded the danger of the anti-Communist line in time of peace. Then it was part of Hitler's preparation for a war of conquest. To adopt that same line within our own country now, while Hitler and his anti-Comintern Axis partners use it as a weapon of war against us, would be suicidal.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. DIES and his committee guessed wrong. They missed the real foe. They have failed to see him, even up to now. To continue this committee, therefore, is to follow a policy which the realities of a world in which people and nations are fighting for survival have taught us to be disastrous.

Mr. DIES and his committee have followed and are following the anti-Comintern line, the anti-Communist line. Behind a smoke screen of anticommunism, fascism has marched on and destroyed democracy in its own countries, and democratic nations. To continue the committee in the face of realities of recent history would be a negation of everything for which Americans are fighting and dying, and would contribute toward dissipation of that unity which is being forged among the American people and the United Nations for the destruction of fascism.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. KEARNEY, at the request of Mr. VAN ZANDT, for 1 day, on account of sickness.

By Mr. ELSTON of Ohio:

H. R. 1753. A bill to provide for the extension of patents for a period equal to the period during which owners are unable to derive benefits from them on account of the war emergency; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. MILLER of Connecticut:

H. R. 1754. A bill to provide for the enlargement of the Veterans' Administration facility at Newington, Conn.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. CURLEY:

H. Res. 104. Resolution to increase the lend-lease to China to 10 percent; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CANNON of Missouri:

H. Res. 105. Resolution authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to examine into and determine the fitness of certain Government personnel to continue in their employment; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FULMER:

H. R. 1755. A bill for the relief of Broadus D. Boland; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LUDLOW:

H. R. 1756. A bill for the relief of Smith Hayden; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'CONNOR:

H. R. 1757. A bill for the relief of Charles F. Kegel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida:

H. R. 1758. A bill for the relief of F. M. Maloy; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 1759. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Alethea Arthur; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 1760. A bill for the relief of S. I. Wooten; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REES of Kansas:

H. R. 1761. A bill granting a pension to Mary E. Carroll; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

85. By Mr. ANGELL: Memorial of the Forty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, asking for enactment of a pay-as-you-go plan for collection of personal income taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

86. Also, petition of the agricultural advisory committee of the United States Employment Service in Oregon, asking for adequate appropriation for the office of the agricultural statistician for Oregon; to the Committee on Appropriations.

87. By Mr. FOGARTY: Memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, expressing its approval of the primary aim of the Ruml plan for income-tax payments; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

88. By Mr. FORAND: Resolution expressing the approval of the General Assembly of Rhode Island in the primary aim of the Ruml plan to put both the Government and all individual taxpayers on a pay-as-you-go income-tax plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

89. By Mr. FULMER: House resolution submitted by the clerk of the House of Representatives of Columbia, S. C., memorializing the Office of Price Administration to raise the price ceiling on Irish potatoes grown in the State of South Carolina from the maximum price recently established; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

90. Also, concurrent resolution submitted by the clerk of the House of Representatives of Columbia, S. C., requesting the Government of the United States of America to recognize that the manner of selling tobacco by auctioneering in this State is a fair and impartial manner of disposing of the tobacco crops in this State and requesting said Government not to exercise any authority which would interfere with such manner of selling tobacco; to the Committee on Agriculture.

91. By Mr. LYNCH: Resolution of the joint board of the Cloak, Suit, Skirt, and Reefer Makers' Unions of Greater New York, opposing any attempt to change labor laws; to the Committee on Labor.

92. By Mr. MRUK: Petition of the Buffalo Foreign Trade Association, Buffalo, N. Y., requesting that Congress restore to the National Budget an appropriation to maintain the field service and thereby the Buffalo district office of the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Appropriations.

93. By Mr. ROLPH: Assembly Joint Resolution No. 26 of the State of California, relative to the Pharmacy Corps bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

94. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 24 of the State of California, relative to the growing shortage of motortruck transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

95. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 22 of the State of California, relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to amend the Federal Security Act in respect to earnings and other income of recipients of old-age assistance; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

96. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 14 of the State of California, relative to small business enterprises; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

97. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 27 of the State of California, relative to memorializing Congress in relation to retaining the administration of California fishery production in the United States Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

98. By Mr. SCHWABE: Resolution protesting against the passage of House bill 1290 to admit aliens automatically to citizenship who have resided continuously in this country for a period of 16 years since 1924, upon reaching the age of 50 years; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

99. By Mr. STOCKMAN: Petition of the Hood River Chamber of Commerce, Hood River, Oreg., presenting resolution of the Hood River Post, No. 22, of the American Legion, Department of Oregon, relating to the definition of persons who can claim full citizenship under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and urging in particular an interpretation which would deprive all American-born Japanese of their claims as United States citizens; that no persons of Japanese ancestry be returned to Hood River County, Oreg., until the termination of the present conflict, and, if possible, all persons of Japanese ancestry be permanently prohibited from Hood River County; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our God and our heavenly Father, Thou who art the life and the light of this wondrous world, forever be Thy name adored. We praise Thee for the new miracle of the dawn and for the fresh vigor which flows through our beings. We pray Thee to accept our thanksgiving for guiding influences and helpful friendships. We beseech Thee that we may be able to do Thy will and fulfill Thy purpose as this day brings us to the call of service.

Bless us all with the mercy of grateful hearts. Arise, O Lord, let not man prevail, let the nations be judged in Thy sight. Put them to fear, O Lord, that they may know themselves to be but men. Arise, O Lord, lift up Thine hand and forget not the humble. In the midst of the world's tumult, let us feel the tides of deep emotion which the coming years will yield—the growing, glowing might that shall fuse the torn fragments of civilization until there shall be naught beside. We wait in the unbroken and solemn stillness and pray for those homes which are bereft of their knightly sons who are braving the shadows of the battle front; the Lord God be with them and bless them with rich and abiding peace. In the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 12. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the public health by the prevention of certain practices leading to dental disorders; and to prevent the circumvention of certain State or Territorial laws regulating the practice of dentistry.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following agency:

Federal Works Agency.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] may be allowed to speak on Lincoln on Thursday after disposition of the legislative program of the day and any previous special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the Executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 109), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH reserved all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech by Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM]?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL FEDERATION FOR CONSTITUTIONAL LIBERTIES

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a libelous statement published by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties. This is a statement against a congressional committee, and it was placed in the desk of every employee of a certain department or departments in the War Production Board. It was placed in those desks within the last 2 days.

Mr. Speaker, if there is a matter that should be investigated by the Dies committee, it is this statement against a committee of the Congress, and I hope that when the Dies committee is continued one of the first things it will do will be to investigate the manner in which these statements were placed in the desk of employees of the War Production Board, and I hope also that the committee will investigate to its fullest extent the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I received permission to extend in the Appendix of the RECORD the inaugural address of Gov. Earl Warren, of California. Subsequently the Government Printing Office advised me that this would run over the stipulated number of words. I have an estimate from the Government Printer stating that the cost will be $123.75. I ask unanimous consent to have this address inserted in the RECORD, notwithstanding the estimate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROLPH]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after disposition of the legislative business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of other special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT]?

There was no objection.

WAR RELOCATION AUTHORITY

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LEWIS of Ohio addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from a constituent, Mrs. Boyd Reid, of Corrington, Wyo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT]?

There was no objection.

CONTROL OF AGRICULTURAL PRICES

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, together with nearly every Member of the Seventy-seventh Congress I voted to keep the power to regulate agricultural prices in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. I confess now that I regret I ever did so. I hereby accuse certain officials in the Department of Agriculture of selling the American farmer down the river, of deliberately failing to interpret the price law as Congress passed it. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is high time for the Congress to look into the way the bureaucratic officials of this Department are interpreting the laws which the Congress has made for the protection of all the people.

The Department of Agriculture, in my opinion, is no different than a long list of other bureaucrats down here in Washington in that it has departed from the proper interpretation of agricultural prices as Congress meant them to be interpreted. In a recent probe conducted by the Agriculture Committee of the House, it was admitted by officials from the Agricultural Department that no attempt had been made to follow the will and intent of Congress to maintain the highest monthly average for agricultural prices during the period from January to September 1942. I submit that the citizens of America have the right to expect fair treatment for the farmer and for everything connected with agriculture.

[Here the gavel fell.]

GOVERNMENT BY BUREAUCRATIC MANDATE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. SCHIFFLER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Dies committee has convinced the House and the administration of at least one thing, that we ought to investigate subversive activities. You recall that the President appointed a committee for that purpose the other day when the situation got so hot up here. That may be a whitewashing committee. Now I notice by the newspapers that the House leadership is going, before the day is over, to have another committee to tackle the same proposition. Being unable to kick the Dies committee out the front door of Congress, the administration and a few others, including the C. I. O. and the Communists, propose to try to do the job by taking over the duties of the Dies committee and giving those duties to other committees, and so get rid of the Dies committee by kicking it out the back door. I hope every Member will tomorrow read the comment of the Daily Worker and PM on the situation. I think that by the time another election rolls around the people will be on to that sort of procedure, too, and there may be some more missing faces here in Congress when it meets again if we do not follow the directions given us at the last election.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CRITICISM OF THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, as I came in the Chamber this morning I looked at the headlines in the papers and saw that the Japs had been driven out of Guadalcanal, a place where the lives of many of our soldiers were sacrificed. As I came into the Chamber not one word was said about that. All you could hear was complaints about this, that, or the other. Then I thought back to the Continental Congress, which criticized Washington and everything that was happening at that time. In a few days we will celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Lincoln, yet in his day, during a war on that side of the aisle now the minority, there was the same criticism that is now going on against this administration.

INFORMATION AS TO THE STATUS OF WALTER WINCHELL

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 95) from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives the answers to the following questions:

1. Does section 1534 of title 10 of the United States Code, among other things, provide that—

"An officer who uses contemptuous or disrespectful words against * * * the Congress of the United States shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court martial may direct"?

2. Are officers of the Navy subject to the provisions of the section quoted in question No. 1?

3. If they are not, is there any Federal statute or rule or regulation of the Navy of similar import?

4. Section 1567 of title 10 of the United States Code reads:

"Any officer or cadet who is convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service."

Section 1568 of the same title provides, among other things, that—

"Though not mentioned in these articles, * * * all conduct of a nature to bring discredit upon the military service * * *, of which persons subject to military law may be guilty, shall be taken cognizance of by a general or special or summary court martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court."

Are there any similar provisions of law, or any rule or rules, or regulation or regulations, of the Navy of like import?

5. Does article 8 of chapter 21 of title 34 of the United States Code provide, among other things, that—

"Such punishment as a court martial may adjudge may be inflicted on any person in the Navy— * * * who is guilty of profane swearing, falsehood, * * * or any other scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals"?

6. In the August 22, 1942, issue of the magazine published under the name of Liberty is an article by Walter Winchell, which, among other things, charged (p. 54) that one Smith "now indicted, sabotaged the war effort by spreading disunity."

In the September 12, 1942, issue of the same magazine, on page 32, are the following words:

"A correction. On page 54 of the August 22 issue of Liberty it was stated that Gerald L. K. Smith had been indicted. This was an error and an injustice to Mr. Smith, against whom no indictment has been returned. We apologize for the error."

which is an admission that Lieutenant Commander Winchell, of the United States Navy, was guilty of a falsehood.

Have any proceedings been taken to inflict upon him the punishment specified in article 8 of chapter 21 of title 34 for the conduct made an offense by the first subdivision of said article?

7. On July 12, 1942, Walter Winchell, while an officer of the United States Navy, asked a radio audience,

"How about the voters going after those other saboteurs who landed in Congress?"

A few days later he inserted in his column published in the press the following statement:

"Another reason some Congressmen are demanding the eight saboteurs be shot is that they might talk too much."

On July 26, 1942, Walter Winchell, over the radio, made the statement that:

"Nearly everyone who printed seditious articles has been indicted except those who put the same things in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. * * * But, Honeychile—all of them will be confronted by the same charges after November 5."

If the making of such statements was "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals," what, if any, action has been taken by the Navy or any officer thereof to either punish the said Walter Winchell for the making of such statements, or to put an end to the making of such statements?

8. (a) During the month of January 1943, was Walter Winchell an officer in the United States Navy? And, if he was, what was his rank?

(b) If Walter Winchell was an officer in the United States Navy during January 1943, did he, on January 31, 1943, in a radio broadcast, or in his column as printed, in substance refer to American citizens who voted for certain Representatives in Congress as "damned fools who voted for them"?

9. What was the official position of Walter Winchell in the United States Navy during each of the months of 1941 and 1942?

10. During each of said months, what was his official designation and what, if any, rank did he hold in the United States Navy?

11. To what duties in the continental United States was Walter Winchell assigned by the Navy, and what portion of his time did he spend in the service of the United States Navy during each of the months of 1941 and 1942?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] introduced House Resolution 95, requesting certain information in regard to the status of Walter Winchell and propounding various questions. Under the parliamentary procedure, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as it has jurisdiction of it.

We submitted the resolution to the Navy Department. Under the rules of the House, this being a privileged resolution, the information must be brought back to the House within 7 days. Today the Navy Department submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs its answer to the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The House must understand that in submitting its report the Committee on Naval Affairs is not passing judgment on the answers at all. We are merely the instrument by which the information sought by the gentleman from Michigan may be brought to the House in a parliamentary manner.

I may say, however—and I think it is pertinent that I make this statement in the discussion of this matter—that it is the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as soon as it can dispose of a very important bill that will be before the committee tomorrow involving a large sum of money, to have the proper naval officials brought before the committee, including the Secretary of the Navy, to give the committee more information than probably these answers to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan disclose. In other words, the Committee on Naval Affairs proposes to have before it probably the latter part of this week or the first of next week the proper naval officials to give the committee full information in regard to the subject of Mr. Walter Winchell's position in the United States Navy.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In his broadcast Sunday night the gentleman referred to stated that the F. B. I. in an effort to stop a leak in Washington put out a purposely misleading story. The idea apparently was to see whether and how quickly this false story would reach Germany, and to apprehend, if possible, the persons who sent the message. Less than 24 hours later, according to the broadcast, the German short-wave radio announced the false news of the Canadian meeting, and as a result the men involved were trapped.

A spokesman for J. Edgar Hoover—

I am reading now from the New York Herald Tribune of the 9th—

Chief of the F. B. I., was ready to answer questions about the story today. He began by saying that he had been answering them all throughout last night since the radio broadcast of Walter Winchell, columnist for the Daily Mirror, of New York, had revived the reports.

The spokesman said there was no false rumor circulated, there were no men taken into custody by the F. B. I. And further, "the F. B. I. knows nothing about this particular case."

If Mr. Winchell is an officer in the Navy, he certainly should not be circulating false reports of this kind.

Here is a further statement, and notice where this comes from:

Efforts to check the War Department's G–2 (Army Intelligence) as to the veracity of the report likewise proved unavailing.

I hope the Members of the House will get this:

However, the War Department facetiously suggested that "Since Mr. Winchell is a commodore of some sort, you'd better contact the Navy."

Navy Department officials said they knew nothing of the matter, and the next suggestion was that the Federal Bureau of Investigation be contacted "since everyone knows J. Edgar Hoover feeds such stuff to Mr. Winchell." Apprised of this, the Hoover spokesman heatedly denied that Mr. Hoover feeds out anything to anyone.

If the statement of the F. B. I. be true, once more Mr. Winchell, an officer of the Navy, stands convicted of a public falsehood.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. May I say to the House, and it is practically the opinion of the Naval Affairs Committee this morning, that next week at a public hearing, no closed doors, the Naval Affairs Committee proposes to call before it proper officials in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] to ascertain the full status of the Reserve officer, Walter Winchell.

Mr. Speaker, if there is no member of the Naval Affairs Committee who desires time—does the gentleman from Minnesota desire time?

Mr. MAAS. No.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution, in view of the fact that the information that the Navy Department has before the House, do lie upon the table.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. There are a good many inquiries by Members of Congress, particularly in respect to the statement that he is alleged to have made about the damn fool Americans who voted for these Members of Congress, and I merely want to assure the House that is one thing that we will look into very thoroughly.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is a part of the resolution.

The answers of the Navy Department are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, February 9, 1943.

Hon. CARL VINSON,
Chairman of the Committee
on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: House Resolution 95 "Requesting information as to status of Walter Winchell," was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with request for reply.

The questions propounded by the resolution are set forth below, with the answers thereto immediately following:

Question 1. Does section 1534 of title 10 of the United States Code, among other things, provide that—

"An officer who uses contemptuous or disrespectful words against * * * the Congress of the United States shall be dismissed from the service or suffer such other punishment as a court martial may direct"?

Answer. Yes.

Question 2. Are officers of the Navy subject to the provisions of the section quoted in question numbered 1?

Answer. No. This language appears in article 62 of the Articles of War. It is applicable only to "the armies of the United States" (10 U. S. C. 1940 ed. 1471).

Question 3. If they are not, is there any Federal statute or rule or regulation of the Navy of similar import?

Answer. No.

Question 4. Section 1567 of title 10 of the United States Code reads:

"Any officer or cadet who is convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman shall be dismissed from the service."

Section 1568 of the same title provides, among other things, that—

"Though not mentioned in these articles, * * * all conduct of a nature to bring discredit upon the military service * * *, of which persons subject to military law may be guilty, shall be taken cognizance of by a general or special or summary court martial, according to the nature and degree of the offense, and punished at the discretion of such court."

Are there any similar provisions of law, or any rule or rules, or regulation or regulations, of the Navy of like import?

Answer. Yes.

Articles for the government of the Navy, articles 8 and 22, authorize the charges of scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals, conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline, and conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. Section 99, Naval Courts and Board, provides that conviction of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman compromises an officer's position as such and exhibits him as morally unworthy to remain a member of the honorable profession of arms. The charges scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals and conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline include dismissal within the limits of punishment for conviction under those charges.

Question 5. Does article 8 of chapter 21 of title 34 of the United States Code provide, among other things, that—

"Such punishment as a court martial may adjudge may be inflicted on any person in the Navy * * * who is guilty of profane swearing, falsehood * * * or any other scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals"?

Answer. Yes.

Question 6. In the August 22, 1942, issue of the magazine published under the name of Liberty, is an article by Walter Winchell, which, among other things charged (p. 54) that one Smith "now indicted sabotaged the war effort by spreading disunity."

In the September 12, 1942, issue of the same magazine, on page 32, are the following words:

"A correction: On page 54 of the August 22 issue of Liberty it was stated that Gerald L. K. Smith had been indicted. This was an error and an injustice to Mr. Smith, against whom no indictment has been returned. We apologize for the error."

Which is an admission that Lieutenant Commander Winchell, of the United States Navy, was guilty of a falsehood.

Have any proceedings been taken to inflict upon him the punishment specified in article 8 of chapter 21 of title 34 for the conduct made an offense by the first subdivision of said article?

Answer. No.

Question 7. On July 12, 1942, Walter Winchell, while an officer of the United States Navy, asked a radio audience,

"How about the voters going after those other saboteurs who landed in Congress?"

A few days later he inserted in his column published in the press the following statement:

"Another reason some Congressmen are demanding the eight saboteurs be shot is that they might talk too much."

On July 26, 1942, Walter Winchell, over the radio, made the statement that:

"Nearly everyone who printed seditious articles has been indicted except those who put the same things in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. * * * But, Honeychile—all of them will be confronted by the same charges after November 5."

If the making of such statements was "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals," what, if any, action has been taken by the Navy or any officer thereof to either punish the said Walter Winchell for the making of such statements, or to put an end to the making of such statements?

Answer. The above statements are not considered as "scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals."

Question 8. (a) During the month of January 1943, was Walter Winchell an officer in the United States Navy? And, if he was, what was his rank?

Answer. Yes; lieutenant commander, United States Naval Reserve.

(b) If Walter Winchell was an officer in the United States Navy during January 1943, did he, on January 31, 1943, in a radio broadcast, or in his column as printed, in substance refer to American citizens who voted for certain Representatives in Congress as "damned fools who voted for them"?

Answer. Walter Winchell was an officer in the United States Naval Reserve with the rank of lieutenant commander on inactive duty on January 31, 1943, and, according to a transcript of his broadcast given at 9 p. m. eastern war time, over the Blue Network on that date, made the following statement:

"You bet I'm prejudiced against those in high office who guessed so wrong before Pearl Harbor. They're still guessing wrong. I am not in the least comforted by their confessions of ignorance. What worries me most are all those damn fools who reelected them."

Question 9. What was the official position of Walter Winchell in the United States Navy during each of the months of 1941 and 1942?

Answer. During 1941 Winchell was a lieutenant commander in the United States Naval Reserve. He was on inactive duty during 1941 with the exception of the period from August 1, 1941, to August 14, 1941, inclusive, when he was on active duty for training and was assigned to the public relations office of the third naval district.

From January 1, 1942, to March 17, 1942, Winchell was a lieutenant commander, United States Naval Reserve, on inactive duty.

On March 17, 1942, confidential orders were issued to him to active duty. This was special duty under the commandant of the third naval district. These orders are still in effect (February 5, 1943).

During the period December 1, 1942, to January 13, 1943, Winchell was assigned special duties under the commander of the South Atlantic Force.

Question 10. During each of said months, what was his official designation and what, if any, rank did he hold in the United States Navy?

Answer. From January 1, 1941, to April 2, 1942, Winchell was a lieutenant commander, volunteer special service, intelligence duties, in the United States Naval Reserve.

On April 3, 1942, this officer's designation was changed to deck, volunteer, special service (public relations), United States Naval Reserve.

Question 11. To what duties in the continental United States was Walter Winchell assigned by the Navy, and what portion of his time did he spend in the service of the United States Navy during each of the months of 1941 and 1942?

Answer. Lieutenant Commander Winchell was assigned training duty in the continental limits (third naval district) from August 1 to 14, 1941.

During 1942, from March 17 to the present, with the exception of the month of December 1942, Winchell was assigned active duty within the continental limits of the United States. During the month of December 1942 he was on active duty outside the continental limits of the United States.

Lieutenant Commander Winchell spent the period from August 1, 1941, to August 14, 1941, and from March 17, 1942, to the present in the service of the United States Navy.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK KNOX.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Naval Affairs Committee has performed its duty and brought the information back to the House, I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before he insists on that motion?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. MAY. If the resolution is tabled, would the Naval Affairs Committee then have jurisdiction to go into it—should it not be rereferred to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have jurisdiction without any such motion. We are not acting on Mr. HOFFMAN'S resolution in our inquiry next week, but we will use it as a basis, in view of the answers that have been submitted by the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 6]

The SPEAKER. On this call 402 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. LUDLOW, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 105), which I send to the desk and ask to have read for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, acting through a special subcommittee thereof appointed by the chairman of such committee for the purposes of this resolution, is authorized and directed to examine into any and all allegations or charges that certain persons in the employ of the several executive departments and other executive agencies are unfit to continue in such employment by reason of their present association or membership or past association or membership in or with organizations whose aims or purposes are or have been subversive to the Government of the United States. Such examination shall be pursued with the view of obtaining all available evicence bearing upon each particular case and reporting to the House the conclusions of the committee with respect to each such case in the light of the factual evidence obtained. The committee, for the purposes of this resolution, shall have the right to report at any time by bill, amendment, or otherwise, its findings and determination. Any legislation approved by the committee as a result of this resolution may be incorporated in any general or special appropriation measure emanating from such committee or may be offered as a committee amendment to any such measure notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI.

For the purposes of this resolution, such committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, after the period, strike out all of the language following up to the period in line 6.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House consider the resolution?

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the House determined to consider the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has been approved by the leaders on both sides, for the purpose of expediting the business of the House. For 2 days we have been here debating and listening to speeches about men in the Government service who are charged with subversive activities, and if this resolution had not been agreed to, I fear that a great deal of our time would have been taken up from day to day on what to most of us are unpleasant motions, and this no doubt would have delayed the consideration not only of this bill but of a great many other bills. This resolution gives the Committee on Appropriations the right to investigate all charges against Government employees who have been charged with subversive or un-American activities. I believe it is proper that the committee be given this power to investigate, because I do not feel that we should be called upon to vote upon the report on the 38 men the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] calls to our attention, who, his investigators charge with communistic activities or being guilty of un-American activities. I would like to know how many of you know these investigators, where they are from and why they have the power to assail the reputation of these men.

Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I am informed that of these 38 men, who have been so designated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] as being Communists or belonging to communistic organizations, 4 are now actually in our military service. Several others have long since ceased to be employed in the Government service. However, the separation of these men from Government employment seems to be immaterial to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and he has included them in his report. I do not have a personal acquaintance with any of them but, as I understand, none of them has ever held high supervisory official positions. They are men who have been engaged for the knowledge, technical training, and experience that they possess, which they have obtained through many years of hard study. If any one of them is guilty of any un-American or subversive activities they ought to be kicked out, and they cannot be kicked out too soon for me. I am against anyone, whether he is connected with the Government or otherwise, who is not at this time, especially, 100-percent loyal to the Government. He has no business to hold any public office whatsoever. But for us to ruin the reputation of men upon a report of highly paid investigators, of whose background and reputation for veracity we know nothing, seems to me to be manifestly unfair and unwarranted.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Committee on Appropriations should have the power to investigate. I have the utmost confidence in the chairman and the members of the great Committee on Appropriations and that they will make a fair and impartial investigation, and that if there is anything against any of these men they will refuse to appropriate for their salaries and force their separation from the service.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed strange to me that at this time especially those men who believe in the New Deal or the square deal, who, by chance, are members of progressive organizations, should be smeared as Communists. A few days ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] complained that they had been smeared and also that other Members have been smeared by certain newspapers or commentators. Undoubtedly, this was because some of these newspapers and commentators have printed or called attention to the voting record of some of the Members. Mr. Speaker, I concede that there has been a great deal of smearing—the smearing of some of our outstanding citizens just because they advocated legislation in the interest of the common people and because they have been connected with liberal organizations. As to these men accused by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], as I have stated, I do not know them and do not speak for them, but I do not feel that they would have been employed in the Government service unless those under whom they serve and the Civil Service Commission had not first satisfied themselves that they were not disloyal or guilty of any un-American activities.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that we have in this country hundreds and thousands, I might say, of Nazis and Fascists who are guilty of subversive and un-American activities, and I wonder why a report has not been made against them and why they should not be separated from their positions in the Government service. I hope and trust that you, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee on Appropriations, will not only investigate those against whom charges are made that they have been affiliated with so-called communistic organizations but that you will investigate those who have been active under the leadership of the Nazi propagandists in this country against our country and the best interests of our Nation, and that you will obtain the list of names of the Nazi tools from the Dies committee which has been referred to by the gentleman from California.

Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and some of the members of his committee fail to realize that we are at war and seriously threatened by the Nazis, Fascists, and Jap plunderbund, as, from their statements and releases it would appear that we are at war with Russia, a Russia that has, as has been admitted by even its worst enemies, done more for the preservation of our country, its freedom and liberty than any other people under the sun.

I think it is to be regretted that we should continue to assail and attack people who formerly, perhaps misled or misguided, have joined some organization that might have some relationship to the Communist Party. But I know this, I know that Russia has not for a long time been guilty of anything that might in any way affect or endanger our form of government. All they desire and all they have fought for is their freedom and their liberties that this crazy man Hitler has been trying to deprive them of. Right here I wish to say that it should not be our concern what kind of form of government they have in Russia, and it should not be Russia's business nor should it be permitted, in any way, shape, or form, to change our form of government in the slightest degree.

Mr. Speaker, in the 2-hour speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], time for which he obtained on a question of personal privilege, he devoted himself to criticism of our administration and to so-called bureaucrats, charging that these 38 men were crackpots and responsible for a bureaucratic form of government, as if these men were the heads of any bureau, agency, or department. As I understand and as I have stated, all of these men hold minor, technical positions and are in no way responsible for the administration of any so-called bureaucratic bureaus or agencies. If there is any justification in charging that some of the agencies are bureaucratic, surely the responsibility, if such is the case, does not fall upon these men but upon the heads of the agencies in which they are employed. And it so happens, Mr. Speaker that the large majority of these heads were formerly associates, agents, or officials of the largest corporations and industrial interests in the United States. They came from the Standard Oil Co., the steel industry, the airplane manufacturing industry, and, in fact, from most of the big industries of our country.

Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts, I feel that in the interest of good government and a fair, square deal to these men this resolution should be adopted and the Committee on Appropriations given power to proceed with its investigation, not only of those few who have been mentioned but of all those connected with the Nazi organization that I know the Dies committee has had knowledge of heretofore, but unfortunately has failed to proceed against.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield now 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, now that the controversy on the other side has subsided, I yield 10 minutes to the minority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of clarifying, if I can, the position the House finds itself in concerning William Pickens. It is not quite so difficult and involved as it might appear.

DIES COMMITTEE'S GOOD JOB

I believe it can be said the House has a fixed determination to separate from the Government pay rolls men and women with subversive affiliations who, for years, have been attacking our form of government and our way of life. And I believe the majority of its membership, on the whole, feel the Dies committee has done a fairly good job.

The determination of Congress in this respect has been in evidence for some time, and it is unfortunate the bureaucrats have been unable to appreciate the situation.

Congress believes and, because of the past actions of the bureaucrats, has every right to believe nothing will be done unless it takes definite, specific action. And, of course, the only practical way is through these appropriation bills. We want to clean up the situation, but, at the same time, we do not want to do an injustice to any individual. Here in America we must give every man and every woman his day in court; justice must be administered fairly and with equality.

The Dies committee has made serious charges and has presented the evidence which, in their opinion, will substantially support the charges.

Under the resolution pending, these charges would be reviewed by a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. This is what my good friend the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] says he advocated 1 year ago. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] says it is the course he would recommend.

Apparently we are in agreement upon a plan which will give both sides of the question an opportunity for justice. If these men are guilty of the charges preferred, they must be separated from the pay roll. If not, they are entitled to have vindication.

Upon the adoption of the resolution all against whom charges have been made will be given a hearing—all except one, William Pickens, a colored man, who happens to be the only individual under fire who works in either the Treasury or Post Office Departments, whose bill is now pending.

I know the membership of this House too well to believe anyone here wants to do an injustice to Mr. Pickens. Certainly it would be unforunate for the war effort and for our own home economy if we proceeded in a way to make any large part of our population believe we were discriminating against a man because of his race or color. It would be far better to let the one man escape trial rather than create that impression.

Fortunately, we are not obliged to do either. We do not need to act upon the Pickens case today. We can eliminate his amendment from the bill and this action will be well understood as not in the least prejudicing the case. Then Pickens can go before the subcommittee and we can take up his case later with the others. No harm will be done to those pressing the charges against Pickens, and Congress will have taken the position I am sure it will take—that every man and every woman shall have equal justice.

To those who fear they may be jockeyed into a position where they cannot act in the future, I want to remind them a majority of Congress cannot be denied its way if there is a determination to have it; and I believe we have here a majority very much determined to see this through.

If the Appropriations Committee or the leadership, and I am sure neither will, but if they did try to win a tricky victory, there is always the remedy of the Rules Committee to make the legislation in order on some other appropriation bill.

So my suggestion to the House is, let us adopt the rule setting up the committee to probe the charges and then let us all unite against the Pickens amendment, regardless of how we feel on the merits of the charges.

Let us give Pickens his day in court. That does not mean this House is to be shaken from its determination to eliminate from the Government pay roll all who are joining in attacking the American system of government.

The bureaucrats will never do the job; they dare not; Congress can and will. But let us do it in the orderly way, the just, fair way, and the American way.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution we are considering came before the Rules Committee this morning. It has but one single purpose, and that is to authorize the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to appoint a special subcommittee to hold hearings and investigate the charges made against 38 Federal employees and then to take suitable action on appropriation bills when they come before the House. This is the purpose of the resolution, and it comes to you with only one amendment, which limits the powers of the Appropriations Committee. We struck out certain lines in the original resolution which would have given legislative power to the Appropriations Committee, but under the resolution as it now stands they can accomplish exactly what I believe the House wants them to accomplish by striking off the Federal pay roll any individual found to be subversive and against our own form of government.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution and this whole debate that has lasted several days and prior to that in various Congresses about the fitness of certain Federal employees because of their affiliations with communism or organizations connected with Communists, would not be necessary at all if those who were responsible for their appointments, including President Roosevelt, had acted in the orderly way, had investigated their own appointees and had dismissed them from the Federal pay roll long ago for their Communist associations.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. In that connection, is it not a sad commentary that conditions in the Government service are such as to compel the great Appropriations Committee and the Congress of the United States to sink to the level of an employment agency?

Mr. FISH. I quite agree with the gentleman, and I could make it very much stronger if I did not want to make it a completely partisan issue, which it should not be; it is an American issue. We are determined to get rid of all Federal employees who seek to undermine our American system of government and to set up a totalitarian system, whether Fascist or Communist.

This is a new Congress direct from the people. The people want those Federal employees who are subversive, who are Communist, who seek to destroy our republican form of government guaranteed by the Constitution to every State, thrown off the pay roll; and the new Congress has come to Washington to do that very thing if those in administrative authority will not do it themselves.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Did the gentleman notice the other day what Walter Winchell had to say about the people who elected the new Congress?

Mr. FISH. Walter Winchell had this to say: He virtually said that 100,000,000 Americans were damned fools because 100,000,000 Americans were for keeping out of war until we were attacked at Pearl Harbor according to every poll taken at any time before we entered the war. I hope the Naval Affairs Committee will investigate that statement of Lieutenant Commander Winchell that reflects on the American people and on Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman was not very much impressed with the fact that one damned fool tried to damn fool 100,000,000 American people, was he?

Mr. FISH. Is the gentleman referring to Walter Winchell?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thought my question was clear.

Mr. FISH. It was clear to me, but I have been attacked because I tried to keep the country out of war before Pearl Harbor.

Mr. O'CONNOR. So was I.

Mr. FISH. And I have not changed my views on that nor on any vote I cast in this House against measures that I considered as steps toward war or that would tend to provoke war.

Mr. GRANGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. Does not the gentleman think there are 100,000,000 people in the United States who think that Walter Winchell is a damn fool?

Mr. FISH. I should say that there are more than that. The gentleman is underestimating the intelligence of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Rules Committee raised an issue that has no place here. He is a good friend of mine and we get along very well together, but this resolution involving the Dies committee and the whole question of communistic influences and subversive activities in America has nothing to do with the form of government in Soviet Russia. That is none of our business. Whether they have a communistic form of government in Soviet Russia is none of our business, and it is none of their business what type of government we have in the United States of America.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman knows that Congress appropriated $100,000 last year to provide for an investigation. The F. B. I. investigated about seven or eight hundred Government employees. Will this committee subpena the F. B. I. confidential reports, bring them to the committee, read those reports, and find out what the F. B. I. said, then compare it with what the Attorney General ruled?

Mr. FISH. I am supporting this resolution because I think it is the proper way to do it. I have asked the older members of the Appropriations Committee whether they are sincere and acting in good faith, whether they will get to the facts and actually investigate the 38 involved, and they promised to do it immediately. They will permit the gentleman to go there and make his charges, and if he asks that the F. B. I. be called in I am sure they will do that.

Mr. DIES. The real point is that the F. B. I. spent $100,000 of the taxpayers' money to investigate some eleven or twelve hundred people. Those reports are confidential. Does not the gentleman think that this committee by all means ought to have those confidential reports of the F. B. I., so as to find out what its agents found, then compare that with what the Attorney General stated to the public?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman believes that the Congress should have the power to do that and if the committee wants to do it, in executive session, they ought to do it that way if they are secret documents. Certainly the committee should do that in executive session, but whether they should do it outside of an executive session or not, I do not know.

Owing to the situation that has developed I do not believe that the House wants to make William Pickens a martyr, rightly or wrongly. Now that the racial issue has been raised in the House and back home, and as the people will not hear all the debate that goes on here, we do not want them to get the impression that we are discriminating against an American because of his color. It makes no difference to me whether a man is black or white, if he is a Communist he ought to be thrown off the pay roll; but in view of the situation that has arisen, in view of the facts confronting us at this time, I think it is to the interest of the Congress and our own Government not to permit the people back home to believe that we have discriminated against any American because of his race or color. I am in favor of giving Mr. Pickens identically the same treatment as all the others and an opportunity to defend himself before the Subcommittee on Appropriations. Therefore, I urge the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], a member of the Rules Committee.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot said here this morning about some alleged indictment that Walter Winchell made of this Congress. I did not hear the broadcast, but, as I understood it, this broadcaster said one of two things: First, that the Congress was composed of damned fools, or else, that the people were damned fools for electing this Congress. But regardless of exactly what he said, I certainly hope that the Congress by its action today will not justify or give semblance of justification to what Mr. Winchell is alleged to have said.

A day or two ago this House said by its vote that this man Pickens, because of his subversive activities as disclosed by the Dies committee, should be stricken from his $5,600 job on the pay roll of the Government. The country—or at least a substantial portion of the country—approved this action. But now it seems that some politicians with an ear to the ground heard that this man Pickens was a member of the Negro race. So now what happens?

The political leaders get together and bring out this resolution. They say that we shall have to undo today what we did the other day. In other words, we must adopt this resolution so that we can take this Negro employee, Pickens, and put him back on the pay roll and investigate him along with all of the others.

I am for this resolution. I think it is a good one. But I made a fight in the Rules Committee this morning when this resolution was considered for its postponement until we had voted on the Pickens case. It is not true that Pickens is in the same boat with all of the other 38 mentioned. He is the only one who is on the pay roll of the particular department whose appropriation we are considering. I lost that fight in the Rules Committee by a narrow margin of 1 vote.

It has been heralded all over the country that we have a new Congress, and that those who sit over here on the left, the Republican side, are joining with the conservatives who sit over here on the Democratic side and that we are going to do great things toward ridding this Government of subversive influences in the Government and doing away with the bureaucrats, especially those of leftist tendencies. But what do we find? Instead of that wholehearted cooperation between the conservative groups we find politics as usual. What a sad spectacle. Here we have our distinguished, lovable and suave minority leader, a man whom we all love and a man who rarely takes the floor, today making an appeal for you to put this man on the pay roll. Who was it that the other day voted almost in a solid mass to take Pickens off the pay roll? Of course, it was the Republican side. But today we see an about-face since it has been learned that Pickens is a Negro. Somebody is playing to the Negro vote. And so today we are going to march down the hill as we marched up it the other day.

And in this connection permit me to say to my friends of the minority that if you really wanted to destroy some of this bureaucracy and to remove these left-wingers from this Government that you prated about so much, you have got to play the game fairly and squarely and you have got to shoot straight with those of us on this side whom you expect to go along with you. You cannot come in here and appeal to every minority group in this country looking toward election day and expect to get anywhere with it. I say to you—and you know it to be a fact—that if this man had been a white man you would not be taking this action today. But the fact that he belongs to a minority group causes you to reverse your position of yesterday.

In the words of another Member, privately expressed, "We voted this man Pickens off the pay roll on the theory that he was a 'red.' Then we found out that he was black and proceeded to place him back on the pay roll. Evidently that makes us yellow."

I am, as I have said, in favor of this resolution. However, I wanted to defer its consideration until we had disposed finally of the Pickens case. Let us pass the resolution but at the same time stick by our guns and at least keep one who has been shown to be guilty of subversive activities off the Government pay roll.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained at this point in the proceedings to try to clarify the situation for my dearly beloved brethren on the Republican side.

The other day when the so-called Pickens amendment came up, I voted against it, but I noticed how all of you on the minority side ran down to get into the teller vote and vote for the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is making a statement that is not true, and I know he does not intend to make it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. How many did not?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How many did?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The majority on that side did.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say for the benefit of the gentleman that I personally voted against the amendment, and a good many others on this side voted against it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The great majority on that side, the minority, did not vote against it and then they found out, forsooth, that it was a colored man they were voting against, and yesterday they were going out here in the hall to talk to Edgar Brown.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think the colored man is entitled to a little justice?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I do. That is the reason I voted against this amendment at the start.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How is the gentleman going to vote the next time?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am going to vote against the amendment, just as I have been doing in the past; but a great majority of you did not, and now, to clarify the political situation for yourselves, you should vote for this resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. May I make this comment, apropos of what the gentleman has just been saying. Congress will pass this resolution and convict itself of being a feather-legged outfit.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, now that the explanation has been made and the atmosphere cleared insofar as the left-hand side of this aisle is concerned, perhaps we ought to do a little clearing of the atmosphere for the right-hand side of this Chamber.

As a member of the Dies committee, it is my firm conviction that that committee was never set up to act as a judge. It was set up to act as an investigating committee, to delve into the facts, find the facts as they are, and then present them to this House for its action or to the Committee on Appropriations for its action. It was not intended that the Dies committee should ever be placed in the position of being the judge on any of these matters. It was to be purely and solely an investigating committee.

The truth of the matter is that because of a parliamentary tangle or because of the action of the House the Dies committee has been placed in the position of being both an investigating committee and a judge.

As I see it, the resolution now before the House is to remove the Dies committee from the anomalous position of taking care of two things which it never was set up to do. If this resolution is adopted, it will at least relieve the Dies committee from that position, which is an embarrassing one.

It seems to me that the only thing the House can do is what the minority leader advised in his speech, adopt this resolution first, and then see to it that all 38 of these named individuals have the same opportunity to be judged by the proposed committee that is to be set up under this resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, to my mind this resolution represents a very practical and statesmanlike way of arranging for proper consideration of these individual cases. I have a further suggestion which will fit in with this arrangement, and prevent the embarrassment to the person involved, the agency employing him, and this body itself, when these amendments come up without prior consideration in committee. I have today introduced a resolution to amend the rules of the House as follows:

Resolved, That clause 2 of rule XXI is hereby amended by adding to the end thereof the following: Provided further, That no amendment prohibiting payment of all or any part of the salary or expenses of any named person shall be in order until such amendment shall first have been submitted in the Appropriations Committee, and the person, named in the amendment, shall have been given a reasonable opportunity to be heard before such committee or subcommittee thereof.

This amendment will insure a hearing for any person before he is by name taken from the Federal pay roll by law.

Congress has the power to refuse to appropriate for an individual just as it has the power to appropriate for an individual. We exercise both these powers constantly when we pass or refuse to pass private bills.

It is good legislative practice, however, and good business, and good sportsmanship, to give a man a chance for a hearing before taking action on his affairs. This is not a trial, for there is no criminal charge involved, and no one has a property right in a public job, but it is sound human nature to hear a man's story when dealing with his affairs and it will make us proceed more carefully. I think, however, we will have to proceed. We should not appropriate for Communists and fellow travelers in Government service, as soon as they are fully identified. On the other hand, we should give them not a day in court, for this is not a court matter, but a chance to have their say before we act.

Mr. SABATH. Mr Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I have not taken part in the Pickens argument as yet, but insofar as I am concerned, Pickens stands convicted of enough to warrant me in saying that he has no business being on the Government pay roll. Whether he be white or black is of no importance. He has gone with the wrong cattle. Unless Mr. DIES' records are incorrect, he was chairman of an American group that went to a meeting of the Communist Internationale some place in Europe. He is a graduate of Yale University. He came out of it as a Phi Beta Kappa. I presume that he is an intelligent man, and if he is, he knows whereof he has been walking, and if politics by reason of the fact that he is a Negro enters into it, then what are you fellows thinking about? There are a lot of Negro votes in my district. I do not know what kind of Negroes you have in yours, but my Negroes are red-blooded American citizens, and they do not want a Negro Communist on the pay roll of the Government any more than they want a white Communist on the pay roll of the Federal Government, and the fact that this man is a Negro should have no consideration in this matter. The Negroes in my district will not vote against me because I vote to kick a Negro Communist off the Government pay roll, and if I am afraid that they will, then I am not fit to be here. If the Negro complex has entered into this thing, let us not hide behind it. The Negroes have been kicked around enough. They think, they are red blooded, they are patriotic Americans, as you and I, and my Negroes will say, "Jack, if Pickens is a Communist, you vote to kick him out, and we will hold up your hand."

Of course, I shall support this resolution, and I hope that this committee will do the job that it has an opportunity to do. So far as I am concerned, I am not going to be able to reverse my position just because of this resolution. I am going to vote if I get the opportunity to kick Pickens off the pay roll, and that is what ought to be done to him, and we ought not to hide behind this thing. Talk to me about a man having a day in court, when he has a record from 1933 to 1940 that no one has disputed—tell me that he should be granted justice. He stands convicted today. So as any other man whose conduct is such, if he is a Government employee, that you or I have reason even to suspect his loyalty to his Government, he should be kicked off the pay roll first and tried later.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. ROWE. In the event that the committee duly appointed by this body to investigate and give this gentleman his day in court, should find the man innocent of the charges, is it still the gentleman's intention to take him off the pay roll?

Mr. NICHOLS. They would have to convince me that he was innocent of the charges before I would change my vote.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that a sense of proportion will indicate to us what is the important consideration in this whole matter. I am not so concerned about this one case, but I am concerned about the final result. For that reason let me suggest to you the operation that will be taken under the pending resolution, which I favor. The first thing, of course, will be to initiate a charge against an individual that he has been affiliated with some subversive force. That charge will be referred to the subcommittee and that subcommittee will conduct its examination. The subcommittee or the full committee will then make a report to the House of Representatives. That report, so I take it from the text of the resolution, will be privileged in nature and can be appended to any bill that is pending before this body. Let me raise this one question. Suppose after charges are brought and the examination has been made that there is no action, or suppose the gentleman has neither been exonerated nor convicted. Suppose it is one of those frustrations that are often experienced in government, and goodness knows I have experienced enough frustrations over the years. I have seen this House develop a feverish pitch and then walk down the hill again, which all reminds us of that old ditty about the King of France:

> The noble King of France,
> He had ten thousand men.
> He marched them up the hill,
> And then marched down again.

Do not be dismayed about a reversal of action by this House. It happens quite often. So what happened with this individual case is not important at the moment. The important thing is that we capitalize the spirit of the House, the determination that is being articulated for the first time in a great many years in dealing with this question of subversion. So, by way of implementation of this resolution, I propose to offer an amendment to the pending Post Office appropriation bill which will provide, in substance, that when charges have been made under resolution 105, soon to be adopted, and the individual so charged has neither been exonerated nor has there been any disposition of his case, that no funds in the bill shall be used or allocated for the payment of his compensation until such time as action has been taken. I do not want to see us get away from our conviction, from our determination that after years of tortuous effort, we divest some of these people from the pay roll. Of that I can speak advisedly because I took the first man off 2 years ago, namely, David Lasser. I do not want to find the cup of bitterness again here, and I propose before the deliberation of the pending bill is over in Committee of the Whole, to offer an amendment to implement the procedure being taken here today. Either we mean business or we do not.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to ask the gentleman, who is a colleague of mine on the subcommittee, if this resolution is adopted, of course the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill will not be law until it is signed by the President?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will this keep Pickens from being heard under this resolution, if the amendment is adopted?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. I think Pickens can be heard.

Mr. HENDRICKS. He can be in the event your amendment is adopted?

Mr. DIRKSEN. He can be in the event that amendment is adopted; or he can be heard even though the amendment is not adopted.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. If I understand the amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer, it would, in substance and effect, be the same thing as if we vote him out now or vote to keep him out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not think so. It is general in nature and not aimed at any particular individual.

Mr. COLMER. Well, you convict him without a hearing in either instance?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not think so.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I helped create the Dies committee and helped keep it in force. We have spent a lot of time and money for them to go out and especially to investigate. Now I am wondering, with the powers that the Appropriations Committee will have and with what time they will have, if they can do a better job of investigating than the Dies committee. Will we find ourselves advancing or taking a backward step?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The committee will sit as a judge to take testimony from all sides. I am persuaded of the fairness of the members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. They will have the same opportunity that the Dies committee has had.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But we can use this as a prosecuting instrumentality.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] 5 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution should be adopted because it will provide a legal way to accomplish a most desirable purpose—the ascertainment of the loyalty or disloyalty of Government employees. Under the law as we wrote it there is not a scintilla of right in this Congress to remove any man from the pay roll of the Government unless he has been proven to advocate, or to be a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of this Government by force or violence. The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], whose committee I voted to create and every appropriation for the continuation of which I have supported, in his speech yesterday based his argument in support of the actior taken on the theory that the Attorney General, Hon. Francis Biddle, in his decision and order in the Harry Bridges case, had predicated them upon the fact that Bridges was a member of or affiliated with several Communist-front organizations.

Mr. DIES said:

In his decision in the case of the deportation of Harry Bridges, the Attorney General, Mr. Biddle, named four Communist-front organizations with which Bridges had been affiliated and found in Bridges' affiliation with these four organizations one of the principal grounds for ordering his deportation from the United States. Now imagine the utter absurdity of the Treasury Department's position when we find that William Pickens was prominently identified with three of these four Communist-front organizations. In fact, William Pickens was far more prominently associated with these three Communist-front organizations than was Harry Bridges. The three organizations to which I refer were the International Labor Defense, the All America Anti-Imperialist League, and the American League Against War and Fascism. I shall presently show the extent and nature of Pickens' affiliation with all three of them. If the Justice Department finds ground for deporting Harry Bridges in his affiliation with these three Communist fronts, what leg has the Treasury Department to stand on in keeping William Pickens on its pay roll?

Mr. DIES was wrong; of course, honestly mistaken.

The Attorney General's findings of fact and order read as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. That Harry Renton Bridges is an alien, to wit, a native and citizen of Australia;

2. That said alien entered the United States at the port of San Francisco, Calif., April 12, 1920, as a member of the crew of the barkentine Ysabel;

3. That the Communist Party of the United States of America, from the time of its inception in 1919 to the present time, is an organization that believes in, advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

4. That the Communist Party of the United States of America, from the time of its inception to the present time, is an organization that writes, circulates, distributes, prints, publishes, and displays printed matter advising, advocating, or teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

5. That the Communist Party of the United States of America, from the time of its inception to the present time, is an organization that causes to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, and displayed, printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

6. That the Communist Party of the United States of America, from the time of its inception to the present time, is an organization that has in its possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, issue, and display, printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

7. That the Marine Workers' Industrial Union was a part of the Communist Party, dominated and controlled by it;

8. That the Marine Workers Industrial Union was an organization that believed in, advised, advocated, and taught the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

9. That after entering the United States the alien has been a member of the Communist Party;

10. That after entering the United States the alien has been affiliated with the Communist Party;

11. That after entering the United States the alien has been affiliated with the Marine Workers' Industrial Union.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

That under the act of October 16, 1918, as amended by the acts of June 5, 1920, and June 28, 1940, the alien, Harry Renton Bridges is subject to deportation in that:

1. After entering the United States he has been a member of an organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

2. That after entering the United States the alien has been affiliated with an organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

3. That after entering the United States the alien has been a member of an organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, publishes, and displays printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

4. That after entering the United States the alien has been affiliated with an organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, publishes, and displays printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

5. That after entering the United States the alien has been a member of an organization, association, society, or group that caused to be written, circulated, distributed, published, printed, and displayed printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

FRANCIS BIDDLE,
Attorney General.

MAY 28, 1942.

ORDER

I therefore order that the alien, Harry Renton Bridges, be deported to Australia at the expense of the Government on the charges that—

1. After entering the United States he has been a member of an organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

2. After entering the United States he has been affiliated with an organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

3. After entering the United States he has been a member of an organization, association, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, publishes, and displays printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

4. After entering the United States he has been affiliated with an organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, publishes, and displays printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States;

5. After entering the United States he has been a member of an organization, association, society, or group that caused to be written, circulated, distributed, published, printed, and displayed printed matter advising, advocating, and teaching the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

FRANCIS BIDDLE,
Attorney General.

MAY 28, 1942.

From the Attorney General's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and his order, as he wrote them himself, you will see that he based his order, and made his order, solely upon the ground "that the Maritime Workers' Industrial Union was a part of the Communist Party, dominated and controlled by it"; and that Harry Bridges since coming here had been a member of, and affiliated with, the Communist Party, and affiliated with the Maritime Workers' Industrial Union.

It is true that in the preliminary part of the Attorney General's document he does mention as Communist-front organizations the International Labor Defense, the All America Anti-Imperialist League, and the American League Against War and Fascism, and Bridges' association therewith. But he did not base his order deporting Harry Bridges upon any such membership or affiliation or association.

Nor could the Attorney General, under the law he was administering in the Bridges case, have rightfully ordered deportation upon such a ground.

Now, my colleagues, we wrote the law, and the only law, for the guidance of the departments of the Government in the procurement of personnel. It provides against paying the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence. That is the rule we laid down, the standard we set up. Is it fair to the Treasury Department, that has been so careful in its personnel procurement that only one out of its thousands of employees is even under suspicion, to set up one standard for its guidance and then, when they have fully complied with this requirement, refuse to comply with it ourselves?

The Treasury Department has made three separate investigations of William Pickens—one before and two since his employment—to make sure that he does not advocate and has not advocated, and has never been a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States. Each time the report was that no evidence supporting any such conclusion could be found.

The F. B. I. in its investigation of William Pickens evidently found no such evidence.

It is admitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], that his committee has no such evidence.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not know what the record is before the Dies committee, but there is certainly ample evidence before the House, given yesterday by Mr. DIES himself, that Pickens is a Communist.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is mistaken about that. In fact, I will state categorically on my honor as a Member of this House that that is not the fact.

Mr. NICHOLS. Did the gentleman ever know of a delegate being sent to a convention of the Communist International who was not a member of the party?

Mr. HOBBS. My understanding is that the gentleman is in error in the implication of that question, if he means to charge that William Pickens ever was a delegate to a convention of the Communist International.

Mr. NICHOLS. Well, I do not know. That is what Mr. DIES said.

Mr. HOBBS. No. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not think he did. I listened to him very carefully and I have been studying the record ever since. What he said was that the evidence showed that this man appeared on the platform with Earl Browder and made a speech at the convention of the United States Congress Against War; that he went to Europe twice to Communist-front meetings. He ought not to have done any one of these things. He has acted the fool, of course, but the reason he did was probably his overzealous activity for what he conceived to be the advancement of his own race. I do not think he is fit for the position he occupies, but we wrote the rules as to who should be expelled from Government service and we ought to live up to them.

This resolution gives us a chance to do legally what Mr. DIES advocates. That is, to base separation from the pay roll upon evidence showing membership in, or association with, subversive organizations. Let me read you what the pending resolution says:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, acting through a special subcommittee thereof appointed by the chairman of such committee for the purposes of this resolution, is authorized and directed to examine into any and all allegations or charges that certain persons in the employ of the several executive departments and other executive agencies are unfit to continue in such employment by reason of their present association or membership or past association or membership in or with organizations whose aims or purposes are or have been subversive to the Government of the United States.

The adoption of this resolution will change the rule, as we have a perfect right to do. Its passage would relieve us of the high degree of proof now required. Adopt this resolution, and instead of being required to prove advocacy of, or membership in an organization that advocates the overthrow of our Government, it will then be required to prove that an employee is unfit to continue in such employment by reason of his present association or membership or past association or membership in or with organizations whose aims or purposes are or have been subversive to the Government of the United States.

If you wish to liberalize the rule so as to assure our Government far greater protection from the employment of the disloyal and the unfit, pass this resolution and be fair.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the House on the unanimity with which it approaches this resolution. As a matter of fact, however, what is really accomplished by the resolution is out of all proportion to the attention given it here. Except in one minor detail the Committee on Appropriations has every power conferred by this resolution; it has the authority to do everything the resolution proposes. It has the authority to investigate and the authority to remove these men from their positions by the simple expedient of withholding their salaries. The only change provided by this resolution from the established order is that under the present system we have to wait until we reach the bill which carries that particular salary before taking action.

The one thing this resolution does, and it is infinitesimal in importance in comparison with the time we have spent on the subject, is that it permits us to take action at once instead of waiting for the appropriate bill to come along. In other words, this resolution permits us to take action on all such cases at one and the same time instead of taking them up one by one in bill after bill as the annual supply bills are reported to the House during the session.

But the one authorization which the resolution confers has three advantages:

In the first place, at a time when we are passing through world-shaking events, the defense of the Nation, the preservation of civilization itself, depends on the action of this body—the greatest representative body on earth—we are wasting hours and days quibbling about the political, social, moral, and economic views of some one individual down here in the departments nobody ever heard of. This bill permits us to get away from such inconsequential minutiae and turn such details over to a committee, while we turn our attention to winning the war abroad and intelligently administering our own household affairs at home.

In the second place, instead of having each subcommittee handling these cases separately and in as many different ways, this plan will insure uniformity of action, standardize procedure, and permit disposition of all cases at one time and in the same way.

The third and the really important effect is that we will expedite adjudication and disposition of these cases and thereby serve both the accused and the Government. These men against whom charges are pending are faced with a serious situation. If they are not guilty they are entitled to prompt exoneration; on the other hand, if they are guilty, then the quicker the Government removes them the sooner and the more certainly will we protect the Nation against sabotage and fifth-column activity.

I trust the resolution will have the unanimous approval of the House.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this resolution by the House this morning will, in my opinion, be a declaration on the part of the House that now it does not place full faith and credit in the allegations of the Dies committee, because if this House had faith in the allegations of the Dies committee it would stand on the record the committee made last Friday when by a large majority, almost a unanimous vote of the Republican Members of the House, the Committee of the Whole voted to deny Mr. Pickens a trial and voted him guilty of subversive activities. Not a single bit of additional evidence has been presented to this House which could cause us to counteract that action taken last Friday. No other factor having entered into the picture since then, it must be concluded that it is political motives which actuate this new attitude.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. For myself, I voted against the amendment to strike Mr. Pickens from the roll and I can be consistent and vote for the resolution this morning and therefore vote to give him a fair trial.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for this resolution. After careful consideration of the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] prohibiting the expenditure of any part of the appropriation in the pending bill to pay the salary of one William Pickens, I have come to the conclusion that we are acting contrary to the Constitution.

Pickens is a citizen of the United States. He is an educated and able servant of the Treasury Department. He stands charged with no crime against the laws of the United States. This House, however, has seen fit to deny him the protection with which every citizen is clothed under the Constitution.

Under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

It is charged that Mr. Pickens is a Communist, and that, apparently, is the only charge against him. It is also denied that he is a Communist, and there the matter stands without any judicial determination.

Even granting that Mr. Pickens is a believer in communism, so far as he is concerned, it is a belief only. Belief in communism in Russia—that is, that communism is a good form of government for Russia—is quite a widespread belief throughout the world today. If all men who believed now that communism in Russia is a good thing for the Russians were to be denied their salaries while working for the Government, we would have a long list of the hungry—including a considerable number of the Members of this Congress.

In order to determine whether communism is a good thing for Russia, we have no comparison to make except with the former Government of Russia under the Czar. In light of the development of Russia, educationally and industrially and as a great intelligent military power, we are all forced to the conclusion that the new way in Russia is much superior to the dark days of ignorance under the Czar. If that is what Pickens believes, it is what millions of free citizens of the United States believe.

There is absolutely no evidence before us that Mr. Pickens wants to force this system of government on the people of this country, nor that he has done any overt act to bring that about. He, granting that he believes in communism, has been guilty of nothing except having a belief. There is no evidence before us that Mr. Pickens is not loyal to our war effort; there is no evidence that he has done any act to obstruct our war effort or destroy the Government. The only thing we have proved in this debate is that Mr. Pickens is a colored man, an educated man, an able official, and that he has a belief.

Does this Congress believe we can deprive a citizen of property without due process of law? Does this House believe that it can say—merely because a citizen has a certain belief and nothing more—that he is not entitled to the equal protection of the laws of this country?

All admit that Mr. Pickens is a citizen; all agree that he has not been convicted in any court of a crime against the laws of the United States forfeiting that citizenship. If he is a citizen, therefore, he is entitled to all the priviliges of such. He can vote—he does vote—I presume; he can run for office, and if he gets votes enough he can hold that office. I know of only one office he possibly could not hold and that is the office of a Member of Congress. The Constitution gives this House the power to determine its own membership. That is a constitutional prerogative. Being elected, Mr. Pickens could be refused a seat in this House for a good reason, a bad reason, or no reason at all. But no such power is granted this House as to any office except in its own body.

It is clear to me that the House cannot go outside of its own powers to say that a free citizen—holding some other office in the Government—shall be denied his salary and thereby be denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Constitution itself.

This Congress was just elected to do some big things for the people of the United States, and after 5 weeks' work, this House has emerged with an act to deny a citizen of this country the equal protection of the laws, and has thereby violated the Constitution of the United States. If this House cannot pass any legislation except that which is in direct violation of the clearly understood provisions of the Constitution, the people have not much to expect.

What would be the situation if the Treasury Department continued Mr. Pickens in office and caused this act to be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States? There is enough for this Congress to do under the Constitution. If we let our prejudices, racial, religious, or political, direct our action, we are unworthy of the position we occupy in this great deliberative body. This is more strikingly true when we are engaged in a great war and have announced to the world the "four freedoms": The freedom of speech and expression; the freedom to worship God as we see fit; freedom from want and the freedom from fear of aggressor nations. As leaders in this great Nation we should practice what we preach.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. MASON. I just wanted to say that if the interpretation placed on the action of the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct, I am forced to vote on a roll call against keeping Mr. Pickens on the roll.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the House is presented with a very practical situation. With all due respect to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, who has just taken his seat, I cannot agree with the observations he made. The membership of the House are not passing upon the merits or demerits of Mr. Pickens' particular case on this occasion; they are passing upon the question of whether or not they will adopt the pending resolution in order that a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations may consider all these cases called to the attention of this special subcommittee by the Dies committee or by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], or by any member thereof, I assume.

The question that confronts us is whether or not we are going to apply to Mr. Pickens the same procedure we apply to the others; whether or not we are going to do the right thing, the fair thing, and the decent thing after we adopt this resolution, of eliminating the Pickens amendment from the pending bill.

In my opinion, however, voting for this resolution or voting to eliminate the Pickens amendment is not passing upon the merit or the demerit of Mr. Pickens' loyalty or disloyalty.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the adoption of this resolution prevent a Member from voting separately upon the Pickens amendment at a subsequent time?

The SPEAKER. It will not. It is the right of any Member to ask for a separate vote on the so-called Pickens amendment.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1648) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1648, with Mr. COURTNEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, this bill has now been pending before the House for many days. In order to finish this evening the subcommittee serves notice that debate from now on will have to be confined to the bill. Any effort to speak out of order will be objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair trusts the Committee so understands.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rural Delivery Service: For pay of rural carriers, auxiliary carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual and sick leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, $92,200,000, of which not less than $200,000 shall be available for extensions and new service.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARE: Page 39, line 20, strike out "$92,200,000" and insert "$94,000,000", and at the end of line 21, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "including delivery service by substitute carriers on all holidays except Sundays."

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point of order against the amendment. The second provision of the amendment is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, under the regulations of the Post Office Department, substitute carriers are required to carry mail at any time a regular carrier is not available. The Post Office Department, in a special communication, says that it has the right to install delivery on every holiday except Sunday, and the only thing necessary is the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct this question to the gentleman from South Carolina: Is there any provision in the law for the payment of these substitute carriers on holidays?

Mr. HARE. That is what we are asking this increase for.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any law at the present time authorizing the payment to substitute carriers on Sunday? Is there any law presently that authorizes that payment?

Mr. HARE. No, except city carriers and clerks, a general authorization under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman care to be heard further?

Mr. HARE. I believe not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. O'NEAL. No; except I insist there is no authorization. I must insist on the point of order, unless the gentleman would like to have me withhold the point of order until he has made his statement.

Mr. HARE. Yes.

Mr. O'NEAL. I gladly withhold my point of order until the gentleman has completed his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, to my mind the Post Office Department contributes as much service directly to the benefit of the people of this country as any other department of Government. If we were to discontinue the operations of all of our departments for 1 week I doubt whether the cessation of the work would be felt more severely by the people of the Nation than that of the Postal Service.

For nearly 50 years the Congress has been providing postal services to people who live in rural districts. Services have been provided on every day except holidays. The services are now provided to patrons in villages and cities, at least one delivery on all holidays except Sunday. This year we are going to have 9 holidays; 5 of them will occur either on Saturday or Monday, and there will be five times this year when these people will be 3 days each time without postal facilities, whereas their neighbors and friends who happen to live in cities and villages will be furnished with postal service each day.

My amendment provides an appropriation or an increase in the appropriation of $1,800,000 to defray the expenses of delivering the mail on holidays, and it is estimated that the additional revenue arising to the Post Office Department by reason of this added service will be more than sufficient to pay this amount.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am very much in sympathy with what the gentleman is endeavoring to do. May I say that in a number of cases in the district I represent here in Congress there are regular bonded rural carriers who have enlisted in the armed forces of the United States. Their substitutes are performing the duties for them.

Mr. HARE. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As acting carriers. I am wondering if the gentleman's amendment will take care of that kind of a situation?

Mr. HARE. It provides that the substitute carrier on every rural route will be required to serve on each holiday, which will not deprive the regular carrier of his legal holiday. Substitute carriers are already provided by law, although they are not required by regulation of the Department to deliver mail on holidays. This amendment would authorize the Department to provide this service.

My thought is that the people on R. F. D. routes will need rural-delivery service more this year than at any previous time, because they have sons, brothers, and sweethearts in the Army and Navy at different places throughout the world. They watch patiently every day of the week for letters from these boys, and as I have already said there will be five times this year when there will be 3 days when these people will have no postal service whatsoever. They are entitled to this service and they want and we should be willing to provide it, particularly when we are providing similar services to people in towns, villages, and cities. I trust the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] will not insist upon this point of order and allow this amendment to be considered.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina reads as follows:

Strike out "$92,200,000" and insert "$94,000,000", and at the end of line 21 strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "including delivery service by substitute carriers on all holidays except Sundays."

The Chair knows of no authorization for the payment of such services. The gentleman from South Carolina very frankly concedes that he knows of no such authorization. The burden of proof being upon the gentleman from South Carolina, who offered the amendment, the Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Domestic Air Mail Service: For the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, as authorized by law, and for the incidental expenses thereof, including not to exceed $55,200 for supervisory officials and clerks at air-mail transfer points, travel expenses, and not to exceed $76,720 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $22,000,000.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take occasion during the reading of this bill for amendment to call to the attention of my colleagues of the Committee a very significant development in the operation of the air-mail service in the United States.

Many Members will recall the action of Congress approximately 4 years ago in establishing certain experimental routes for the carrying of air mail by what we have commonly come to know as the pick-up service. This system is based on an invention which allows a plane to come in and drop its cargo and pick up outgoing mail without using a landing facility or airport.

The operation of the experimental routes was so successful that the Post Office Department reported to the Committee on Appropriations the need for establishment of permanent routes. That was done. We are in a period of development in this forward looking enterprise. In 6 States we are carrying daily air mail by this method, and approximately 110 to 120 communities are being served.

Congress expressed its vision many years ago. We are today reminded of the judgment that was rendered at that time in establishing this service. Many communities with no rail service are served. The system is self-sustaining.

We are in the midst of a terrible war. Of course there can be no widespread development of this operation in the transportation of air mail by the pick-up system. I call your attention, however, to the fact that at the present time the Civil Aeronautics Board has before it for consideration the issuance of several new certificates of convenience and necessity. Applications have been made to the Board by many companies which desire to extend the air-mail pick-up system in the future, not for the few States and the approximately 120 communities now served, but for 35 States, with more than 2,000 communities to be brought into the scope of this development. These requests form the backlog for merited growth when victory over our enemies has been won.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I compliment the gentleman and congratulate him on the splendid work he did several years ago in bringing about the development of this air mail pick-up system. I understand the gentleman encouraged the inventive genius who worked out this method and he also fostered the legislation which gave the method a practical trial leading to adoption. Is there anything in this bill which encourages or discourages it?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I appreciate sincerely the very kind reference to myself. We have had encouragement of the service from the Post Office Department many times, including the testimony before the Appropriations Subcommittee of this bill. The Post Office officials reported to the appropriations group, according to page 216 of the hearings on this measure, that the service in 6 States has been unsually successful, including Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Delaware, Kentucky, and New York. I am hopeful that when the war is over there can be a speedy extension of the air-mail pick-up system very quickly into 30 or more States of the Union. In a few days I will put in the RECORD a list of the points to be served if the new routes are allowed. There are communities that will never have the money to build or maintain airports, or that have uneven or mountainous terrain, making construction costly and difficult, and by pick-up service they will have the advantage of daily air mail, thus bringing them into 24-hour touch with all parts of the country.

In other words, what we have today brought to the front doors of America, from the standpoint of the expeditious dispatch of air mail, will then come to the back doors of America. That is as it should be.

When the struggle is over, which we trust will be soon, there will come back to our shores thousands of young men who have touched the great sphere of aviation for the first time. These pilots will funnel their services and their abilities back into a peacetime aviation trade. From dropping loads of bombs over Germany and Japan they shall come back to the purposes of peace. Air transportation will become a great industry. These seasoned young men will not stop flying. They will then pilot the hundreds of planes which will bring a great expansion of the air-mail pick-up system to the heart of America.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the subject I wish to discuss for a moment is not as dramatic as the interesting subject of air mail, but it is important. There is carried in this bill an item of $14,700,000 for Star Route Service. What I shall have to say is directed particularly to the members of the legislative Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the able chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH] being on the floor.

For years we have sought to get legislation enacted which would take care of the problem of the star route carrier. Throughout the depression—before and since—star route bids have been let in a haphazard fashion of competitive bidding, and the grossest injustices have frequently resulted. Competitive bidding in matters of construction of Government installations is highly desirable, but this system of competitive bidding on star routes, which approximately correspond to rural routes, is all wrong. On the big commercial contracts where equipment is the main item and personnel is secondary a different situation might prevail.

There are about 12,000 star routes. Many of these routes, a majority of them, are more or less rural routes. They are let on the basis of competitive bidding, which has been wholly unsatisfactory, so unsatisfactory that 1,000 of these contracts last year were just given up, because the men who had bid on them were not able to carry out their contracts. Under the star-route system the country is divided into four different sections, and one of the four sections of the United States has a contract letting each year. This year there will be a lot of letting of contracts for the carrying of these star-route mails in one of the zones. It seems to me that before this present fiscal year comes to an end, it would be most desirable if the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads would bring here a bill which would provide that where men are now carrying star-route mail in a satisfactory way they may be permitted to renegotiate and readjust their contracts with the Government, and go on with their work, and not bring about the confusion in the Service which will be brought about by all this rebidding. Manpower demands are very pressing. The present carriers know their routes. This is no time for unnecessary changes. This long-delayed legislation should now be passed. This is legislation which all Members who know the problem have sought to have enacted for years, in order that we may put the star-route carrier on a proper basis, and thereby improve the service and carry out a proper service to which the patrons of the star route are entitled. The star-route carriers have been the forgotten men and women of the Postal Service. In many cases they have been shamefully underpaid. The whole system has been wrong.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I appreciate and am in sympathy with what the gentleman is trying to do, but if the star-route carriers in his section of the Nation are in the same position as a majority of the star-route carriers of Oklahoma, then very few of them would desire to negotiate for an extension of their contracts on the same basis of pay which they are now receiving. That ought to be made plain. Considering the present world situation, the shortage of manpower, the increased cost of living is going to require some readjustments if these men are to continue to carry Uncle Sam's mail.

Mr. MAHON. That is true. I would give the Department the right to renegotiate and readjust the contracts either upward or downward.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then I agree with the gentleman and join with him in expressing the hope that such legislation will be presented to this body at an early date.

Mr. MAHON. That is one of the purposes of the proposed legislation.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. PRIEST. I have been much interested in this, and last year introduced a bill which would go a little further than the gentleman suggested with reference to renegotiation. I ask the gentleman what he thinks of that proposition at this time, which, in substance, would classify the star routes into two groups—class A, which are common carriers, and class B, which are competitive-bid routes—and place all class B routes on a basis of payment arrived at by so much per hour, so much per mile actually traveled in carrying the routes.

Mr. MAHON. I would not undertake to say how the legislation should be written. What I am saying is that in my judgment the committee should take cognizance of the two classes to which the gentleman refers and bring out a bill which would enable the star-route carriers in the districts to be advertised this year to go on with their work without all of this rebidding and the wasted manpower which will be incident to the readvertising of bids.

Mr. GRANGER. What would the gentleman have to say of such star-route carriers that have 2 years to go? Labor and everything else has increased, and they are working on low bids and most of them are going to bondsmen to carry them on.

Mr. MAHON. The Star Route Service is demoralized, and it is because Congress has not passed the type of legislation which would insure proper compensation to the star-route carriers.

Of course, I recognize that we cannot rectify the situation in this appropriation bill. Legislation is required, and I hope we can pass a bill at this session which will correct the present very bad situation. I point out that my remarks are directed principally to those star-route carriers who deliver mail on routes in a way somewhat similar to rural carriers. They constitute a majority of the star-route carriers.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 204. While the United States is at war, the Postmaster General may, in case of emergency, temporarily assign any post-office clerk to the duties of city delivery carrier or any such carrier to the duties of such clerk and in an emergency may assign any post-office employee to the duties of a railway postal clerk or any railway postal clerk to the duties of a post-office employee without change of pay-roll status, the compensation of any temporarily assigned employee to be paid from the appropriation made for the work to which he is regularly assigned.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against section 204 on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, not authorized by law.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I say to the gentleman that the committee concedes the point of order is well taken. We do not resist it, but with the gentleman's permission I would like to say that this was put in the bill solely at the urgent insistence of the Postmaster General, who said that only through such temporary legislation would he be able to cope with the serious manpower problem that confronts him. Twenty-five thousand of his men have gone into the service, and he asked us to provide this interchangeability so that he could use for brief periods employees of one group in another service temporarily, if necessary. The gentleman will note in the first sentence of the section that it is specifically stated that it stands only while the United States is at war, but if the gentleman insists upon the point of order we concede the point.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say in reply to the gentleman that I insist on the point of order because I do not want to put the members of the Postal Service under the whim and caprice of every postmaster throughout the United States, and I will say further if such legislation is needed, it ought to come from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

I will say further that if our committee will attend to the question of salaries and give those in the Postal Service the deserved raise they have waited for for the past 17 years, the situation in the Postal Service will be greatly improved.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COURTNEY). The point of order against the section of the bill is conceded. The committee admits that it goes into the realm of permanent legislation.

The point of order therefore is sustained.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEEFE: Page 51, line 14, after the period insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 204. (a) No part of the money appropriated in this title shall be expended for the purpose of collecting, sorting, handling, transporting or delivering free the mail of any officer in any executive department or administrative agency of the Government."

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no mistake as to the purport or intent of this amendment may I as clearly and as definitely as I can state exactly what this amendment proposes to do?

First, Is it the intent of the sponsor of this amendment to deny to the executive and administrative departments of the Government the use of the United States mail? The answer is absolutely "No." I want the executive and administrative agencies of government to use the mail in every reasonable way that is necessary to carry on the public business. There is nothing in this amendment that will prevent either the executive or administrative agencies of the Government from using the mail. The only thing that this amendment does is to place a limitation upon the pending appropriation bill, which does not become effective until the 1st day of July 1943. Therefore every agency of government, between now and July 1, 1943, has an opportunity to come to the appropriate subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee and tell the Appropriations Committee their needs for postal service. I am certain that the Appropriations Committee will see to it that every executive agency and every administrative agency of government is supplied with sufficient funds to enable them to meter their mail and pay for it the same as every other citizen pays for his mail.

Let me show you some facts with reference to this situation. What kind of mail goes through the Post Office free? There are three kinds of mail that are carried free. One is the mail to which I am referring in this amendment, called penalty mail. Penalty mail is carried free. It is the mail of the departments and agencies of government. It is carried free when it is on official business. Up at the right-hand corner of the envelope it contains the very appropriate provision of a $300 penalty for use for any other than official business.

The second type of mail that is carried free is franked mail. Franked mail is the mail that is used by the legislative establishment of government to carry on its official business.

The third type of free mail is mail that is carried for the soldiers, and is just what it says. It is free mail. The soldier simply puts his name and station and rank on the envelope and writes the word "free" up where the stamp should ordinarily be, and that mail is carried free.

So we have the three types of free mail. Now, what do the first two types cost the Government of the United States? Had the departments of government this last year been compelled to pay the Post Office Department at regular rates for carrying their mail it would have given to the Postal Service approximately $71,000,000, according to the testimony of the Postmaster General himself.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I cannot yield at this time. I will yield later.

It cost $71,000,000. The Post Office Department in 1942 handled 1,516,015,444 pieces of penalty mail. In 1941 they handled 1,123,000,000 pieces of penalty mail. The gain in 1942 over 1941 in the number of pieces of penalty mail was 34.9 percent, a tremendous increase in the number of pieces of penalty mail being sent out free by the various bureaucratic agencies of government scattered all over the United States. They not only sent more pieces of mail in 1942 than they did in 1941, but look at the other figure as disclosed on page 6 of the hearings. The number of pounds of mail carried in 1941 was 151,000,000 pounds, but in 1942 it had jumped to 236,000,000 pounds, an increase of 55.9 percent.

I do not need to talk to the Members of this Congress about the tremendous abuse by the departments in the use of penalty mail. Every post office in the United States knows the fact. Every mail carrier in the cities or in the villages, every rural carrier is simply burdened down trying to distribute these millions and hundreds of millions of pieces of penalty mail, much of which is worthless and useless, that are flooding the entire United States, until it has become a national scandal and a national disgrace. Let me see if I cannot paint this picture to you in terms that will be understood. Do you know how much an average freight car carries? Let me tell you—40,000 pounds. Last year, on the figures of the Post Office Department itself, it took 100 trains, 100 trainloads, not carloads, 100 trains of 60 cars each, each car carrying 40,000 pounds of penalty mail in order to carry throughout this country and distribute this tremendous amount of mail material that is being issued by these various departments of the Government. I realize that in the case of the Army, the Navy, and other departments having to do directly with the war effort there ought to be and necessarily will be, an increase in the use of penalty mail; but let me call your attention to this, that when the O. P. A. and the W. P. B. are threatening to curtail the amount of newsprint paper to a point where the newspapers of this country perhaps will not be able to exist, it seems to me that the Congress of the United States ought immediately to take some action to curb the use by these departments of the privilege accorded them of penalty mail.

What does this amendment propose to do? All we say by this amendment to these departments is: You know how much mail you are sending out; you know the character of it and you know what your requirements will be in the next fiscal year. Now, we want you to come before the Congress of the United States and justify the necessity for sending out this material that you are sending out. We will let you have the postage to send out every bit of material that is necessary to carry on the public business.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] just calls my attention to the fact that you cannot send your local paper out to your boy or your friend's boy at the front; they will not carry it, but they are sending out tons and tons of this Victory publication and magazines of that kind published by these bureaucrats and sending it out there for these boys to read. I should like to call your attention to some testimony on this subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I cannot yield at this point. I will yield later if I have time.

I direct your attention, if you please, to the testimony of the Postmaster General himself, which is found on page 49 of the hearings. I asked the Postmaster General certain questions on this subject. I read some of my questions and the Postmaster General's replies thereto:

Mr. KEEFE. There is absolutely no restriction or limitation whatsoever, then, upon these departmental agencies in the use of the mail? They can go just as far as they want to, except for the limitations as to weight and size of packages, and so on?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, sir; I know of no other restriction.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, if they were compelled to pay postage on that stuff, what would the situation be?

Mr. WALKER. Then they would have to justify that in their budget.

Mr. KEEFE. They would have to justify the necessity for all this stuff, would they not, when they come before the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. You would have some check on it there, would you not?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. You have not any check on it now, that I can see, at all?

Mr. WALKER. Except the reports under the O'Mahoney Act that are now eliminated, and the test checks that we make.

Mr. KEEFE. But those test checks are merely to show the amount of penalty mail being handled; they are no check at all on the use of it, whether it is necessary or whether it is not, and all that sort of thing?

Mr. WALKER. The answer is directly to the amount, and not to the control. We have no control.

These agencies down here can deliver a carload of pamphlets to the Post Office Department in penalty envelopes and it is the duty of the Post Office Department to see that they are delivered to the addressees. Now, I say to you Members who have been standing down in the well of this House protesting against extravagance that if you want to save some money to the taxpayers of the country here is an item that is costing somewhere between seventy and a hundred millions of dollars a year. There is not a person on this floor who is not familiar with the flagrant abuses that are being practiced by these departments of the Government in the use of penalty mail privilege.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I hope the gentleman will permit me to continue.

Now, let me compare, if you will, and I think I will answer the gentleman; let me compare, if you will, the complaints that have been made against the Congress of the United States in the use of franked mail. Congress is the one that is always attacked because of the franking privilege. There is this distinction between these bureaucrats and Members of Congress, however: We are elected by the people, and we are responsible to the people. If any Member of this House abuses the franking privilege that is accorded to him he can be called to account by the constituency he represents; but who is to call to account these bureaucrats down here who have never been elected by any constituency? And yet, when this subject is discussed as it is being discussed throughout the length and breadth of this land, to what do they refer? They never say a word about the abuses of the agencies of Government in the use of the penalty mail; they always refer to the abuses of Congress in the use of the franking privilege.

What did it cost last year for the franking privilege for the entire legislative department of the Government? I have the figures here, $767,000—$767,000 as against $71,000,000 used by these agencies of the Government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KEEFE. I shall be pleased to yield; yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is a great deal of merit in the statement the gentleman is making. I should like to ask the gentleman, however, about the subsidy we are giving to second-, third-, and fourth-class mail of $128,000,000 a year. In 4 years we gave them half a billion dollars. How does the gentleman feel about that subsidy to the newspapers and magazines of this country? Does the gentleman believe the taxpayers ought to be assessed $128,000,000 a year for carrying that mail?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Answer that question.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What do you think about that?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, I am quite familiar, as we all are, with the yearly discussions and statements by the distinguished gentleman from New York on the subject which he raised, a subject, however, which is entirely foreign to the subject matter we are discussing here this afternoon. I do not intend to be dissuaded, distracted, or diverted from the subject I am trying to discuss by having anybody inject into this discussion a matter which is entirely foreign to the problem now before us.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman not think it important that half a billion dollars have been taken from the taxpayers in 4 years for these special mailing privileges?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman; I ask to be protected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. KEEFE. May I suggest to the gentleman from New York that if he is in earnest about what he says, that he attempt to place in this bill or some other bill an amendment to eliminate the evil of which he complains; then he will be doing something besides just talking about it. I am trying to meet an issue which is discussed all over this country, and I am trying to meet it in the only way I believe it possible to meet it and have this Congress retain its control over the expenditure of over $71,000,000. Now, the Post Office Committee will come out here, no doubt, through its chairman and say that we are interfering with the legislative prerogatives of that committee in this matter.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, may I say that I am fully aware of the fact that the Post Office and Post Roads Committee has certain functions to perform, and other legislative committees have certain functions to perform. But I have served here now through two sessions of the Congress, now starting the third, and I am becoming irritated at the failure of certain legislative committees of this Congress to bring legislation before the Congress to deal with problems of this character. I for one am no longer willing to sit down and wait while this great abuse is taking place until a legislative committee sees fit to bring in some legislation perhaps to deal with this subject.

Mr. Chairman, I am submitting this amendment to the greatest committee in the whole Congress, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I believe that we are capable and competent to deal with this problem and deal with it now, and not have it put off and delayed under the specious argument that we are attempting to bypass some legislative committee. You know what the facts are, you know what the situation is, you know what the purpose is behind this amendment, and I ask that you give it your support.

Mr. BALDWIN of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BALDWIN of Maryland. If this money is saved in the transportation of penalty mail, would there not be a direct saving in printing and so forth if it curtailed the circulation of a lot of these pamphlets?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes. So far as the actual saving is concerned, it would reflect itself down through the entire personnel, not only of the Post Office Department but the thousands of people who are spending their time sealing these envelopes and addressing them, the thousands of people who are spending their time writing these silly pamphlets that are being put out by the millions and scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land. The saving cannot be estimated at this time. We do not know what it may amount to, but any person who is familiar with governmental activities and government routine must know that if you curtail the use of this penalty mail and make these people come to the Congress and justify the necessity for it, you will have a tremendous saving not only in printing and the consumption and use of paper but in the personnel in these various agencies.

Mr. GROSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. The adoption of the gentleman's amendment will prevent an increase in the cost of postage stamps, which are to be raised to 4 cents, according to the Postmaster General.

Mr. KEEFE. I think the gentleman is on sound ground.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How many Federal employees, crackpot employees, writing the documents to which the gentleman referred, did we refuse to take off the pay roll this morning or yesterday?

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman's question answers itself. The RECORD discloses the action of Congress.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How many of them were crackpots?

Mr. KEFAUVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. The gentleman pointed out the tremendous increase in the quantity and weight of the penalty mail. Will he not point out that in the same period and under the same circumstances the franked mail has been very substantially reduced?

Mr. KEEFE. I attempted to indicate that in the same period when the penalty mail was jumping by leaps and bounds the frank mail went down. In other words, in 1941 the frank mail cost $926,000, in 1942, $767,000, but as to the penalty mail it went up from $49,000,000 in 1941, according to the estimate that I have before me, to $67,000,000 for 1942, and the Postmaster General in his testimony said it would no doubt reach $71,000,000 in 1943.

Here is the first opportunity this Congress has had to effectively deal with a situation that involves million of dollars. Here is an opportunity for the Members to demonstrate by their action today whether they mean what they say when they stated that they intended to take back some of these powers that have been delegated to the bureaucratic agencies of our Government. Here is a question that is submitted squarely to the Members of Congress who will have an opportunity to vote and say whether they intend to endeavor to save at least $40,000,000 of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin told us yesterday in discussing the Pickens matter involved in the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, that he was a prosecuting attorney, and that his experience had been that of a prosecuting attorney. The gentleman undoubtedly was an excellent prosecuting attorney. He is a very capable Congressman and when he comes to presenting a matter on the floor he not only deals with the subject matter with vigor and enthusiasm but also attempts to carry his point by a certain amount of prejudice. The gentleman speaks as a prosecuting attorney usually does. He hits the high places, he emphasizes the points that will require a certain amount of blood to rush to your face until it will make you want to do something about it. But, Mr. Chairman, this is a deliberative body, not a criminal court jury.

Let us look at the facts in this case. They are very, very clear, and may I say that there is nothing more dangerous that I know of to do at this time when the war is on than that which the gentleman asks us to do. This amendment was not proposed in the committee. We did not consider it. Had we considered it, I do not believe there would have been a chance of its being reported favorably. I have not the time to correct every mistake suggested or stated by the gentleman.

First, I propose to show the cost. They testified—and you will find this on page 239—that, instead of costing $100,000,000, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said they testified, it costs $24,000,000 to handle it. That is the written testimony.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. O'NEAL. Just a moment.

Mr. KEEFE. I am sure the gentleman does not want to make such an outlandish statement as that.

Mr. O'NEAL. I referred the gentleman to my authority.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman knows that we have before us the figures right here.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I object to more unpermitted interruptions.

This is not a new proposal. This was done long ago by the Federal Government. We used to require postage to be put on, but we changed that. Why? Because it was found not satisfactory.

As to the cost of this thing, in my opinion it will not represent any economy whatever to do it in this way. If we require postage, the revenue will be $67,000,000 more, and we will have to put $67,000,000 more into the appropriation bill to buy the stamps.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, just for a correction?

Mr. O'NEAL. I regret very much that I cannot let prosecuting attorney methods interrupt my presentation.

Mr. KEEFE. I just want to let Mr. Walker say something about it.

Mr. O'NEAL. I decline to yield. I understand what the gentleman wants, but I should like to finish my statement, just as the gentleman wanted to finish his.

As I say this has all been tried before. The question is whether we should require all of these agencies to buy stamps rather than do it the way we are now doing it. I say there would be no economy. It would probably cost more to handle 1,500,000,000 pieces of mail. You cannot get stamp machines now, you cannot get the meters to handle this amount of mail. You would have to do it by clerks, and to handle that amount of mail and get it out in time would cost more money. To have the War Department material go out that must go out, and to have the Navy Department material go out, as well as the other mail important to the war, you would need such a large force of clerks under the civil service that the number you are now talking about would be increased by thousands and thousands. You could not handle this mail by machinery, you would have to handle it by clerks, and that would increase the vast number of people we now have on our civil-service rolls. Further, you would need additional office space for them.

The chief point of all, Mr. Chairman, is that while a war is going on you would increase the problems of the Army, the Navy, and the others who are preparing us for war. Do you think it would be practicable, when the Army says they cannot possibly stop to put stamps on every letter they write? Do you think it is right and fair to call upon the Army and the Navy now to stop and hire a lot of clerks, if a general wants to send out a letter or if somebody else in the Army or in the Navy wants to send out a letter? Of course, that is not practicable.

Let us see what the practical effect of this amendment would be. The Collector of Internal Revenue sends out 50,000 blanks, say. Every one of those would have to be stamped. The Selective Service sends out many letters. Eight million ration cards were sent out in 1 bunch. Of course, the volume of mail has increased. Think of the number of transactions that are carried on today with the business houses of the country. The Government is touching every phase of American life today.

This amendment does not relate only to some advertising or propaganda item, which we could stop in the Committee on Appropriations by asking the bureau officials what material of that kind the agencies are sending out. This applies to first-class mail, also to mail that is sent out in connection with business transactions or in connection with the numerous activities of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the other phases of wa. work.

Not only that, the work of the Collector of Internal Revenue, the Selective Service, and all the other work that is being done for the Government in the way of war production would be slowed down and the Post Office Department would have to handle that mail by hand. It simply is not practicable, it is not economical, and it is slow. This is no time to do it.

If the gentleman wants this matter considered thoroughly and fully, we have an intelligent Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, a group equally capable as the Committee on Appropriations. Some of what is proposed by the gentleman may be all right. The gentleman may have a good idea as to some of this penalty mail. But to slow down the work of the Army and the Navy and all the other agencies of the Government at this time certainly is not common sense. It is dangerous, and it should not be done.

Let the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads take care of this problem. If any department is sending out too much of one kind of mail, require them to stop it. But let us not say to General Marshall that every time he wants to send a letter or other communication to anyone he must dip into a drawer and pull out a stamp and stick it onto the envelope, thinking that in that way we will win the war. Let us forget this great amount of hullabaloo about the Government bureaus and agencies. Let us be practical and use some common sense. Refer this matter to a committee that can go into each individual item, and let that committee bring back a bill that is in line with the dignity of the House. We can then tell where to require this to be done and where not to require it. If we do that, we shall be acting in accordance with the best standards of the House of Representatives and we shall not impair the war effort and damage our cause by an attempt to bring about a little economy, when the attempt will really cost more than the economy we are trying to effect.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. O'NEAL. Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman referred to me as a prosecutor.

Mr. O'NEAL. The gentleman referred to himself in that way.

Mr. KEEFE. No. The gentleman has referred to me as a prosecutor.

Mr. O'NEAL. In order to have the record straight, the gentleman yesterday made a very excellent speech—and I enjoy his speeches, as he always makes an excellent speech—and he started out by saying that his experience had been as a prosecuting attorney.

Mr. KEEFE. I did not say any such thing. I said I had been a prosecuting attorney, and I am mighty glad of it. It gave me the opportunity to catch fellows making misstatements on the floor such as the gentleman is now making.

Listen to this. On page 7, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], referring to the number of pieces of penalty mail:

> How would that be reflected in terms of dollars?
> Mr. WALKER. We estimate it is over $71,000,000 for penalty mail in 1942.

Does the gentleman mean to say that I am still mistaken?

Mr. O'NEAL. Oh, the gentleman is worse mistaken than ever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. O'NEAL. I am talking about what it costs the Department. If the gentleman will look at the page referred to, the net cost of $23,000,000 is what I am talking about. I am not talking about the overhead alone. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. O'NEAL. Oh, just wait until I answer the question. I will have to answer the gentleman first before I yield. Where the gentleman is mistaken, and I am afraid his impetuosity lures him into making quick decisions, is this. On page 239, in a statement put in by the Post Office Department, the total penalty cost is $23,000,000. If the gentleman further considers his examination of the hearing he will find that the net cost is $23,000,000, not these hundreds of millions of dollars to which he refers.

Mr. KEEFE. One more question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. Oh, I would be glad to carry on a conversation all the rest of the afternoon with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am in sympathy with the object of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE]. However, I do say that to adopt this amendment here today in my opinion would make a bad matter very much worse. With all of the different angles of the mail service, it would be impossible to set up a plan between now and the 1st of July by which it could be operated successfully. I feel that the penalty mail privilege has been very much abused, and I feel that something should be done by which it can be corrected, but I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and other gentlemen here, that the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, through me and its legislative counsel and its secretary, for the last 2 or 3 weeks have been investigating this matter and getting up data from the time the different departments got their appropriations from the different legislative and appropriation committees. I think that was probably in the 1900's. We have been looking up legislation which has been enacted since that time, and the changes that have been made at different times as to how penalty mail should be administered. I hope this matter will be left to the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee. Without any undue delay, we hope, we are satisfied that we can bring a bill before you for consideration that will remedy the trouble that the gentleman is trying to remedy by his amendment. We will not delay action; we will take action; we feel that something should be done; but I repeat I urge that to legislate in this way will make the condition infinitely worse than it is at this time. The gentleman has given you the different kinds of mail. It is true that we have three, the franked mail, the penalty, and the free mail to soldiers, but we also have certain foreign arrangements, and this has been done by law, not by rules or regulations of the Post Office Department, and I refer to a law that was passed and approved February 14, 1929, which reads as follows:

> An act to grant freedom of postage in the United States domestic service to the correspondence of the members of the diplomatic corps and consuls of the countries of the Pan American Postal Union stationed in the United States
> Be it enacted, etc., That under such regulations as the Postmaster General shall prescribe correspondence of the members of the diplomatic corps of the countries of the Pan American Postal Union stationed in the United States may be reciprocally transmitted in the domestic mails free of postage, and be entitled to free registration, but without any right to indemnity in case of loss. The same privilege shall be accorded consuls of such countries stationed in the United States, and vice consuls when they are discharging the functions of such consuls, for the exchange of official correspondence among themselves, and for that which they direct to the Government of the United States.
> Approved, February 14, 1929.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not a fact that the large increase indicated in penalty mail has been caused primarily by the increased demand owing to the war?

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. To some extent that is the case. I think to the extent of the different activities of the different departments, but I do say that I think we should pass some legislation by which the departments should be compelled to justify their expenditures in postage. We should not leave the gate open for them to use the mail freely and without restriction. I think the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will bring in some legislation by which we may authorize the Committee on Appropriations to compel the various departments to justify their expenditures for postage.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be defeated, and I say in conclusion that it would be very dangerous to adopt it at this time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is an attempt to save what would be represented by postal revenues, $82,595,000. The propaganda of the bureaucrats has grown and grown for the last 10 years until it has become the habit for the increase to reach at least $10,000,000 in a single year. This does not mean that postage stamps would have to be licked on to the envelopes. These departments can get permits just as any business house does, and the whole thing can be printed right on the envelope just exactly the same as penalty mail envelopes are printed. There is not a bit more work to it. Even now a great many of these departments outside of Washington have to pay postage, and the postage which they pay runs to $1,820,000 in a single year. It simply means that these people would have to come here and justify their needs for postage. That would give the Congress of the United States an opportunity to check the terrific increase and waste that has come.

I have here in my hand 1 month's distribution to a country newspaper. If the country newspaper had printed it, it would have filled the paper for four times as many issues as they had issues in a month.

There were also sent under separate cover enormous quantities of mats already laid out to print, from one single unit in the Government. It is perfectly ridiculous for the Congress to sit here and let this thing go on any longer. Let us stop it. Put this amendment in here and it will stop it. Then the departments will have to come here and justify their needs just like everybody else. There is not any sense laying down on our job and failing to put this amendment in. Let us see to it that the departments quit this ridiculous propaganda stuff.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman any views to express on the congressional mailing privilege? Does the gentleman feel that that should be gone into also?

Mr. TABER. I do. I feel that there should be an allowance to the membership for postage just the same as there should be to the departments.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. It seems there is always somebody in the House who is calling our attention to the fact that third- and fourth-class mail is also subsidized. I wish to remind the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] that if the newspapers were paid for all the advertising and the space which they give free to the Government, to the State, and to the towns and to the schools and to the churches, they would be willing to pay postage.

Mr. TABER. Of course, that is not in this bill. That is another sore that should be corrected, but I am not going into that question now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. No. I have one thing that I want to tell you and I do not want to forget it.

Did you know that the Postmaster General had announced that he would like to see the rate of postage on first-class mail to the ordinary folks back home raised to 4 cents? Now, he is getting ready to take care of the expense of this penalty mail. Are we going to raise that postage to the folks back home to 4 cents so that we can avoid putting these bureaucrats in the departments under control? Personally, I do not believe that this House wants to do that. I believe they want to stop that waste.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, when I find myself in disagreement with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], as I do on this occasion, I almost feel like examining myself to see if there is anything the matter with me. In my close association with him on our subcommittee and from my observation of his stand on public questions in general I have found him so uniformly right that I hesitate to criticize his position on any matter. I think his speech in this Chamber last week on the proposed issue of Federal Reserve bank notes and the credit of the Government was one of the soundest and most patriotic addresses I ever have heard. It was a magnificent contribution to straight thinking in this troubled period.

Time after time the gentleman from Wisconsin has shown that he can and does place patriotism high above partisanship, which is a measure of true statesmanship.

But this proposal to wipe out the free mailing privilege that is enjoyed by the Chief Executive and the various departments, bureaus, and administrative units is too far reaching in its ramifications and implications to be dealt with through the back-door expedient of summarily taking away from these establishments all of the money required to enable them to send out official mail matter. It is too serious a proposal to be dealt with in this off-hand way. There should be a more constructive approach to the problem. It should be taken up and dealt with thoroughly by the proper legislative committee, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I say to you that the able chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Virginia, THOMAS G. BURCH, tells me that this very matter has a place on the agenda of his committee for early consideration and that he himself has prepared and will introduce a bill as the basis for proper legislative action. We can safely leave it to this legislative committee, composed of outstanding Members of the House, to bring in a bill that will create adequate controls over the penalty mail without inviting the disastrous and calamitous repercussions that most certainly would follow the adoption of Mr. KEEFE's amendment today.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. LUDLOW. I have some letters to read and my time is limited; I cannot yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I think the gentleman will want this contribution in his remarks.

Mr. LUDLOW. I cannot refuse the gentleman.

Mr. KEEFE. May I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that on page 51 of the hearings he asked this question of the Postmaster General:

> Mr. LUDLOW. General, do you think it would be a salutary or advisable thing to repeal penalty mail altogether, and have Congress make appropriations for postage directly to the various activities of the Government?
> Mr. WALKER. I would like to give that a little thought. I am frank to say that I think something should be done about it. Whether that would be the best system or not, I would not want to say offhand.

Now——

Mr. LUDLOW. I cannot yield to my friend for a speech.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman recalls asking him that question?

Mr. LUDLOW. I do; yes.

No one appreciates more than I do the fact that curbs should be established on the exercise of the penalty-mail privilege, but whether this should be handled administratively through controls placed by the Bureau of the Budget, or otherwise, I do not know, but in any event it is a problem of such far-reaching consequences that it should be taken up and studied and handled by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and a decision reached after proper hearings and due consideration of all the factors involved.

The proponents of the amendment presently before us to strike out of this bill the money that would pay the cost of the free-mailing privilege for executive establishments have in mind the substitution of a plan later on to make limited appropriations for postage to the various units. Let us consider for a moment how that might affect our military and naval operations, for instance. Suppose that in the midst of carrying on a vital military operation the Army should run out of postage. Surely it would not be expected that they would stop the war until they got another appropriation. The Bureau of Internal Revenue operates under penalty mail, and it is obliged to send out a mountain of forms to cover the tax liability of 8,500,000 taxpayers who are being brought into the taxpaying bracket for the first time. Suppose the Bureau finds itself without postage to contact some millions of taxpayers. Would it not be bad business and would it not work incalculable detriment to our revenue-producing operations?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. LUDLOW. I regret that I cannot.

Free mail is a vital necessity in carrying on the operations of the Selective Service System and the thousands of draft boards throughout the country. Are we going to handicap them by curtailing their necessary and vital mailings? We will if we are not careful.

No sooner had public mention been made of this proposed amendment than the Army and Navy landed on me like a ton of brick.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I cannot yield.

"For Heaven's sake," they said, "do not let this happen." They pointed out that when the war came on they secured the repeal of the O'Mahoney amendment for the reason that the preparation of the quarterly reports under it required the diversion of too much manpower which should be directed toward winning the war. They contended that the O'Mahoney amendment would have been a mere piker, compared with the diversion of manpower that will result, if it becomes necessary during the prosecution of the greatest war of all time, when the life and liberty of all Americans is at stake, to pause and weigh and put stamps on official letters and packages that should be rushed with the utmost speed to points of destination.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUDLOW. It is hard for me to resist my beloved friend.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if during the 4 months between now and the 1st of July when this bill would take effect there would not be plenty of time to appropriate whatever amount of money might be needed by these agencies for postage?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, the War and Navy Departments feel so deeply that the adoption of this amendment would slow down military operations and impede the war effort that they have asked me to express their opposition to it and to state their reasons why they think it should not be adopted. I ask your special attention to two letters I have received, one from Judge Robert P. Patterson, the Under Secretary of War, and the other from James Forrestal, the Under Secretary of the Navy. Judge Patterson's letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE UNDER SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: It is noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 3, 1943, page 543, column 2, that Mr. KEEFE (Republican, Wisconsin) states that he proposes to offer an amendment to the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, 1944, H. R. 1648, limiting and restricting the penalty-mail privilege of the executive departments of the Government.

I wish to take this opportunity to express and explain the objections of the War Department thereto. Due to the limited time available it has been impracticable to complete a thorough investigation of similar previous proposals, and review them here. However, the major and obvious objections are listed below:

1. The material increase in personnel which would be required for the stamping, weighing, and accounting all over the world.

2. The procurement of the great number of stamping and accounting machines, if available at all, would require the use of critical materials, which would seriously interfere with the war effort.

3. The additional space for handling which would be required.

4. The fact that there would be no net financial gain to the Government.

Apparently, the intention is to reduce the volume of mail and printed matter transmitted, on the principle that the necessity for placing postage on each piece and the cost of same would cause more care in avoiding unnecessary or excessive correspondence and literature. This same object can be attained by properly drawn and executed administrative directions.

There are attached hereto, for ready reference, the following enclosures:

1. Extract from the Post Office Department Appropriation Act, 19-0, approved May 6, 1939.

2. Extract from the Deficiency Appropriation Act approved June 30, 1939.

3. Extract from the Second Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1941, approved September 9, 1940.

4. A copy of first endorsement dated May 29, 1939, from the office of the Judge Advocate General to the Adjutant General.

5. Copy of the Annual Report of the Postmaster General, 1941. (Pertinent passages and tables are marked.)

This subject has been highly controversial for many years. Doubtless there is much to be said on both sides of the question. However, in my opinion the time is most inopportune to change a comparatively simple and established method of handling the tremendous volume of military mail for a new method which will require additional personnel and machinery, both of which are already becoming increasingly difficult of procurement.

Sincerely yours,
ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Under Secretary of War.

I now read Mr. Forrestal's letter, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
Chairman of the Subcommittee on Treasury and Post Office Appropriations, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LUDLOW: A report has been received that action is being proposed in Congress to change the existing law concerning the penalty-mail privilege of executive departments of the Government.

A review of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD dated February 3, 1943, column 2, page 543, refers to remarks of Congressman KEEFE, of Wisconsin, who proposes to offer an amendment to appropriation bill, 1944, H. R. 1648, of the Treasury and Post Office Departments, limiting and restricting the penalty-mail privilege of the executive departments of the Government.

Due to the short notice which the Navy Department has had regarding this proposed amendment, it has been impossible to efficiently review the past records and letters on this subject. It is desired, however, to offer immediate objections of the Navy Department to the proposed amendment.

To place in effect such a far-reaching change as that proposed would seriously handicap the present organization of the Navy Department and definitely impede the war effort. It is believed that the solution to the abuse of the penalty-mail privilege lies in correct internal administration of various executive departments rather than a change in the law.

Among the many objections against changing the existing law are the following:

(a) Considerable additional space would be required by the Navy Department, and space at present is at a premium.

(b) No financial gain to the Government would result, and the same effect as far as the Post Office Department funds are concerned could be obtained by transferring funds from the various executive departments to the Post Office Department account.

(c) A considerable increase in civil service and Navy personnel would be required to care for the additional handling of stamping, weighing, and stamps themselves.

(d) There is a serious shortage of post-office equipment. At present we are unable to properly equip our outlying stations. To increase the demands on an already overburdened system of supplies would cause a break-down in our outlying postal supply system. As these supplies are made out of critical war materials, it is doubtful if they could be obtained.

(e) The physical handling of mail would be considerably slowed down by the necessity for weighing and stamping every letter. Mail delays at present are the source of many complaints from Members of Congress, Government agencies, and private citizens. This would be further aggravated by the lack of availability of automatic stamping machines and accounting instruments.

(f) The expense of additional personnel and equipment required to comply with the proposed change would be in excess of the benefit to be derived therefrom.

In view of the above objectionable features, as well as past records in this matter, it is considered that a change in the existing penalty-mail privilege would be highly undesirable, particularly at the present time.

The Navy Department has not, for lack of time, been advised as to the relationship of this report to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,
JAMES FORRESTAL.

There is one other phase of this matter which I think I ought to discuss candidly in order that we may see the whole picture. If we adopt this amendment we will be inviting the biggest barrage against Congress since the memorable flare-up over congressional pensions. From my long association with the fourth estate I happen to know that editorial writers and newspaper columnists—whom many people regard as worse than fifth columnists—have got their fingers on the trigger and are prepared to put this question to Congress:

"You have seen fit to cut off the free-mailing privilege of the Commander in Chief, the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the mothers' allotment checks and the Selective Service System, including the draft boards, and now why should you not go a step further and give up your own free-mailing privilege?"

That is going to be a question that will be hard to answer. It is true that Congress has not abused its franking privilege and many of the bureaus have, but distinctions like that are overlooked when the guns begin to fire on Congress. We should face this with practical realism. It is my sincere belief that any Member of the House who votes for this proposal is voting to take away his own franking privilege and to place his office on a postage-metered basis. All of the considerations above referred to point to the inevitable conclusion that the best thing we can do here today is to vote down this amendment and allow this matter to be taken up by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in a cooler and more deliberate atmosphere.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we cannot reach an agreement as to a limitation of time on this amendment?

I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this question is sufficiently important that we should give it very serious attention. Frankly, I am somewhat surprised that the gentleman from Wisconsin has offered this amendment, because to me it seems to be so out of keeping with the present needs of the various departments of the Government.

I do not believe there is a man on either side of the aisle who would not like to vote to cut down and reduce the sending out by the various departments of a lot of unnecessary propaganda, and if the vote were on whether or not we should reduce the sending out of this propaganda I would vote for the amendment, and I think everybody else would vote for the amendment. But that is not the issue pending before the House at this time. The issue is whether or not the Government departments shall pay postage on the mail which is now being sent out by the Government departments, and that is an entirely different proposition.

This amendment, strictly speaking, would not stop one piece of propaganda. It would just mean that we would pay postage on it. The amendment does not require the reduction of the amount of mail that would be sent out, the thing which may first appear to those of you who have not considered this matter fully.

I know of no better-informed man in the Post Office than Mr. Jess Donaldson, Deputy First Assistant Postmaster General, who has been there for many years. He and many others who have been there longer than Mr. Walker, the present Postmaster General, have discussed this matter before our committee on a number of occasions and I have not heard one well-informed man say that from his experience we should require the departments to pay postage on the mail which they send out. Reduce, of course, the amount of Government mail. Let the House reduce the printing and binding appropriations. Let the House reduce the amount of money that may be spent for the publication and printing of all this stuff. Sure, do that, and it can be done. But when manpower is so precious, when the farmer is crying for help, when the Army and Navy are crying for help, why take the additional manpower, additional machines, additional precious metal to make permit prints or something of that kind on all of this mail that is sent out? There is no reason for it. There is no reason why any man on either side of the aisle should come up here on the basis of partisanship and vote for this amendment at a time when he must know in his heart that it will slow up the war effort.

How can we vote for it on a standing vote or on a roll-call vote when the Under Secretary of War and the Under Secretary of the Navy say, in effect, "For heaven's sake, do not burden us with this when we are trying to win the war in 1943."

Mr. Chairman, it is time to rise above petty politics and differences as between one side of the aisle and the other and come down here and carry on our functions as Representatives of the people in such a way that we may merit the confidence of the people. Let us cut down these publications; yes. It is always in order to offer an amendment reducing items of expenditure for this printing and binding. That should be done, and I will support you. Others will support you in an effort to reduce these expenditures. But let us not go to stamping the mail or using any other kind of contrivance that will take the time and manpower, when that time and manpower should be working every moment in the prosecution of the war, not in the counting of parcels of mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, somebody spoke about the heat of a prosecutor. I think we had something like it in the gentleman from Texas. There are two things which I want to say. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] a while ago. It was not answered. He asked whether or not most of this penalty mail had not been since the war started. That is not the case at all. We would not be discussing it at all today, and the gentleman from Wisconsin would not have brought it up if the most of this had been since the war started. This thing has not been touched in the debate so far as I can recall. In all the set-ups in the Government in the last 10 years it is significant to note in every one of them there was created an information bureau. That was rather singular. Every one of the new set-ups from 1933 on was created with subdivisions involving an information bureau, the whole purpose of which was to think up things to send out to the people in the form of propaganda. There was an effort to make each set-up better than anybody else's. Nobody has referred to that fact. We created propaganda agencies in every bureau and division of a bureau for the last 10 years. Of course it is that which was aimed at when the gentleman asked the question. It was tremendously big before we got into the war.

The gentleman who just left the floor said it would not save a thing. If they have to come to the Appropriations Committee for their postage stamps, does not the gentleman think it is going to save a little, and I ask the gentleman from Texas that question, Do you not think we are going to save a little? I think we are going to save a whole lot, and you know it.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. They now come to this Congress for the money for every bit of propaganda which they print.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. No.

Mr. MAHON. We have been giving them the money for that. Let us quit it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. No. They cannot do it now. They could have gotten it 6 or 8 years ago, but they cannot get it now. We have a new kind of a Congress and we have shown that every day we have been in session.

Mr. KNUTSON. The rubber has been taken out.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Exactly.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think anyone who desires to be fair will admit this is going to save at least several million dollars a year in postage. How much more it will save in not sending out needless propaganda that goes into the wastebasket no one can say.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. It will cut these information bureaus in two.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending at the desk and I would like to have it read before I proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Proposed amendment of Mr. CASE as an amendment to Mr. KEEFE'S amendment: After the words "executive department" in Mr. KEEFE'S amendment, insert the words "legislative."

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, my amendment concerns every Member of this body. The Keefe amendment reads as follows:

No part of the money appropriated in this title shall be expended for the purpose of selecting, sorting, handling, transporting, or delivering free the mail of any officer in any executive department or administrative agency of the Government.

My amendment proposes to insert the word "legislative" after the words "executive department" so that the restriction on free mail will apply to the Congress as well as to the other branches of the Government. It will then read:

Any officer of any executive department, legislative, or administrative agency of the Government.

The amendment is designed to meet the one point in the argument by the gentleman from Indiana that the Congress would lay itself open to a barrage of criticism comparable to that which attended the passage of the so-called pension bill.

My amendment proposes to make it necessary for the legislative branch of the Government to appropriate the funds to carry the mail of the Members of Congress and the legislative agencies of the Government the same as is proposed for the executive branch of the Government.

The matter of the amount will be left to what the surveys and the estimates will show to be necessary, the same as for any agency or department. Adjustments to varying needs can be made on a basis of population and distance to allow for volume and zone requirements. The amendment to the amendment, then, meets one of the two objections to the Keefe amendment.

The other objection the gentleman from Indiana raised related to the war. Time and tonnage in war operations. It was an argument that was dwelt upon at some length in the letters he read and the same argument was stressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON]. The time argument, however, does not really count for much if you analyze what has been done and can be done. We have used stamped envelopes for years. Stamped envelopes can be printed or modifications of stamped envelopes can be developed.

Mr. TABER. The Post Office Department issues permits the numbers of which can be printed right on the envelopes, just as the penalty statement is printed.

Mr. CASE. The gentleman is correct. Therefore, there will not be the additional requirement either of time or of weight of mail to be carried. That matter can be handled as a mere printing proposition.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. In regard to the proposed amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota, I call attention to the fact that when I addressed the Congress upon this subject a few days ago for the first time I gave all the facts and figures with respect to the franked mail, and I indicated at that time that the franking privilege enjoyed by the Members of the legislative branch of the Government cost an average of approximately $1,400 a year each. As far as I personally am concerned, I have no objection to the Appropriations Committee of this House placing upon me as a Member of Congress a reasonable limitation as to the amount of postage I may expend in the course of a year. I feel sure the Members of Congress intend to be realistic on that matter, and I also feel sure that the committee would give us an allowance sufficient for the reasonable use of the mails.

May I also direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that the War and Navy Departments are using the air mail today as never before. Every air-mail letter that is dispatched by the Army or the Navy must bear a stamp that must be bought and paid for. They have no penalty mail privilege for the use of the air mail. That seems to shoot a little bit of a hole in the great argument that has been adduced here. They have until July 1 to come up here and get a liberal allowance for postage. Who will say that the appropriations committees of the Congress will not give the Army or the Navy every dollar they need for postage?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directs this question to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]. The Chair was out of the Chamber temporarily. Did the gentleman from South Dakota offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. CASE. I did, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, aside from the great saving in postage costs, this amendment will further save a tremendous amount of paper now being used by Government departments for purely propaganda purposes.

While we are considering this amendment the Pulp and Paper Division of the W. P. B. is determining a new reduction in the amount of paper that may be consumed by the newspapers and other periodicals of the Nation. This additional reduction is said to be necessary in our war effort. Pulp formerly used in the manufacture of paper is now needed for munitions, containers, and other essential supplies for our fighting forces. Certainly, if our Nation's publishers and other users of all kinds of paper are called upon to reduce their requirements, we in Congress are not amiss in compelling bureaucratic agencies to reduce the amount of paper they are using for purely propaganda purposes, most of which finds its way into waste baskets without so much as being seen.

Although I have been assured by responsible authorities that the anticipated reduction will not work undue hardships upon, or handicap essential services of, the newspapers of the Nation, I have been informed that one division of government—the Office of Civilian Supplies—has been holding out for a straight horizontal cut of 40 percent in the consumption of newsprint from that used in the same period in 1941.

By adopting this amendment this Congress can make sure that Government departments will be forced to eliminate unnecessary and wasteful printing. The time for this Congress to begin to meet the mandate given us by the people last November is now. The argument that it will hamper the Army and Navy in the conduct of this war does not hold. There is nothing to prevent the Army and the Navy, and any other department from coming before the Appropriations Committee between now and July and obtaining the amounts necessary to meet their mailing requirements. When the amounts are appropriated, permits may be granted by the Post Office Department, thus wiping out the argument that extra manpower will be needed for licking stamps.

The time to take action is now. This amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary situation seems to be that the first vote will come on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The amendment to the amendment proposes to include the legislative establishment within the terms of the amendment. When that is disposed of the vote will come on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin relative to the Executive Establishment.

First of all, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota will be voted down. Let us not forget that, after all, the franked mail, as distinguished from the penalty mail, is in the ratio of about 1 to 100. The abuse is not up here, it is at the other end of the Avenue. Do not delude yourselves about it. The abuse is at the other end. Do not kid yourselves about that.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me continue—and do not delude yourself as to whether this abuse springs from the war. It does not. Once we had a genial and distinguished gentleman, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Honorable Ed Taylor, one of the finest men I ever knew. He asked the Budget Bureau to investigate this matter in 1941, applicable to the fiscal year 1941, which began on July 1, 1940. The whole fiscal year had expired, before Pearl Harbor, and at that time they had 2,900 full-time scriveners on the pay roll, getting out all this miscellaneous information, such as speeches, lectures, radio scripts, and other matters. In addition they had 32,000 part-time people on the pay roll preparing lectures, radio scripts, manuscripts, and one thing and another.

That report from the Budget Bureau, not my report, shows they got out 300,000,000 publications in that year before the war, and 283,000,000 of those were not required by law. This abuse has been going on for a long time and do not be fooled as to whether it is dangerous to the war effort. It is a continuing abuse. There are 140 days to go by before this bill becomes law, and in 140 days they can cure some of these abuses. This amendment is designed to stimulate, and expedite a remedy, and it will not be conclusive until the bill has gone through the Senate, has completed conference, and has gone to the White House. In those 140 days to elapse from now, the bureaus ought to do something about this abuse. They have new mountains of stuff. How much did they spend in any single year for all kinds of written material, radio scripts, and lectures? They had $27,700,000 in the fiscal year 1941, and it gets worse now.

Here is the latest issue from the Landis organization, the O. C. D. Eighteen million of those will go into the mail. It is but a beginning of another paper deluge. Let us by our action serve notice now that this ought to be remedied before the end of the fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, during the last campaign the Republican and Democratic candidates for Congress campaigned on an economy platform, and advocated economy in nondefense expenditures. A certain gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HARRY FLOOD BYRD, is well known throughout Ohio. I believe he is a prominent Democrat. He is a leading exponent of economy in government. This is not a partisan issue. It is an issue that Republicans and Democrats can all agree upon. In fact in the last campaign I spoke from a rostrum that was shared by eight other candidates, Democrats and Republicans, and every one of us tried to outdo the other in a plea for economy. Many of us quoted Mr. HARRY FLOOD BYRD in our campaign speeches. Today there is a campaign going on in this country to get 850,713 typewriters allegedly for the armed forces. The plea is made that these typewriters are to be used on warships and overseas.

I checked the figures to find what they are going to do with these typewriters, and I find that they represent in propaganda publicity that these machines are for war purposes. They say that they need 1 for every 750 men in service. If this be true we would have an Army of 334,500,000 soldiers. Of course on the face of it the representation is absurd. On further inquiry we are told they need 446,500 typewriters for the War Department, 199,096 for the Navy Department, 12,600 for the Maritime Commission, and for the Board of Economic Warfare 47,390, for Lend-Lease 40,125, and for regular Government departments 105,000 more typewriters. I am told that we are now spending more money for civil functions than we are for the military functions of the War Department. Since 1937 we have produced two and a half million typewriters in this country. Here is an appeal for a third of them. Let us take some of the typewriters from the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department and every other nondefense department and give them to the War Department and not ask for 105,000 additional typewriters for non-defense departments. One way to do it is to vote for this amendment. Take the typewriters away from the bureaucrats and give them to the boys in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROWE].

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, this is specific legislation, and I think it can be figured dispassionately and definitely upon the ground that it is an attempt to restrict one legislative appropriation. In the first place, I believe all Members of the House are anxious to obtain the same results, namely, to remove from the penalty mail privilege those departments that are exercising an abuse. Something has been said about the time they have to rectify their mistakes. In the first place, I am confident that no Member on either side of the aisle wants to put a blank amendment on appropriations that will hinder or obstruct an executive department or certain bureaus within the Army or the Navy or other departments that may be embarrassed by placing restrictions thereon.

If we are to find those departments that are exercising abuse of this penalty privilege, then it seems to me the whole matter ought to be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in order that proper hearings may be held and the representative heads of the different departments be brought in to show that committee just what their use of the mails is, and that we may then bring in proper recommendation to this body for the enactment of a proper law to eliminate what you have indicated today are abuses and a costly privilege. The package of goods that was shown by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is the objective that we want to reach. We can only do that by ferreting out which are the departments and who are the officials that are issuing such mail.

I do not want to be a party to an amendment that will say to the President of the United States and his department that he shall state in cost what is necessary to carry on the business of the executive. I do not want to say to the Army and the Navy that they may ask the privilege after stating the amount of appropriation necessary for the mailing privilege, or even to hamper or hinder either of those Departments in the war effort. We have 4 months, and in that 4 months I hope that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads can bring this Congress a proper report.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROWE. I yield.

Mr. CASE. One of the Members asked me how Members' mail would be taken care of. That would be taken care of by providing stamps, under my amendment, the same as you get your air-mail stamps now.

Mr. ROWE. To which amendment is the gentleman referring?

Mr. CASE. I am referring to my amendment to the Keefe amendment. If there are any Members who have been abusing the franking privilege by sending out speeches promiscuously for political purposes, those would have to be paid for, of course, in addition to the appropriation that was made for Members themselves.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAGNUSON as a substitute: On page 51, line 14, after the period, add a new section as follows:

"Sec. 204 (a). No part of the money appropriated in this title shall be expended for the purpose of collecting, sorting, handling, transporting, or delivering free the mail of any officer in any executive department or administrative agency of the Government, except that restrictions under this amendment shall not apply to the Department of Navy, the War Department, or the Bureau of Internal Revenue."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed, of course, to the original Keefe amendment. I do not think it is practical. I do not think it will accomplish a great deal, but I am heartily opposed to that portion of the amendment that applies today to the Army, to the Navy, or to the Bureau of Internal Revenue. It may be all well and good for the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from New York to say that this can all be done very simply, but I am telling you that the Army and the Navy and the Bureau of Internal Revenue have enough trouble on their hands now, enough trouble fighting this war, without having to come to Congress every time they want a postage stamp or something on a letterhead. I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] intended it to apply to the military. Maybe he did. But it is just one of those things that adds to the paper work down in the War and Navy Departments. You cannot lick the Japanese or the Germans by paper work or in front of congressional committees. Let us leave the Army and the Navy alone for a while and let them fight this war.

Secondly, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has an amendment. The purpose is good, but just think how impractical it is. Here are the Members of this House, and you will have to dole out a certain portion to every Member—an equal portion. There are Members of this House who represent districts with 200,000 people and others representing districts involving well over 1,000,000 people. How, practically, are you going to dole out stamps equally to the Members? The Members of this House do not abuse their franking privilege. This is an impractical way of proceeding.

The reason I offered my amendment was not because I favor the Keefe amendment, but I do think that if this amendment should pass, there should be a brake so that the Army and the Navy will not have to take thousands of letterheads, throw them in the ashcan, and come up here or go to the Post Office Department to get a stamp, or go before the Appropriations Committee every time an admiral wanted to send a dispatch to Guadalcanal or some place else.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. LUDLOW. I would like to remind the gentleman that some of the other establishments that he has left out of the exceptions in his amendment are just as essential to winning the war as the Army and the Navy. For instance, the Treasury Department has an enormous load of disbursements due to the war; the Maritime Commission has a vast expansion due to the war, and many other activities are similarly affected. The gentleman's amendment would not affect those at all. They would still be badly crippled by the Keefe amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I entirely agree with the gentleman, but I am so fearful that if this does creep into this bill it will be something else that will hamper the War Department and the Navy Department.

Mr. LUDLOW. If you do not want to hamper the War Department or the Navy Department, we had better vote down the Keefe amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think it might be better if he withdrew his amendment and let us have a test vote on the issue without any restriction that would apply under his own amendment? Let us vote on the situation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I want to explain that my purpose, and my only purpose, in offering the amendment is that I am so fearful that if this does creep into the bill, here will be the Navy Department and the War Department with all these troubles on their shoulders—but in view of the promises of the committee that the whole matter will be discussed I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Let the country realize what the full effect of it would be.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my substitute amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] to close the debate.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to yield my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be most unfortunate from a legislative standpoint if any of these amendments were adopted. In the first place, no one has demonstrated where there will be anything like the saving that has been suggested. As I read the hearings, on page 239, the total cost of the penalty mail is about $23,000,000. The only way we could effect any appreciable saving would be if this amendment had the effect of stopping entirely all penalty mail; and this, of course, would not happen. There might possibly be some saving through making it necessary for the different agencies to come to Congress for appropriations, but the savings would not be great.

Let me point out just one or two instances where we would be getting in over our heads by trying to settle this complicated, technical legislative procedure by an amendment on an appropriation bill. In the first place, Congress, which is always subject to attack—it is always open season on Members of Congress—would find the Case amendment very difficult of application. How would one ever apportion postage to Members of Congress? Some Members, as has just been pointed out, have small districts and little mail; other Members have large districts and quantities of mail, legitimate mail that they ought to answer. Others are in the habit of sending out quantities of yearbooks, pamphlets, documents, and mail bag after mail bag full of stuff to their constituents, and speech after speech to their constituents. What a conglomerated, lopsided, cockeyed-looking list would be the list of postage you would get up for Members of Congress; and that is what you are putting into this bill if you adopt this amendment.

Just a few moments ago the gentleman from Indiana read into this RECORD a letter from Bob Patterson, the Assistant Secretary of War. No man will take the floor of this House and call Bob Patterson a crackpot bureaucrat. No man in the administrative service has rendered greater service to his country and greater service to America than the Assistant Secretary of War. He has been fair, square, open, and aboveboard always with the committees of this House; and he is not a new dealer; you cannot accuse him of supporting any particular philosophy. He states that in his judgment an amendment of this kind will slow up the war effort and will not result in any saving. Why? Because he would have to employ additional personnel and would have to get some kind of stamping machinery.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would prefer to go ahead and make my full statement. I have not taken any time so far. If the gentleman will permit I should like to finish my remarks without yielding.

Mr. TABER. A permit would cover the whole thing for all these departments.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; I know a permit would cover the whole thing. Now, what is happening? The Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Veterans' Administration, and the Treasury Department are mailing tons upon tons of vital important mail all over the world, not just in Washington alone; they are not just coming out of the departments here for distribution in this city only, but their mail goes all over the world.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman will yield I would remind the gentleman from New York that there is no such thing as a permit for first-class mail.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further, I have only a minute or two.

Mr. Chairman, should we adopt this amendment we would slow up the war effort; the Secretary of the Navy says so. The Treasury Department is mailing out every day hundreds and thousands of allotments to veterans and their dependents. The Veterans' Administration has important mail that is going out in large quantities. This amendment will not accomplish any saving. I would remind the Members that we are just about to set up a new appropriations subcommittee whose investigators will go into these matters. In addition to that the legislative committee of this House on the Post Office and Post Roads, under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Virginia, my colleague [Mr. BURCH], is going into this matter. He has told us—and we know that when he says a thing he means it and that it will happen—this committee is energetically going into this matter and will bring us substantive legislation whereby we can pass upon it.

So I plead with the committee today not to adopt this amendment in the belief that it will effect a saving of a few dollars, for I do not believe it will save anything. The incorporation of a drastic amendment of this kind on this appropriation bill will tie up the works and, as the War Department and the Navy Department says, will slow up the war effort and cause them great difficulty in sending important mail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered to the amendment by the gentleman from South Dakota to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUDLOW) there were—ayes 157, noes 135.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. LUDLOW and Mr. KEEFE to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 176, noes 139.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 205. This title may be cited as the "Post Office Department Appropriation Act, 1944."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 52, after line 16, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Section 303. No part of any appropriation or authorization in this act shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any persons against whom charges have been brought under the terms of House Resolution 105 where such charges have not been disposed of by action of the House exonerating such person or by enactment into law of a bill or resolution making some other disposition thereof."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against the amendment. I take it the gentleman from Illinois will concede the point of order?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not concede it. I think it is a perfectly proper limitation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call the attention of the Chair on the point of order to the fact that this attempted limitation requires affirmative action, additional duties, on the part of some agency of the House or someone else. For the reasons stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and this additional reason, it seems to me that a point of order lies. It is not strictly a limitation. It is purely legislation. It imposes additional duties and obligations upon someone else to perform, either a committee of the House or the House itself, by separate and distinct legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment constitutes a pure and simple limitation only. It requires no kind of legislative action. It simply relies upon a contingency before any money can be used out of an appropriation bill and for that reason I believe it is a very simple limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

While not identical, of course, with amendments along the same line and of the same general nature offered earlier in the debate, the Chair is of the opinion that this amendment partakes of the nature of those amendments offered earlier.

The Chair is of the opinion that this does not require affirmative action, that it does not get into the realm of affirmative legislation, that it is a limitation, and, as the Chair stated when the other amendments were under consideration, the Congress, having the power to appropriate, would by the same token have the right and the authority to limit the appropriation.

The Chair is constrained to hold that the point is not well taken. It is therefore overruled, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not trespass upon the good grace of the House at this late hour except to say that this is the amendment I alluded to earlier in the afternoon.

When someone has been charged with subversive activities or subversive affiliations and such charges filed with the committee that we created under House Resolution 105 this afternoon, my amendment provides that he cannot be paid out of this appropriation until those charges are disposed of. It does not recite the name of any individual, it is very general in its terms, and I think it meets the difficulty with which the House was confronted in connection with the Pickens case.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Under the provisions of the gentleman's amendment, the American principle that a man is innocent until proven guilty is scrapped for the proposition that he is guilty until he establishes his innocence because a person who has been charged with being guilty of subversive activities will not be paid until the committee has passed upon his case in his favor. If his case is not heard for weeks and weeks or months and months, under the provisions of the gentleman's amendment he will not be paid at all. Is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is exactly what the amendment is designed to do, to see that there is no frustration about these cases. The House by its action indicates that it demands action. I shall, in my humble way, endeavor to bring about such action.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment is wholly inexpedient. In effect, it proposes a course which will inevitably delay these proceedings indefinitely.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The thing that appeals to me about this is that these charges as they are set up in the resolution can be so indefinite and come from so many sources that it is absolutely impossible from the viewpoint of administration to handle a thing of this kind. I would anticipate good faith on the part of the subcommittee the chairman will appoint; in fact, I may say that I am pleased with the majority selections that I understand have been made, and I have tried my best on the minority selections. I do not believe there will be any delay. I do not see how it could work. For that reason I do not see how I could support it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York has very well stated the situation. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Dirksen amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 101, noes 175.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 302. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment, the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BREHM: On page 52, lines 2, 7, and 10, after the word "violence", in lines 2 and 7 strike out the colon and insert "or by any other manner or means whatsoever"; and in line 10, after the word "violence", insert "or by any other manner or means whatsoever."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, at least to my mind, is different in that it is noncontroversial and self-explanatory, which from my observations is the exception rather than the rule.

It simply adds "or by any other manner or means whatsoever."

I maintain that more permanent and lasting damage can be done to our Nation's character, good name, and result in its ultimate overthrow by other means than so-called acts of violence.

It is these subversive activities which I fear more than acts of violence, and it is this type of un-American activities which I hope to take care of by this amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREHM. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. May I ask the gentleman if his amendment would include a prohibition against the overthrow of the Government by the ballot?

Mr. BREHM. If it were by subterfuge, I would say "Yes."

Mr. MOTT. I may say, then, that the gentleman would be running right in the face of the Constitution, because you can do anything by the ballot.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to assure the Members of this House that my amendment was offered in good faith in order to take care of what I consider a serious situation, namely, a preplanned and, I may say, a prearranged plan to take over this Government, not by force and violence but by undermining the confidence of the American people in their Congress, and also by alining class against class and by using every known method, short of violence, to destroy our American way of life as we have learned to know and love it.

I do not fear the forces from without, but I am dreadfully concerned over this subtle force from within that has been ceaselessly at work to rise to power at the expense of the class hatred that has been promulgated in recent years and are even now taking advantage of the situation which has been created due to our involvement in this present war.

This war has afforded the one great opportunity for those who would overthrow our present form of government by subversive activities, the very situation for which they have been waiting. I cannot prove this fact, but from my observations I almost feel safe in saying that they planned it this way. We have been told, regardless of some of the positions in which we have found ourselves, that it had all been planned that way for us, so why am I not safe in saying that perhaps this present war was also planned to give them the opportunity which they so much desired?

I would not for 1 minute want to establish a Gestapo wherein a man would be hauled into court just because in a moment of anger he uttered some statement which might be construed as subversive. No; I am more tolerant than that. But I do maintain that those in our midst who are conniving and plotting and planning to overthrow our Government by means other than force and violence are not doing it in the spirit of a sudden burst of temper and have for the moment lost control. No, Mr. Chairman; they have perfect control and are operating "on the beam" at all times, and are pursuing a course long since mapped out and charted, and I insist that unless we put some penalty clause into the law to properly deal with these navigators of destruction they will ultimately arrive at the port for which their ship is charted. And I assure you that they are not sailing the ship of state on which Americans want to secure passage.

No, Mr. Chairman; they are sailing a pirate craft, and the flag flying at the mast has only one of the colors which we have in the Stars and Stripes, and that color is red, and very dark red.

Perhaps my amendment was too long and too all inclusive. If so, I was perfectly willing to withdraw it; but now having done that, I appeal to some of you, any of you, in this House who are possessed with a legal mind and more years of experience in drafting legislation, to get busy and draft the proper legislation to take care of these rats who are gnawing at the very vitals of our constitutional government.

An error in parliamentary legislation is excusable, but an error which might result in the eventual overthrow of our American form of government is never excusable. Some of you now have the opportunity to show whether it was the wording of the amendment or the principle of the amendment to which objection was raised. If it was the wording, you can easily correct that. If it were the principle involved, then I would like to hear that explained.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have entered into the debate on this bill except for the colloquy I had yesterday in reply to some questions asked of me. I would not have entered into it on this occasion if it were not for the serious import of this amendment. The gentleman who offers the amendment is a new Member, and I know he has offered it in good faith.

Several years ago I was chairman of the special committee that investigated communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and bigotry.

I am the author of the bill that compels foreign propagandists to register in the United States. That came out of my committee. At that time the only legislation against subversive activities was the Conspiracy Act, covering cases where two or more persons conspire to overthrow the Government by force and violence. That meant first that it was necessary to establish a conspiracy, and then to establish an overt act, and so, for all practical purposes, the so-called conspiracy act was a dead letter. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] introduced a bill, and on that bill, while it was on the floor, I offered an amendment making it a crime for anyone to knowingly and willfully advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. I put in the words "knowingly and willfully" deliberately. I did not want the bill to cover some man who was destitute because he could not get work, who was disgruntled and disturbed because every night when he came home and he was asked the question whether he had gotten employment, he had to say "No" and who would wake up in the morning and say, "I don't like this Government" or say something else of an inflammatory nature, so as to cause himself to be arrested and convicted because of what he said. I did not want to cover such a case, because I knew that that man would be emotionally moved. Therefore, I deliberately put the words in the statute, "who knowingly and willfully advocates" the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

Mr. Chairman, we are living in America, thank God. Of course, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BREHM] does not mean it, but the words "or by any other manner or means whatsoever," might make it possible for some man to interpret them as meaning possibly a communicant of this or that church. When we start using loose language in a statute of this kind it may become a very serious matter. We are living in a democracy, and this is not a political question, and that middle aisle means nothing to me or any other man, or should not, when we are dealing with a question of this kind. If we used loose language, we would never know where the end would be.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If this had been a law, how would we ever have gotten rid of the prohibition amendment?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, in making the remarks that I have I do not mean any reflection upon the gentleman from Ohio, a new Member, and I hope that anything I have said will be construed as temperate language. I know that the amendment is offered in good faith by the gentleman from Ohio, but if the gentleman will not withdraw the amendment, I am reluctantly constrained, not as leader, not as a Democratic Member of the House, but as a simple American, to ask that it be defeated. I hope the gentleman will consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to withdraw the amendment, although I may say that in offering it I did so after consulting some of the older Members.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COURTNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1648 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, representing the Committee, we ask a separate vote upon the amendment which nullifies the Silver Purchase Act, and also a separate vote on the amendment providing funds for the penalty mail.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote upon the so-called Pickens amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Pickens amendment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Dirksen amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered, and the Chair cannot entertain such a motion.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then this is going to keep us here all night. Let us vote tomorrow.

Mr. RANKIN. No; let us get rid of it. There is plenty of time.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER as amended by the amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 3, after line 21, insert a new paragraph:

"No part of any money appropriated in this act shall be used directly or indirectly during the fiscal year 1944 for the purchase or procurement of silver under the provisions of the silver purchase acts, namely, the act of June 19, 1934, and the act of July 6, 1939, or for the carrying out of any of the provisions of such silver purchase acts."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITE) there were—ayes 200, noes 104.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah and Mr. WHITE demanded tellers.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-six Members have risen, not a sufficient number and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEEFE: On page 51, line 14, after the period, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 204 (a). No part of the money appropriated in this title shall be expended for the purpose of collecting, sorting, handling, transporting, or delivering free the mail of any officer in any executive department or administrative agency of government."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITE) there were ayes 157 and noes 162.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 204, nays 201, not voting 29, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 13, after line 22, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"No part of any appropriation or authorization in this act shall be used to pay any part of the salary or expenses of any person whose salary or expenses are prohibited from being paid from any appropriation or authorization in any other act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUDLOW) there were—ayes 254, noes 71.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

Mr. RANKIN. I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today on this bill and to include some excerpts from the Attorney General's report, from the law of the House and from the Supreme Court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on two subjects, in one to include a short statement and in another a radio broadcast by John B. Hughes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, the future of the dairy farmers in America appears to be doomed. As a Representative from one of the principal milk producing areas of the United States, I was amazed to read in the morning's papers that the Office of Price Administration had issued an order which restricts milk plants and distributors from paying farmers a higher price in any instance than that received during the month of January. In view of a number of considerations which I will outline, this order seems preposterous. The Dairy Section of the Department of Agriculture has warned us time and again that even under the most favorable conditions, in view of military, lend-lease, and civilian requirements, we face an imminent shortage of some 30,000,000,000 pounds of milk during the calendar year 1943. Now, at this time of unprecedented demand for dairy products, what are some of the obstacles that our dairy farmers must hurdle in face of this price freeze on their product?

First is the question of a labor and machine shortage. During the past 2 years farm workers have left the farm at the rate of over one million per year. To replace these helpers substitute help is out of the question, and the employment of labor-saving machinery is next to impossible, due to the fact that allotments for farm machinery are only about one-third of normal farm purchases.

The second problem is that of increased farm wages and increasing industrial wages against which the farmers must compete. From 1940 to January 1943 the index of farm wage rates has increased from 126 to 232 and the index of hourly earnings of factory workers has increased from 317 in 1940 to 402 in 1942. But this in itself is not enough. There have been instances within the month where the United States Employment Service has actually circularized dairy workers and appealed to their spirit of patriotism to leave their present employment and go into industry at rates ranging from 85 cents to $1 an hour.

A third obstacle to dairy production is the relative price of dairy products and other agricultural commodities which compete for the farmers' feed and available labor. In this I refer specifically to the great agricultural region of the Midwest where dairy and hog production are constantly in competition with one another. During the entire 20-year period of 1922 to 1941, 4½ pounds of live pork were required to equal 1 pound of butterfat in value, while during the past year only slightly more than 3 pounds of pork were required to equal 1 pound of butterfat in value. When we consider that under normal conditions labor costs represent only 10 percent of pork production, while they represent 35 to 50 percent of milk production, in view of the present labor shortage and high cost and the relatively much more favorable hog price, in what direction do you think that the farmers' production efforts will tend and what do you think will become of the Dairy Section's 1943 production goals?

Furthermore, the Dairy Section of the Department of Agriculture has attempted to hold down the cost of dairy products to the consumer by effecting long-needed economies in existing systems of dairy product distribution, particularly fluid milk. With price ceilings at the retail level and with a necessary price payment in order to get production from the dairy farmers, there has been a rather effective pressure on the milk distributors to bring about these needed economies, but what now will happen to this program if farmers' prices are frozen, thereby relieving distributors from pressure in one direction on their margin when their economy program has hardly gotten under way? Certainly they have done little toward reducing the tremendous part of distribution costs that are attributable to labor. In some sections milk drivers are making regularly from five to six thousand dollars per year and unionized milkers are being paid $200 per month, while some plants who have gone on every other day delivery have been forced to keep their full quota of milk drivers on full-time pay roll. Yet, in spite of the fact that the farmer gets only about 43 percent of the fluid milk consumer's dollar, the lid is to be clamped on the price paid to him while his feed and labor costs continue to rise.

In all fairness may we ask for whose benefit is such a program promulgated and what will be its almost immediate effect on the production of dairy products?

Now at a time when farmers are making their yearly production plans, when they are making their decisions as to whether they will retain heifer calves and the poorer producers and old cows, or any cows, or turn them into beef, and at a time when as farmers come into the rush of their spring work they ordinarily are hard put anyway to provide the great amount of labor required for dairy production, will not the effect of this program, in spite of the fact that every drop of milk that can be produced is sorely needed, be to dry up the fountain at its source? The answer is inescapable that dairy production in this country will continue on its downward trend and the result will be a continued forced curtailment of consumption of dairy products. Such a program is neither fair to the farmers nor conducive to effective prosecution of the war. Rather than further restrictions against the farmer, there must be greater inducements for him to increase his production and farm labor must be made available to him. It is altogether wrong that his price should be frozen, his costs allowed to rise, and his source of labor be rapidly drained. This situation is approaching a crisis and must be corrected.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded as voting "No" on the Keefe amendment. I desire to vote "Yea." I did not discover the error until after it had been made.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution from the National Automobile Dealers' Association in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr PLOESER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I spoke following the Casablanca conference and suggested a program I considered very meritorious. Because of its importance, I am repeating once more that suggestion—namely, create dual boards of strategy; one for the Atlantic theater of war and another for the Pacific theater. Only through the medium of such dual boards can all the nations involved in this global war be fully and adequately represented.

The Casablanca conference was particularly noteworthy by reason of the absence at its deliberations of not only the rulers or leading statesmen of both Russia and China but also by the total absence of even military representation. The only explanation which can be given for this absence, if these countries were invited to attend, is the fact that Russia is not at war with Japan and China is not at war with Germany, and so neither country might properly enter into an over-all discussion of full military strategy looking to the conquest of the Axis Powers in both hemispheres.

Yet this obstacle might be quickly overcome by the creation of the dual boards of strategy which I recommended. Then Russia could join Great Britain and the United States in planning the destruction of the Axis forces in the Atlantic hemisphere, while China could join Great Britain and the United States in planning a like destruction of the Axis forces in the Pacific.

The rightful recognition of China in determining offensive strategy is only one of the many features of such a plan. The great benefit of such a recognition would be the tremendous increase in China's prestige amongst the Asiatic nations now overrun by the Japanese. Great though China is, she has nevertheless not been fully recognized as the leader in the Orient, and this lack of recognition has been the source of a flood of Japanese propaganda which has as its theme that they, the Japanese, are fighting a war for the supremacy of the yellow race against the white race which seeks to enslave all oriental countries. There is only one way to disprove this cunning Japanese deceit, and that is to demonstrate its falsity through our prominent recognition of China as a full and equal partner in the Pacific theater of war.

If it is not possible to fight the Japanese on the battle fronts of the Pacific with immediate offensives, that need be no excuse for our failure to wage war against Japan on the propaganda front. Europe and South America are being flooded with broadcasts at all times. Yet no effort is made to use that similar offensive weapon in the Pacific. We do not even get entertainment broadcasts to our own troops in the Pacific, thus completely failing to utilize this valuable means of sustaining the morale of our troops and of counterattacking the propaganda of our enemies. Although radio receiving sets in the Orient are not numerous, yet even a few receiving our messages would aid materially in combating Japanese propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, we give lip service to the importance of the war in the Pacific, the while we ignore totally the severity of its nature. There are those who still seem to believe that when Germany is whipped we can destroy Japan overnight by turning our full might against her. The fact is Japan is right now twice as difficult to defeat as Germany now is, or ever was at the height of her power. Japan will be thrice as hard to conquer the longer we neglect and ignore her.

Although it is not possible at the moment to engage in an offensive against Japan—still we surely can spare a few merchant ships to bring supplies within range of China, and surely we can spare a few more cargo planes to fly these supplies into China. The lend-lease trickle to China must be increased tenfold before it can be of material help, and certainly that small amount could in no way impair operations in the Atlantic.

The consolidation of Japanese gains into a vast empire of continental proportions is advancing more rapidly each day. The development of factories, railroads, highways, and huge supply bases should be hindered as much as possible. If we cannot fight a war of aggression against Japan, let us at least maintain a war of annoyance. Certainly let us not ignore Japan. Every interference to Japanese development which is accomplished today means the saving of billions in the cost of this war tomorrow, but more important it means the saving of tens of thousands of lives of American soldiers tomorrow.

Once more, therefore, I urge the immediate creation of dual boards of strategy, that China may be given due recognition in determining the course of the war in the Pacific. Likewise, I urge every possible increase in the amount of aid being sent into China. These things I urge in order that the Pacific may not become a forgotten war and in order that the Pacific victory may not cost too huge a price in men, materials, and time.

Aid China before it is too late. Recognize China by placing her on the Pacific board of strategy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain newspaper excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE]?

There was no objection.

Mr MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, a very distinguished citizen of my town, Mr. Henry Broderick, has submitted to me what he considers a fair analysis of the so-called Ruml plan. I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Portland Oregonian.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WEISS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from a distinguished farmer of my district, who calls attention to the important problems confronting the farmers of his community and calls upon the Congress to cooperate in bringing about a speedy solution of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOWELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial from Look magazine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Gary Post Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. CELLER and Mr. ELSTON asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I ask if someone on the majority side who has authority and power will tell me when, if ever, we are going to vote on the continuation of the Dies committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can answer that question. The first order of business tomorrow will be the so-called merger bill. The next business on the calendar will be the consideration of the resolution for the extension of the Dies committee. Unless the program is changed, the next business in order will be the consideration of the Smith resolution providing for an investigation.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. LUCE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

AMERICA IN THE POST-WAR AIR WORLD

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, may I take this occasion to thank the people of Fairfield County in Connecticut who elected me to this body? I am sensible of the honor they have paid me and proud of the privilege of serving them. I am particularly grateful to them today for they have given me the opportunity to speak on a most vital question—America's destiny in the air.

There is before this House a resolution to form a permanent standing committee on civil and commercial aviation, domestic and overseas. I know I am not fit by experience in this body to debate the organizational merits of creating such a committee. The jurisdictional jealousies or ambitions, the outside political pressures or necessities which militate either for or against it, are today as much Greek to me as they are to the public. But this I know, that the airplane has been the most dynamic instrument of this war and that the airplane will surely be the most dynamic instrument of the peace. The question of America's place in the present and post-war civilian air world is for this reason the most important question which confronts us today. If we fail to answer it intelligently, although the United Nations will win the war, America can lose the peace. The need for a strong congressional committee made up of the ablest civilian aviation experts in this House is, therefore, urgent and grave.

Often, since I came here, I have heard the charge hurled back and forth across this aisle by each party that the other has failed to clarify America's war or peace aims. This charge is also thrown at the administration, sometimes in good faith, sometimes to make political capital. For my part, I am resigned to facing the fact, with whatever fortitude and patience I can muster, that there is a vast area of specific war and peace aims which can never be clarified, stated or proposed, and certainly not enjoined upon the world, until we know what goes on in the mind of Joseph Stalin. The fixing of territorial boundaries, the stabilization of currencies, the integration of economies, the establishment and tutelage of those democratic European governments with which the United States and Great Britain and most of the United Nations would certainly prefer to deal, even plans for post-war policing and disarmament, are questions which all await the ukase of the master of Moscow and the gallant conqueror of Stalingrad. Not until we know whether we are to meet and confer with iron-hearted Stalin, or like-minded men, on the Vistula, or on the Rhine, or on the Seine, or at the great wall of China, or on the Yellow River, or in Tokyo, can we, or our other allies, realistically plan a post-war world. Let us pity and not condemn Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill that they find themselves, like us, floundering in a sea of uncertainty. Let us try to understand that in such a situation they have no choice but to indulge in monumental generalities and noble catch-alls, like the Atlantic Charter and virtuous platitudes like the Four Freedoms. Indeed, it would be infinitely dangerous, prestige wise, for Great Britain and ourselves to propose specific international settlements today which Stalin might specifically dispose tomorrow. The very proof that the State Department and the administration are facing this melancholy fact is their long, protracted official silence on precise international post-war aims. But hard as peace terms and war aims are for ourselves and the British to see in the Russian penumbra, I do not intend to say that we and our leaders must think nothing. Indeed, it is impossible to do so. Nature abhors a vacuum, even in the heads of statesmen. However irrational, thoughts do rush in. Today it is unfortunate that into many of the bone encased vacuums created by Stalin or by our refusal honestly to face the fact of Stalin in our post-war thinking, there are rushing two extreme ideas: on the one hand, there is a revival of isolationism.

Many people are naturally disgusted, not with the difficulty of wrestling with the gigantic post-war problems we know we must face, but with the impossibility of discovering on what or whose terms we will do the wrestling. It is quite understandable that such naturally outraged people should propose, as the only "realistic solution," that we should wash our hands once again of all Europe's problems the day this war is over, make ourselves as domestically strong as we can, and when the next war comes, just improvise and play it off the cuff, as we did the two previous times. Then there is the other extreme group—the all-out post-war cooperationists. In a noble effort to formulate some master plan and some master economy which will cozily embrace not only our own capitalistic democracy but the British Empire and its colonial system, and Russia and its totalitarian system, the all-out post-war cooperationists have begun to shoot the works, at least verbally, for a bigger and redder and more royal New Deal for the whole world. Nevertheless, even between such extremes as the old isolationists and the New Deal utopians there is a solid area of agreement. Both agree, and all Republicans and Democrats agree, on what America does not expect to get at the peace table. We do not expect and do not want one inch of territory outside our own possessions. We desire neither to grab other people's land nor to dominate any race on earth. We believe that the world believes that in this we are utterly sincere. So that is what we do not want. What do we all agree that we expect to ask at the peace table—all of us on both sides of this aisle? We shall all demand henceforth to be secure from attack. We shall urge, wherever possible, a political climate in other nations, in which liberty may thrive. And I believe we desire at all costs to preserve our American living standards, seeking anxiously and ever to bring those of other nations up to ours, but not ours down to theirs.

To the realization of these minimum peace demands of ours America's position in the post-war air world is the key.

What was America's international air carrier position in 1941 before Pearl Harbor? We all know the answer. It was tops. But for the record, let us note that in October 1941 our American system's, Pan American Airways, route-miles were roughly two and one-half times greater than B. O. A. C.—British Overseas Airways Corporation. We had 99,000 miles of route as against the British system's 39,000. There are no reliable statistics on annual plane miles for the foreign carriers for 1941, so comparison is impossible. However, on a yearly basis, in early 1939, before the outbreak of the war, Pan American was flying more air miles than all the major European countries put together. The European countries were serving almost as many countries and colonies, however; Pan American served 38, B. O. A. C. 31, K. L. M.—the Dutch lines—27, Air France 15.

It needs no argument now to prove that our pre-Pearl Harbor domestic and overseas commercial carriers were crucial factors in our ability militarily to prepare this continent for a successful global war. But for the existent routes and volume of our civilian air operations, both at home and overseas, this war might already have been lost. Four years ago, in January 1939, President Roosevelt said:

> Civil aviation is clearly recognized as the backlog of national defense. * * * The country's welfare in time of peace and its safety in time of war rests on an economically and technically sound air transportation system, both domestic and overseas.

Four years after this war is over that statement will still be true. Transport pilots, mechanics, airport and ground personnel, meteorologists, communications experts, transport planes, messenger aircraft, and all their related production and repair facilities and personnel are now accepted as forming part of a modern country's air power. In times of peace it is impossible to attempt to maintain such personnel and equipment fully trained when not required by actual military service. Thus, an air commerce program complementary to and coordinated with military defense plans is vital for the future.

Yet, what is our civil air-carrier position today, with peace, so we are often told, just around the corner? Part of both our domestic and overseas aviation is still entirely civilian staffed and controlled. But the transport service, being operated by the military, every day is being expanded.

Now I have heard in this House both the advocates of the standing committee for civil aviation and those opposed to it announce repeatedly that the total militarization of our air lines is a vital military necessity. I, along with some perhaps in this House, and many outside of it, feel that this is not true. I wish there were time to give you the most interesting support to my arguments, by reading those advanced by British members of Parliament as late as December 17 last in the House of Commons, when they hotly debated the question of the increasing militarization of their own overseas civilian air system. I say "increasing" because although Great Britain has been at war over 3 years, the British overseas merchant airways structure has continued to operate in many parts of the globe, with civilian personnel, and civilian administration. And today, even in combat zones, B. O. A. C. operates as a purely civilian organization, subject only to military priorities, like all transportation in wartimes.

Furthermore, as you will see, by referring to the debate in Parliament on civil aviation which I have placed in the RECORD, there is the liveliest dispute in progress today about the urgent need, not only of planning ahead, but building up now with equipment and personnel the British overseas airway structure. Fortunately for the British, they, unlike ourselves, have wisely preserved everywhere the skeleton of their commercial carrier routes around the globe. On the very day the shooting stops, the British naturally desire to be in a position to put muscles and flesh on their international airways system. And perhaps even fat in some places—with lend-lease planes. I deeply applaud the wisdom of this policy. I wish it were ours and that there were here in Congress a committee which would see to it that it should be. But, because of the increasing militarization of our carrier systems, it is not. And in a war no one dast sass the general. But it is surely for us here to consider at once, as the patriotic members of the British Parliament are doing now, the ways and means by which we may rehabilitate our overseas civilian airways. Again, I draw your attention to the full account of the debate in Parliament on December 17 on civil aviation, which is now in the Appendix of the RECORD.

It is a document worthy of the minutest study of every Member of this House, for it shows the power, sagacity, and daring of British statesmen, which equally with the lion hearts of her sons, have made and kept the Empire great and strong. It also shows their desire to cooperate with us in the air, a thing they can do happily if they can persuade us shortly of their points of view. Make no mistake. Our farsighted British cousins have already clearly seen the vision of the air world of tomorrow. They have seen that the masters of the air will be the masters of the planet, for as aviation dominates all military effort today, so will it dominate and influence all peacetime effort tomorrow. Perhaps the Russians have seen this too, although we have no way of knowing. Certainly the Chinese know, because I have discussed it with many of them, that when peace comes it will then be too late to plan about America's future role in the air. The shape of all post-war air policy is being beaten out now on the anvil of war. The British, the Russians, the Chinese have searched the face of the heavens. They know what the air world of tomorrow looks like. Do we? Yes, some of us do.

It is a picture that has deeply entered the imagination of almost everyone in this country under 30 years of age. Young America is totally alive to the potentialities of a post-war air world. Today boys in grammar schools and high schools can give you details on air routes, on plane types and performances, both commercial and combat, that would not only amaze you, but leave you bewildered, for while they explained they would seem to be talking in another language. They are. They are talking the language of tomorrow, the language of the air. They do not even think in the same geographical terms that you and I do. For instance, they know that the direct route from Detroit to Tokyo is not west to San Francisco and across the Pacific to Hawaii—but north, over the Pole. You think Bombay and Singapore are south and west of us, as we sit here. Grammar school boys can tell you today that the best way to get to them is to fly north from Chicago, across the polar cap—in 40 flying hours. Incidentally, they never think in land miles, they think in flying hours. They know because they keep up on these things, that Lt. Gen. Hap Arnold flew from Australia to San Francisco in 7 minutes under 36 hours.

They know that, from the heart of the "isolationist" Middle West, which is ironically enough the geographical air hub of America's international post-war air traffic, there is not one important city in the whole world, in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America that cannot be reached by air within 48 hours. These grammar school and high school boys share this vision of the air world with all the pilots and the ground crews of our air force today, the thousands upon thousands of our young pilots, civilian and military, who have already felt the almost divine thrill that comes of man's mastery of the air. To you, and to me, aviation may seem "just another business." To a pilot it generally becomes a way of life, a philosophy. He is not far wrong. He looks at the globe, and he does not see as you and I do, a land-and-water world. He sees an air world. He does not think of the airplane as something that parallels shipping lines, and railroads, and trucking highways. Why should he? He knows such a concept was long ago outmoded, and betrays the user of it today as totally ignorant of the meaning of the air. Try to tell an American pilot who has flown the towering Himalayas, the vast trackless wastes of Tibet, the deserts and jungles of Africa, and who dreams tomorrow of taking part in the great air traffic that will burst across the Polar Cap—that he must be or ever will be "regulated" with reference to railroads and shipping, and he will laugh in your face. There is only one barrier in the use of the airplane, and that barrier is man's own inability to breathe and to keep warm in the stratosphere. This is a technological conquest which is not far off. Our American pilots also know that America, which produced the Wright brothers and Lindbergh and Rickenbacker, and scores upon scores of air pioneers and heroes, has not only the men and the tools, but the technical genius and the industrial capacity—in short, everything it takes—to let American pilots and passengers go everywhere in the world. For the post-war air policy of these hundreds of thousands of young air-minded Americans is quite simple. It is: "We want to fly everywhere. Period."

Now let us consider America's existent international air policy—the policy under which 5 years ago we became the foremost overseas commercial air power in the world, and under which we have gone nearly everywhere. And I know—because I have flown nearly everywhere in this world in the past 3 years with American civil pilots on American civil planes with the American flag painted on them.

What was that policy, specifically? It was the policy of the "sovereignty of the skies." Historically, this policy was adopted by most nations at the Versailles Conference. The principle of international law it recognized was "sovereignty of the skies" over a nation's own territory, and denial to free access to its airports. The principle was laid down, of course, largely for reasons of self-defense, and since that time it has only been dispensed with by any given country to another country or countries, in consideration of reciprocal air services, or other offsetting material economic gain, arrived at by unilateral or bilateral agreement. That was our policy, too, and operating under it and the free enterprise system—civilians of this Nation managed to build up, as we know, the greatest overseas volume of commercial operations, the longest mileage routes, and heaviest passenger lists in the world—with only the British close and very friendly contenders.

So until this hour, the sovereignty-of-the-skies policy has stood us in excellent stead, both commercially and militarily, and—I hope diplomatically.

Is that policy being challenged today? It is. By what? And by whom? It is being challenged by the advocates of a new policy, which we are beginning to hear a great deal about, called the Freedom of the Air. (I refer you again to the debate in Parliament which I have placed in the Appendix. For you will find all the things I discuss today there discussed from a British point of view, which is precisely the point of view they should be discussed from in the House of Commons.)

Now what is freedom of the air? In its ultimate extension by accurate definition, freedom of the air is the internationalization of all air space by international consent. Put into practice, it would mean that the civilian and commercial planes of any nation could fly, with impunity and without question, over the harbors, rivers, and mountains and all the land of any other nation. Freedom of the air, or internationalization of sky-space, would mean precisely that British planes in transit to Sydney from London, from Montreal to Kingston or Trinidad, could fly over the U. S. A. Russian planes, in transit to Mexico via the all-important Polar Cap, could fly over Canada, and the U. S. A. Chinese, Japanese, German, Italian, Dutch planes, or the planes of any other nation which could afford to subsidize air carriers could fly over this country at will. Since the technical possibilities of constructing ever longer-ranged flying cruisers is no longer questioned by anyone, it is likely that all nations would not only be very happy to fly over America, but would be perfectly able to do so.

We already know the danger in war of the enemy airplane to a nation's home front. It is elementary, or should be, that human nature being what it is, and some nations forever greedy and contentious, to grant this free transit, this free look-see to all nations of the world, might be very unwise, from our point of view.

And I doubt that the people of this Nation will countenance any such wholesale abandonment of the "sovereignty of American skies," deeply as we trust our British allies today and tomorrow, and as we may, I hope, trust all our allies tomorrow. But does anyone in America advocate such a course? I ask at this point unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD Appendix an article from the London Times of December 29 last. It is called Post-War Air Lines, and its subtitle is "Right of Innocent Passage," which turns out to be one aspect of Freedom of the Air. This article, written by the London Times correspondent in Washington, claims:

> There is good reason to believe that the United States Government is already seeking an understanding to cover the field of commercial flying after the war.

It then outlines this alleged understanding between our Government and the British, and suggests that our administration is even now negotiating with the British a freedom of the air policy. Can this be possible? One does not like to think that a complete reversal of a country's historic policy, a reversal that must affect profoundly the destiny of our country, the very lives of our children, can be in process of negotiation without any public debate or consideration. And yet we have some proof that such a new policy is in the minds of people in high places in this administration.

I call your attention to a recent article written by the Vice President of the United States, Mr. HENRY WALLACE, which has just appeared in the American magazine for March. It is called What We Will Get Out of the War. Now, in passing, I would like to say that I am a great admirer of some of Mr. WALLACE'S ideas. He has a wholly disarming way of being intermittently inspiring and spasmodically sound, and certainly in his American magazine article there is much that all men of good will must agree to. However, one usually finds that the higher the plane Mr. WALLACE puts his economic arguments upon the lower, it turns out, American living standards will fall. Mr. WALLACE'S article in the American magazine is on a very high plane, indeed. In it he does a great deal of global thinking. But much of what Mr. WALLACE calls his global thinking is, no matter how you slice it, still "globaloney." Mr. WALLACE'S warp of sense and his woof of nonsense is very tricky cloth out of which to cut the pattern of a post-war world.

I give you an example of what I mean from Mr. WALLACE'S article. After much sound and inspired talk about post-war needs, among which he names great global air highways, and an enormously increased international air commerce, Mr. WALLACE makes this statement:

> When this war ends we shall be only at the threshold of the coming air age. Freedom of the Air means to the world of the future what Freedom of the Seas meant to the world in the past.

Well, let us examine this. What did Freedom of the Seas mean to the world of the past? It certainly did not mean international peace. And it is a desire for international peace which, above all, inspires Mr. WALLACE'S plea for Freedom of the Air. As Freedom of the Seas prevented neither World War No. 1 nor No. 2, there is no reason to suppose that Freedom of the Air would prevent World War No. 3.

Now, I realize it is worse than bad taste—it is a cardinal sin in certain New Deal circles—to ask what the freedom of anything has meant, means, or may mean to the welfare of this country.

Nevertheless, I would like to consider exactly what freedom of the seas meant to the United States of America in the world of the past. For freedom of the sea, by Mr. WALLACE'S own definition, meant the internationalization of American ports, as, again by his own definition, freedom of the air means internationalization of American airports and air space. I cast my mind back to a week in 1929, when I lived high up in a hotel whose windows overlooked New York Harbor. What did I see in port? The great, sleek, shiny, queenly ships of the Cunard and White Star Lines, of the French, Italian, German, Dutch, Swedish, and Russian lines. And not only the shiny and beautiful passenger ships with their supercargo space, but swarms upon swarms of little grimy merchant ships of all the powers, great and small, jamming our wharves. And out in San Francisco, from the hill you could see the lovely Canadian Line boats, the slick liners, and multitudinous craft of the Japanese and Russian merchant marine. But where, oh where, in either port, was America's merchant marine? You know the answer as well as I do.

America's merchant marine had languished, and all but died, in the effort to compete, under the policy of freedom of the seas and internationalization of ports, with all the cheap labor, low-operating cost, government-subsidy countries of the world. By 1937 less than 30 percent of our own ocean-going dry-cargo trade was being carried in American bottoms. Outranked in old and new tonnage by Great Britain, Japan, Germany, France, and Italy, our merchant marine was indeed in a sorry state when this World War broke. This was a tragedy, not only for us but for our gallant allies. How many precious British, Dutch, French, Russian, Chinese, Norwegian, and Allied lives have already been lost in this World War No. 2, of which shipping is the bottleneck, because of the insufficiency of our merchant marine, no man can tell.

Freedom of the seas, in neither World War No. 1 nor 2, left us in a position to defend our sea lines effectively. Furthermore, the squeezing out of our merchant marine by heavily subsidized merchant marine lines of other nations was one of the contributing factors to the growth of the isolationist mind in this country. Men who go down to the seas in ships quickly come to learn the ways of the world. And men who go up in the skies in ships today have learned, too. Our pilots returning from all the continents of the world will yearn to keep America out of another world war—and they know how: by keeping America on wings all over the world. And yet, and yet, shall I stand on a plain, say in the heart of the gentleman from Kansas' fair land, in the year 1949, and see at the great central terminus that may be there the air liner Queen Elizabeth put in, the Stalin Iron Cruiser, the Wilhelmina Flying Dutchman, the Flying de Gaulle, the airships of all the nations on earth—perhaps even those of the German and Jap. But shall I scan, like Sister Anne, the skies in vain, searching for the shape of an American Clipper against the clouds? Shall freedom of the air, like freedom of the seas, in the year '49 or '59 have made it impossible not only for America's merchant airway systems to compete in the air against the low-cost countries of the world, but for America to protect her sky lines?

Now, I believe that the shipping analogy can be pressed too far, for reasons that concern the national economy of our British cousins. The British Isles live by export trade. We do not. Therefore, there was and is much reason for admitting to them a greater measure of the world's heavy-cargo shipping trade. The situation in the air is different in this respect and in many others, too. I only draw this freedom of the air and sea analogy since Mr. Wallace himself has seen fit publicly to slice another piece of globaloney off the apparently inexhaustible ration he keeps in his mental larder.

Not even the British among themselves make the case for freedom of the air, a policy which currently they are showing some disposition to urge upon us, in terms of heavy export trade. Rather do they make it in terms of their own national defense, passenger traffic, mail revenue, and rapid cargo, and of their political, moral, and cultural prestige. They know that the transport carrier plane will never surplant for heavy tonnage the railroad and the ship. Nor the short hop mobile truck or bus. They know that a vigorous, far flung civilian air carrier, constantly increasing the volume of operations and route mileage, is the single most persuasive instrument for a national defense policy, and for the social, political, and economic, and above all, moral and spiritual integration and rehabilitation of the post-war world. And this above all they know, and this is what we Americans must all get quickly and clearly in our heads, that when peace comes it will be too late for any great nation to plan for its future role in aviation. The future of every nation in the air today is being given shape inexorably by military and civilian policies now being practiced in the very middle of the war. Great Britain has for many years urged their Government to press for freedom of the air, and internationalization of ports. They have done so because in the view of patriotic Britishers they see the prestige, defense, and commercial advantages which will accrue to them by the resultant increase of their domestic production of planes and their volume of operations, made possible by their comparative wage scales. In the urging of this policy of freedom of the air you may be quite sure many low labor scale nations of the world will follow the British suit. For all, yes all, the cheap labor standard nations of the world will today and tomorrow have much to gain from exercising the freedom of anything we have, whether it be our soil, our harbors, our airports, our air space.

We have seen who is challenging our historic American air policy of sovereignty of the skies. Now, who is defending sovereignty of the skies? Well, until this moment no one in a high place in government has spoken out clearly in its defense, as we know they will, when they understand the importance of it to our Nation, and to the preservation of peace in the post-war world.

Why have they not spoken out yet? Well, it is, no doubt, owing to the confusion and delay that have sometimes prevailed in this administration on clarifying policies important to America's enlightened self-interest. For there is not a shadow of doubt that this country, claiming complete control of its own vast skies, and behaving with decency and dignity like the great creditor nation it is, by cooperating to the utmost with the United Nations to liberalize world air policy, could keep the air supremacy it now has, and take henceforth in the skies that position of enlightened democratic leadership Great Britain held and still holds on the seas. Is there some good and honest reason why we should not do this, other than that it would seem impolite to certain of the other United Nations? Well, make no mistake; I believe that we should maintain our position of international civil air supremacy for the greatest and best of all reasons: Our responsibility to the whole world and to ourselves, to assume democratic political leadership in this hemisphere and cooperate elsewhere with the United Nations in leadership, requires and demands a commensurate civilian air position. I want the people who elected me to know where I stand on this. But I do not mean by civil air supremacy that this country should monopolize the air traffic of the world. We are strong, and not only can we afford to be generous for the peace of the world; we must be. I have every desire to see the British Overseas Airways Corporation shoving us so closely in many regions of the world that there will always be the same cause for friendly rivalry and healthy competition as there is today. And I have every hope that the air commerce of all the United Nations will expand constantly.

Early last month the President appointed an interdepartmental committee which in turn appointed a working committee to study our international air policy, for present and post-war needs. Under the chairmanship of Adolf Berle, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State, are to be found on these committees a real body of American air experts: Robert Lovett, Assistant Secretary of War for Air; Artemus Gates, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air; Wayne Chatfield Taylor; L. Welch Pogue, Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board; Thomas Burke, Chief of the Division of International Communications; William Burden; Lt. Comdr. Malcolm Aldrich; and Col. Harold Harriss.

We eagerly await, and the Nation eagerly awaits, the findings of those committees. Meanwhile, one wishes that Mr. Berle would require them at every meeting to read a paragraph from a magnificent speech delivered in Maryland last week, by his chief, Sumner Welles:

> It can never be made too clear, nor reiterated too often, that the foreign policy of the people of the United States, exactly like their domestic policies, should only be determined from the standpoint of what the American people believe is their real, their practical, self-interest. Our foreign policy must not be—and in the long run never will be—based upon emotional altruism nor sentimental aspiration. What we should all of us be asking ourselves day in and day out is, not only what policies this country should adopt after the war in order to make sure that our security and our best interests are safeguarded, but also what this country of ours could have done in the past in order to prevent, or at least to make less likely, the rise of the conditions which have permitted the outbreak of this great struggle in which we are now engaged.

But, meanwhile, the international aviation score stands: We have been insensibly but steadily losing, not gaining, our commercial air supremacy abroad. Perhaps owing to the overrapid scramble to militarize our air lines. Perhaps owing to the overhasty contracts with Allied high commands, drawn up for lend-lease air material and facilities by our Army officials. Now, nobody can tell the Army or Navy much these days, and when battle fronts or war material are the moot question, nobody should try to. Our pride in the extraordinary job they have so gallantly done in the face of great obstacles is boundless, our confidence in their ability to win this war is overwhelming. But this House, which has at long last found its voice, has the right to use it to tell the Army and Navy this: We beg them to be most careful not to fritter away our best chance of winning the peace—which is post-war civilian, as well as military, control of the air.

Therefore, we should urge most emphatically that the Army and Navy work in closest cooperation with the State Department and the administration in all matters of Allied agreements on landing facilities and lend-lease air material, which may affect our post-war civilian air position. We have invested hundreds of millions of dollars via lend-lease in terminal facilities, communications, weather control, and air-transport craft in foreign countries.

But, as Britain's Under Secretary for Air, Captain Balfour, said in Parliament, "On lines which may have commercial value, all bets are off after this war." Now, while we are vastly more interested in the question of a firm civilian air policy that will allow us to operate commercially the new planes we must blueprint now and build tomorrow than in the ultimate disposition of lend-lease aviation facilities or existent planes, which will be obsolete in a short time anyway, I cannot see why, during the post-war rehabilitation period, our lend-lease transport planes should not be pressed into service, operating for a limited time from bases that our lend-lease money has built, as great mercy fleets under the American flag—flying food and medical supplies, technicians and doctors, and educators and scientists, and men of God to all the beaten, starving, destitute, plague-ridden, soul-hungry peoples of the globe.

In passing, it may be pointed out that the effective and relentless control of the production of Japanese and German aircraft, not only of a combat character, but commercial, plus a control of the volume of these countries' civilian and military air operations and allied communication systems, will for many years to come disarm them. And until that control is relaxed they will stay militarily impotent until man, with his God-given but diabolical mind, invents some other more potent long-range precision instrument of destruction.

If the administration is working behind closed doors with United Nations representatives on the basis of a new air policy, I believe we Americans ought to know it. The time has come for the administration to redefine clearly what it believes our air policy is, or should be. Then it is up to the people to decide that they approve of it, and the State Department to negotiate those policies with all United Nations countries, in a generous manner, a manner consistent with our new and grave responsibility as the world's leading air power. And above all, it is for us here to review laws and make appropriations which will implement this responsibility forcefully. To this end, we must assemble here in this House that able body of men, of aviation-minded experts, who already exist, and allow them relentlessly to apply their full energies, time, and thought to this all-important question.

If in the next few years thousands upon thousands of our young men, who have flown the highest mountains, the deepest rivers, and widest jungles, who have navigated the seven green seas, dyeing them red with their blood; if the great air ground personnel which has sustained them overseas, and the hundreds of thousands employed in our aircraft factories, suddenly find that a new national air policy has robbed them of their professions and jobs—well, my colleagues, we, and this administration, shall answer at the bar of history rather sooner than we expect to young America.

Furthermore, I do not hesitate to say, if out of indifference or lack of foresight, this administration and this Congress espouse the wrong air policy for this Nation, we shall have most efficiently laid the groundwork for America's certain defeat in World War No. 3. Then indeed the air over our heads will be full of the sound of wings—the wings of the chickens coming home to roost, but to roost uncertainly in these steel girders above us, as the bombs of the enemy send them squawking in terror, and us squealing with shame out of this great hall.

To paraphrase the words of our gallant ally and that greatest of patriots, Winston Churchill, who sees, as he should see, nothing inconsistent between fighting a war for democracy and defending the interests of the noble nation which nobly sired him, "We, gentlemen, were not elected by our constituents, on either side of this aisle, to preside over the liquidation of America's best interests, either at home or abroad." The sky's the limit of those interests. The time is now.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I desire to make the observation that the very brilliant and statesmanlike address just delivered by the gentlewoman from Connecticut has been well worth the day that many in the gallery and on the floor have spent in waiting to hear it.

Mrs. LUCE. Thank you so much.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. We are all very glad to hear the observations made by the gentlewoman, but some of us cannot let pass unchallenged some of the statements the gentlewoman made, particularly those that were purely political in the sense that all the blame was placed on the Democratic administration and possibly none on the Republican. The gentlewoman must remember that right after the last war we had a vast amount of tonnage, vast numbers of ships, left riding in our harbors. That was during a Republican administration. Had those administrations taken the proper steps to keep that merchant marine intact, we would have had a worth-while merchant marine today.

Mrs. LUCE. If I may quote a line of verse: "The plow goes once around the pole, while a trained mind routs a righteous soul."

I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. I remind the gentlemen that many of these ships were so poorly constructed that had they not been tied to the docks, they would have sunk.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not a fact that so far as the condition of our merchant marine that is complained of is concerned, some of it was due to the strikes that we had during the past 2 decades?

Mrs. LUCE. And I would like to say that I am not defending the Republican ship construction of the years after the war.

Mr. KNUTSON. It was during the war, it was Democratic construction.

Mrs. LUCE. Or the Democratic construction during the war. I would prefer to stick to the main point of my argument, which will be the most useful one to all of us here, that freedom of the seas did not prevent two world wars, and freedom of the air will not prevent the next world war, and indeed I wish every one would think of this when the freedom of the air is advocated as a panacea for our troubles.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think it is only fair to point out that there are moves on the part of the administration, on the part of the Army ferry, and also on the part of the military today, and that there is in existence a committee which is looking into this matter very carefully.

Mrs. LUCE. I think the gentleman will find tomorrow in the RECORD, because I did not wish to take the time here now, a full description of the interdepartmental committee set up by the President to consider our air policy, and

I have also asked that that committee which is set up in the State Department, I believe, headed by Mr. Adolf Berle, will report in some way to the Nation shortly as to what new air policy they are expecting to advance.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And to Congress?

Mrs. LUCE. And to Congress, if possible.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. LEA. I think in this connection it might be well to recall that under the Civil Aeronautics Act we have American sovereignty of the air.

Mrs. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. LEA. And that policy can be changed only by a treaty ratified by the Senate of the United States, so that whatever secret organization may try to discard that sovereignty——

Mrs. LUCE. Oh, I am fully aware, as the gentleman states, that under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, we still have sovereignty of the skies, but I would like to point out, as I hope I have pointed out, that it is being challenged. My only point, and I hope that all here are aware of the fact, is that it is being challenged.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Connecticut has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAGNUSON). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GALE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

DRIED MILK

Mr. GALE. Mr. Speaker, I am going to deal very briefly with a subject which has always been important, but which now is critical. I am referring to the subject of food, a substance which we, all of us, I am afraid, take more or less for granted until we are deprived of it.

In a land which we have considered to be blessed with plenty, it is shocking to realize that the vast majority of our people have been and still are undernourished, improperly nourished. The effect of this inadequate food on health is borne out by any number of surveys and tests. The Pennsylvania State College says in part after an examination of 2,511 Pennsylvanians:

> Only eight were found free from dental decay and only two uniformly high in all tests. Approximately 60 percent of growing children, it appears, were more than 6 months behind in satisfactory skeletal development. The average diets of children studied were far below levels recommended by the National Research Council in protein, vitamins, and minerals. It becomes apparent that undernutrition in some degree is almost universal.

Robert S. Harris, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, before the American Dietetic Association, October 22, 1942, says:

> Our current nutrition program based on the milk-meat-vegetable theory is really addressed to the upper half of the population. The lower half is economically unable to follow this excellent advice, and this program evades and even intensifies the problem. Until solved, the poor continue as subjects for food charity or remain in a malnourished condition.

The war will not improve this unhappy state—the war and consequent food readjustments are going to make more undernourishment, more disease, more ill health—unless we stop talking about it and do something about it.

Already the Public Health Service has been tirelessly and intelligently plugging a nutrition program, stressing the need for vitamins. Too much credit cannot be given to Dr. Parran and Dr. Wilder, but still the job has only begun. The very practical problem remains, the problem of making available at low cost in money, manpower, and materials, the necessary foods.

At this time during the war, there is the utmost necessity for using a little ingenuity, a little imagination and enterprise in developing new types of food to meet new conditions.

Food habits are very conservative habits and you and I are very reluctant to change the bill of fare of our own free will, but unfortunately in this instance we no longer have a free will. We have got to change whether we want to or not. It is going to take more than talk, it is going to take a lot of work on the part of a good many people in the Government, the Department of Agriculture, the W. P. B., the Department of Health, and even the Army and Navy. It will mean a far-sighted policy, courage, daring, and initiative to, first, make available the new foods and, second, to sell them to our people. But it must be done.

Many of our standard foods will be scarce. Ask any housewife today about butter and meat. But there are many, many new forms and varieties of foods which we must substitute. Let us take up only one, dried milk. Even in our times of greatest prosperity we fell far short of supplying enough fluid milk. It is humanly impossible to supply too much milk for adults as well as growing children. The country has been hungry and still is hungry for this very common food. This is an acknowledged fact and not theory.

Powdered milk requires no change in agricultural production—all we need is just milk, separated milk, now going to waste and to hogs, requiring no great increase in manpower and surprisingly little critical material. At the present moment there are a hundred idle milk dryers and, of the ones being used, few are used to the full 22-hour-a-day capacity.

NOT LIKE THE SYNTHETIC-RUBBER PROGRAM

There can be installed more milk dryers at comparatively little cost in critical materials. In fact, the saving in transportation will far outweigh the critical materials allocated to further dryers.

At a time when there is an acute shortage of all transportation facilities, both rail, motor, and shipping, why devote precious space to shipping water? Fluid milk contains approximately 85 percent liquid which can be squeezed out by the regular drying process. By not following a dehydrating program, beween April 1941 and October 1942, the United States Navy convoyed 245,000 tons over water to Britain in one food alone—17,000,000 cases of evaporated or canned milk.

By dehydrating, all need for exceedingly scarce refrigeration is done away with. Milk can be bought by the housewife once a week, or even once a month, and daily deliveries by truck are unnecessary. Powdered milk is a natural for efficient distribution. Out of one of the most perishable and vital farm products, dried milk becomes one of the most imperishable, but still one of the most vital.

And do not think that because separated milk has been dried it is not a real food. Here is the analysis: In powdered form, protein 34.6 percent; fat, 1.9 percent; carbohydrates, 50.9 percent; calories, 359 per 100 grams, plus, in addition, calcium, minerals, and all of the most important vitamins.

At the present prices, a pound of dried milk is being retailed in Washington for approximately 23 cents a pound. Now please bear in mind that a pound of powdered milk is the equivalent of 5 quarts of fluid milk, healthful, necessary food, available to all dwellers in cities and in fact anywhere else at a price of 4.6 cents a quart.

Throughout the length and breadth of the land, there is a potential supply of separated milk which almost staggers the imagination. Roughly, 1 pound of butter takes cream from 10 quarts of milk. In June 1942 butter production was 203,000,000 pounds and it takes only very simple arithmetic to figure 2,000,000,000 quarts of separated milk for June alone, much of which can be made available for human consumption. In addition to this colossal amount, there are annually approximately a third of a billion quarts of buttermilk and approximately 4,000,000,000 quarts of whey—the byproducts from cheese. While there are no actual figures as to the exact consumption of separated milk, annually 20,000,000,000 quarts disappear from commercial use. It is assumed that this goes down the drain or to hogs and calves instead of to growing children and working adults—20,000,000,000 are a lot of quarts—a lot of food subtracted from what we have not got.

Not a substitute for the Beveridge plan, not a panacea for all ills of mankind, nevertheless a far-sighted dry milk campaign is a step forward. Why? Because it makes available a cheap food, a health food, and a good food, to large numbers of people, otherwise undernourished and handicapped in the bitter struggle for a normal life.

The virtue of powdered milk at the present time is so obvious that perhaps a good many people will ask, "Well, if it is so good, why hasn't something been done about it?" The answer to that one is twofold: First, the reluctance, as I have said before, of people to adopt a new form of food. Any new food is hard to sell, but in times like this when all foods are scarce, this obstacle is secondary in importance.

Second, there has been some opposition on the part of dairy interests in certain milksheds—opposition to a program which would interfere with their particular market for fluid milk. In other words powdered milk can be produced as a butter byproduct at great distances from centers of population and economically transported to such districts from the hinterland. Powdered milk from Minnesota would be available for distribution in cities along the Atlantic coast. This, of course, would obviously interfere with the market on fluid milk produced adjacent to such areas, transported, refrigerated, and delivered daily at twice the cost of powdered milk. Today, however, there is a scarcity of fluid milk; today powder would serve to ease the strain, to supplement rather than compete with fluid milk.

Where powdered milk has been tried, it has been uniformly successful. William Reinhard, manager of the Eastern Cooperative League, the Rochdale Stores in downtown Washington, began to sell dried milk in July 1942 at 4¾ cents a quart. Mr. Reinhard said, "This is like selling gold bricks at a discount."

Not an experiment, not a new theory, powdered milk has been used for years by some individuals and many processors. At the present time 62 percent of the bakers in the United States use it entirely. It has been put into ice cream and into certain packaged goods such as pancake and biscuit flour.

To get down to the practical problem of increasing the use and consumption of this vital commodity, a three-point program is necessary:

First. Raise the price of powdered milk to the farmer and the processor in order to insure greater production. The present 1 cent which the farmer actually gets is an insult. As we all know at the present time there are no free prices in the United States and all important commodities are controlled by the Government. It would be very simple to raise the wholesale price of powdered milk in order to bring in a larger amount of separated milk from the farms and local creameries. There is no stimulant to production like an increase in price. A raise of 50 percent would still make it a very, very cheap food for the consumer.

Second. It is necessary for the Government agencies involved to put on a rather extensive educational campaign to promote the consumption among people who are not accustomed to the new form of the same product which they have always used. The Public Health Service, the Food Administration, and the Department of Agriculture are equipped to do jobs of this sort. They have done it in the past, particularly in regard to vitamins.

Third. It will require the allocation of a certain amount of critical material for the building of new drying plants, but a few hundred tons of steel for dryers will save a few thousand tons of steel in shipping and transportation. From the standpoint of conserving critical metals, it is an exceedingly good investment. Donald Nelson said before the Kilgore committee that the Germans moved a hundred dehydrating plants into Russia and steel is very, very scarce in the Third Reich.

No, there is nothing new about milk—it is the oldest food in the world—likewise there is nothing new about the need for more milk in our national diet, and, lastly, there is nothing new about powdered milk. Under the circumstances of a wartime economy and the general scarcity of essential vitamin food, it is downright criminal not to take full advantage of this opportunity which is ours for the asking—criminal to gamble with food as we face a milk famine. The Department of Agriculture should be going ahead with an aggressive program of milk drying. In fact, this should have been started a year ago and be vigorously under way by this time. The plain truth of the matter is, we either use our ingenuity or we go hungry. Time is shorter than we think.

I am urging the Truman committee and the Tolan committee to investigate the lack of enthusiasm on the part of governmental agencies for a program of such obvious merit.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALE. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I am sure the House appreciates the splendid and informative statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota. Does he not feel that the saving in steel which would ensue by lack of the necessity of building ships needed to carry much of the dairy products across the seas could well be used in building some of the powdered milk devices of which he speaks?

Mr. GALE. That is one of the points I have been making. I feel very strongly about it. I know it could be used to greater advantage.

Mr. MUNDT. I simply want to say I hope you have brought your worth-while paper to the attention of the lease-lend organization, because one of the difficulties before our Committee on Foreign Affairs is the shortage of ships to carry the products so badly needed by our allies in Russia and Britain. I think you have a very worth-while point in your talk.

Mr. GALE. I thank the gentleman.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, under the special circumstances, I think I will ask unanimous consent to have that permission transferred until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix the text of a parliamentary debate, together with an article, which exceeds the prescribed limit. In spite of the fact that the cost will exceed the limit, I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLASON (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), on account of illness.

To Mr. KEARNEY (at the request of Mr. VAN ZANDT), on account of illness.

To Mr. ROWE (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), for the rest of the week, on account of official business.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 12. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the public health by the prevention of certain practices leading to dental disorders; and to prevent the circumvention of certain State or Territorial laws regulating the practice of dentistry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.), pursuant to its order heretofore entered, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 10, 1943, at 11 o'clock a. m.

---

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m., Wednesday, February 10, 1943. Business to be considered: To continue hearing on H. R. 1012, "To amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes."

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization at 10:30 a. m. on Wednesday, February 10, 1943, for consideration of H. R. 1671, and other business.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

The Committee on Public Lands will meet Wednesday, February 10, 1943, at 11 a. m., in room 328, House Office Building, to consider H. R. 837 and H. R. 838 and such other matters as may come before the committee.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

165. A letter from Rear Admiral L. G. Allen, by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the report showing the name, age, legal residence, rank, branch of service, with special qualifications therefor of each person commissioned in the Navy and Marine Corps from November 26, 1942, to January 25, 1943, and in the Coast Guard from December 1, 1942, to February 1, 1943; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

166. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report of the activities of, funds used by, and donations to the regional research laboratories; to the Committee on Agriculture.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 1762. A bill making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 109). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 105. Resolution authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to examine into and determine the fitness of certain Government personnel to continue in their employment; with amendment (Rept. No. 111). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

H. R. 1777. A bill granting a pension to Lou King; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMASON:

H. R. 1778. A bill for the relief of Max Cyrus Jones; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

100. By Mr BARRETT: Memorial of the Twenty-seventh Legislature of the State of Wyoming, asking for amendment of titles I and X of the Social Security Act to provide for grants to the States of 50 percent of State average payments of $40 per month in lieu of an individual basis, to enable the States to pay full budget deficiencies in all grants, so as to allow a more equitable payment to the States of Federal funds in the administration of the Social Security Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

101. Also, memorial of the twenty-seventh Legislature of the State of Wyoming, asking for amendment of titles I, IV, and X of the Social Security Act, as amended, so as to allow intermittent employment without impairment of grants; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

102. By Mr. FULMER: Concurrent resolution submitted by the clerk of the house of representatives of Columbia, S. C., requesting the National Congress not to take further action on House bill 1012 and Senate bill 246 affecting air commerce until the present World War is over and peace established; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

103. By Mr. GWYNNE: Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 9, of the State of Iowa, concerning a proposed amendment to the social-security law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

104. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Petition of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Teeple, of Corsicana, Tex., favoring House Joint Resolution 1; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

105. Also, petition of Mrs. Ben Cocek, of Penelope, Tex., favoring House bill 997, the Pharmacy Corps bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

107. By Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin: Petition of the Wisconsin Canners Association, Madison, Wis.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

108. Also, petition of the Wisconsin Canners Association, Madison, Wis.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

109. Also, petition of the Wisconsin Canners Association, Madison, Wis.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and loving Father, who abideth with us through the day season and art our guardian angel when the consciousness of our existence is lost in sleep, consider and hear us. We own Thy right to every service we can give and we are thankful for Thy divine guidance. Our decisions cannot be wrong if in harmony with Thee, whose teaching brings peace to all who seek and wait. So often the light fades beyond our view. Enable us to be patient in the realization that in human experiences there is no lyric without surprises and no epic without failures.

Almighty God, Thou knowest that we love our country, with its God-created personal rights waving in the cottages of the poor and in the homes of affluence; oh, let every heart bow in deep gratitude for America. Unselfish adherence to the ideals of our beloved Republic will outlive any type of genius when stamped with the "well done" of a just and righteous God. In every station of our citizenship, grant that the narrow walls of self-will and personal aggrandizement may be broken down, never to find a place of assurance in the bosom of a free people. Dear Lord, carry us all up the mount of loyalty where all citizens shall be keyed with unswerving fidelity to our marshaling hosts who are in the throes of tragic war that we may live in the folds of freedom. In the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business in order on today be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the House will very soon be called upon to consider the resolution to continue the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities.

After listening to and reading about all that has been said for and against the continuance of the committee, I felt somewhat constrained to enter the lists against the committee's continuance.

Being no lawyer, I cannot approach the problem with a legal aspect, but I can approach it with the viewpoint of a businessman—an industrialist, if you please.

Its continuance is not good business, particularly at this time. Proper and sufficient returns have not been achieved for the taxpayers' money invested.

First, because the committee's work has not been done in accordance with good committee practice, as pointed out by the able and distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], a member of the committee, last Monday before this House—and every Member should read this address before voting.

Second, because it has caused confusion in the minds of the American people as to its value and as to its efficacy.

And third, because it is bad business practice to attack the principles of a competitor, Stalin, however much you might disagree with him, when you happen to have a profitable business relationship with him. It might destroy the relationship.

Therefore, in business, when you create a certain agency to perform a certain function to achieve certain definite results and those results are not forthcoming, you replace or discharge the agency. So I take the position that this committee, this agency, has not done these things, and, therefore, should be discharged.

I oppose the resolution. I cannot subscribe to its continuance. The people, the taxpayers, have not gotten full value for their money.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from Mr. Telfair Knight, Director of the Division of Training, War Shipping Administration, outlining the training program under the War Shipping Administration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. LANDIS asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from this morning's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article written by Wilbur D. Matson, of McConnelsville, Morgan County, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Implement Rationing Bureau, Fort Wayne, Ind., concerning tractor tires.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CAPT. RICHARD E. MILLER

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, Indiana today mourns the death of a favorite son and air hero of World War No. 2—Capt. Richard E. Miller, of Fort Wayne, a veteran of Jimmie Doolittle's raid on Tokyo, who was killed in action in North Africa on January 22, 1943.

Indiana is proud and saddened over the loss of this heroic bombardier—three times decorated for bravery since the outbreak of war.

The people of America—the free people of all the world—owe a debt of gratitude to Richard E. Miller and to the thousands of young men like him who are fighting and dying in defense of freedom and democracy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent in connection with my remarks regarding Captain Miller to extend in the Appendix of today's RECORD the newspaper account of his service to his country.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in two particulars and also to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. CELLER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] express his contempt for anybody who criticizes this waste of money on the part of the O. W. I. It recently published a magazine filled with Negro pictures. I am told it published many millions of copies of that document at a cost of $84,000. Some say it cost a great deal more. They did not send that magazine to the white people of the country but circulated it among the Negroes.

I had not seen this publication to which the gentleman from New York has just referred, but I do not think we need the O. W. I. to tell the world what the Congress is doing or what the administration is doing or what our boys are doing on Guadalcanal or in North Africa, through a publication that is to be paid for out of the Public Treasury, or else supported by a group of advertisers who want to use an agency of this Government as a vehicle to carry their advertisements to the four corners of the earth.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. I would appreciate the gentleman reading that magazine. It has nothing to do with what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. RANKIN. I know the gentleman from New York will contend that the cost of this publication will be paid by these advertisers. But I submit this Government should not be used as a vehicle for these self-exploiting advertisers.

WALTER WINCHELL

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, article 8 of title XXXIV of the code provides that any officer in the Navy may be punished for scandalous conduct or for a falsehood. Yesterday there was filed a report from the Navy which I shall cause to be printed in the RECORD so you may read it, with reference to the conduct of Walter Winchell.

Among other statements in that report of the Navy is one that on March 17, 1942, confidential orders were issued to Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, assigning him to active duty. This was special duty under the commandant of the third naval district. Those orders were still in effect on February 5, 1943. I assume they were still in effect on the 8th.

Here is what Walter Winchell said over the radio on the 8th:

Hitler is losing ground in Russia, in the air over Germany, and on the sands of Africa. He seems to win only in Congress.

When a lieutenant commander in the Navy states that Hitler is winning only in Congress, I say it is time that the Navy take action under article 8, of title XXXIV of the Code of the United States. The statement that Hitler is winning in Congress is a charge that the Congress is disloyal.

[Here the gavel fell.]

MERGER OF DOMESTIC TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 99, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the Members of the House ought to hear this measure, which I fear is a rather dangerous move toward monopoly of a great public enterprise, so I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? There is an amendment to the rule and it is just technical.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the Members of the House ought to hear all the debate on this proposition. I think it is a measure that is going to permit monopoly of a very dangerous kind and I think the Members ought to be here to hear the debate.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 329 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings, under the call, were dispensed with.

MERGER OF DOMESTIC TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I offer an amendment to the pending resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLARK: On page 1, line 12 after the period, insert a new sentence as follows: "It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill."

And on page 2, line 3, after the word "and", insert "any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute."

And on page 2, line 3, capitalize the "t" in the word "the."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Does that amendment provide for waiving points of order?

Mr. CLARK. No; the amendment to the rule simply authorizes the House to consider the bill reported by the committee as an original bill. The legislation before the committee was a Senate bill and the committee worked out its own bill, which was reported in the nature of an amendment to the Senate bill. This amendment to the rule allows the House to consider that amendment by the committee as an original bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Why not just consider it as an amendment to the Senate bill? Some of us have made some study of the debate of the Senate. You have the Senate bill before you. The bill as reported here shows the committee bill as an amendment. Why not just consider it as an amendment to the Senate bill?

Mr. CLARK. I may say to the gentleman that in the opinion of the Committee on Rules the procedure is a little more liberal by considering the committee bill as an original bill than as an amendment to the Senate bill. This rule leaves it open under the regular rules of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from North Carolina that this is one time I am just a little bit skittish of so-called liberality. I am afraid the liberality goes in the wrong direction.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to discuss the merits of the bill which this resolution makes in order. It authorizes the consolidation of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph Cos. but, as I understand, does not make such consolidation mandatory.

It appeared to the Committee on Rules when this matter was there for consideration that there was no division among the members of the great legislative committee from which this bill comes. In view of the fact that the rule authorizes 2 hours of general debate and also consideration under the 5-minute rule, I do not care to take more time to discuss it now.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this rule comes from the Committee on Rules with a unanimous vote. There was no opposition to it. We hope that after this bill is disposed of by the House it will be possible to bring up the Dies resolution from the Committee on Rules and dispose of that also this afternoon. Having that in mind, I believe it is the wish of the House to take as little time as possible under the rule so that we can proceed with the consideration of this bill and then take up the Dies committee resolution.

All that this rule provides is to make in order the consideration of a bill that permits the merger of the Western Union Telegraph Co. with the Postal Telegraph Co. This proposal has been pending for 5 years or more. It is merely permissive legislation. I am fearful that if the bill does not go through the Government will be obliged to take over the Postal Telegraph Co.

Mr. RANKIN. Why?

Mr. FISH. Because the Postal Telegraph Co. is running in the red about $300,000 a month. It already owes the Government some $9,000,000. Naturally, no private business can continue running in the red to that extent. I am afraid that if this bill does not go through it will mean the first step toward Government ownership, and I am against Government ownership.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky rose.

Mr. FISH. I would rather have this whole question discussed by the committee in charge of the bill. I could answer these questions, but I have allowed myself only 3 minutes in order to expedite action on the rule and consideration on the merger bill and the Dies report today.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman made a statement there, and I think he ought to yield for a question regarding it.

Mr. FISH. I yield for one question.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman indicates that we are trying to "pull" what he would term virtually a bankrupt corporation out of the hole. Has the gentleman observed that the principal stockholders of the two corporations are the same?

Mr. FISH. Yes. I was going further. There are several things about this bill that I do not like. I hope it will be thoroughly aired and discussed by the committee itself.

In the first place, it has come to the attention of most of us that there has been a large stock speculation in the stock of Postal Telegraph as a result of the action of Congress, and the price of the stock has risen from 9 to 19. The stock is in the hands very largely of certain banking houses and corporations in New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Another thing I do not like in this bill, and I hope it will be thoroughly discussed, is the fact that when we act we are, of course, creating a monopoly. In creating this monopoly by an act of Congress we are at the same time doing away with the 40-percent preference rate the Government has been receiving on its telegrams. I do not see any reason why we should wipe out this $1,000,000 a year saving if by act of Congress we create this monopoly and consolidate the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph into one company. That is a matter I should like to hear the gentleman from Mississippi and others discuss when the bill is being debated.

Mr. RANKIN rose.

Mr. FISH. But not now.

Mr. RANKIN. Let us have it now. Let us not cover up these owners of watered stock. Why not bring this whole question into the open and expose it now?

Mr. FISH. I am against this alleged speculation in Postal Telegraph stock. If anybody knows the facts, I hope they will be brought out. I rang up the Securities and Exchange Commission, but it did not give me any definite information. However, the gentleman who spoke to me said this stock had apparently been manipulated since the Congress began the consideration of this merger bill. I hope that will all be brought out and discussed openly and freely. The Congress is entitled to all available information on all phases of the bill.

In the meanwhile there is no opposition that I know of to the rule, and I have no further requests for time on this side.

I expect to vote for the bill because I do not want to take any chances with the possibility or probability of Government ownership.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some time in opposition to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. RANKIN. It seems to me there is a great hurry to get this amendment through.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 132, noes 3.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 217 Members on the floor. The Chair counts himself, which makes 218, a quorum.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the House Naval Affairs Committee to ask unanimous consent that that committee may sit during the sessions of the House during this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MERGER OF POSTAL TELEGRAPH AND WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANIES

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 158, with Mr. BARDEN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the question may be asked why the necessity for the bill which is now before the House for consideration, providing for amendments to the Communications Act of 1934 as amended to permit the consolidation and merger of the domestic telegraph carriers and for other purposes.

As everyone knows, there are two telegraph companies in the United States at the present time. One is the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the other the Postal Telegraph, Inc., and its subsidiary companies.

As already stated the object of this bill is to give permission under the law for the consolidation and merger of these telegraph carriers. The Western Union is by far the larger of the two companies and is solvent. The Postal Telegraph is insolvent and has been kept going for quite a while now by loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, amounting to some $300,000 per month, until the total indebtedness of the Postal Co. to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is approximately $9,000,000 or more. To my mind, it is doubtful that the Postal Co. could be operated without a loss even if it were reorganized again. For the last 13 years, or since the year 1929, it has been operated with a substantial deficit. The annual deficits for these years are as follows:

|---|---|
| 1930 | $2,182,800 |
| 1931 | 3,725,000 |
| 1932 | 3,268,000 |
| 1933 | 2,864,300 |
| 1934 | 2,521,400 |
| 1935 | 1,759,700 |
| 1936 | 1,372,800 |
| 1937 | 3,509,900 |
| 1938 | 4,042,500 |
| 1939 | 4,099,700 |
| 1940 | 3,024,600 |
| 1941 | 3,037,900 |
| For first 10 months of 1942 | 3,604,500 |

Mr. Chairman, in considering the telegraph merger bill, the question naturally arises in the minds of the Members of the House as to why the necessity for this bill. There is only one answer to this, and that is, on account of the financial condition of Postal Telegraph, Inc., it is necessary to take this step.

Hearings have been held three times before the Senate committees, and one hearing has been held before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. The War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of State, the Department of Labor, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Board of War Communications are all unanimously in favor of legislation to provide for the merger.

A brief history of Postal Telegraph, Inc., is as follows:

The Postal land-line system was organized about 1884. In 1928 the Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation was formed to hold control of the Mackay companies, which had previously acquired Postal land lines and Commercial Cables, and was itself controlled in turn by International Telephone & Telegraph Co. After reorganization in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. ceased to have any financial interest in it. The Postal land-line system emerged on February 1, 1940, as a separate entity known as Postal Telegraph, Inc. This entity comprises 35 Postal Telegraph companies incorporated in the various States, and the Postal sales organization engaged in the electric-clock business. The outstanding securities of Postal Telegraph, Inc., are 256,769.9 shares of preferred stock of no par value, and 1,027,079.6 shares of common stock, $1 par value. There are no bonds and the principal liabilities, according to my latest information, consists of the debt to the R. F. C. of $9,000,000, current liabilities of a little over $4,000,000, and an accrued actuarial pension and disability liability to its employees in excess of $7,000,000. Postal Telegraph, Inc., has never paid a dividend.

As I have stated, the Postal Telegraph Co. competes with the Western Union Telegraph Co. and also with the written and oral services of the telephone companies, the telegraph services of the domestic radio companies, and with the air mail overnight business. In many instances, there is a wasteful duplication between these two companies. The latest report filed with the Federal Communications Commission for the first 10 months of 1942 shows that Western Union handled 84.4 percent and Postal only 15.6 percent of the combined business.

It might interest you as to the differences in the two companies as to operation, mileage, employees, and so forth. The Western Union employs about 53,000 persons, and the Postal Co. about 15,000. On December 31, 1941, the Western Union pole mileage in the United States was 209,527, while Postal's was 31,700. Western Union has 19,025 offices while Postal has 4,033. It is true that Postal reaches a few hundred smaller places in the United States which are not reached by Western Union, but on the other hand, it is equally true that the Western Union reaches thousands of places in the United States where Postal has no office. It might be well said that Western Union gave far more complete coverage in the places served by both companies.

You will no doubt be interested in a brief comparative statement as to the financial condition of both companies. Western Union has only one kind of stock outstanding; that is, 1,045,009 shares of common stock at the par value of $100. It has no important debt maturity until 1950, when $20,000,000 of its funding and real-estate mortgage bonds will become due. A little more than a year later, a further bond issue of $25,000,000 will become due and payable. Then, on March 1, 1960, the only other large or sizeable bond issue outstanding, amounting to $35,000,000, will become due and payable.

As I have already stated, Postal has operated each year since 1929 with a deficit. On the other hand, Western Union has operated at a profit, except in 1932 and 1938. For the first 10 months of 1942 the Western Union land-line gross revenues were $100,770,345, while the Postal gross revenues were $18,676,877—I omitted cable revenues amounting to $7,262,021 from the Western Union revenues for the reason that Postal has no cable properties—for the period of the 10 months of 1942 Western Union operated at a profit of $6,578,500 but Postal operated at a loss of $3,604,549, in spite of the large increase in telegraphic revenues on account of the war.

Every Member of the House, even as every member of the committee, can readily see the reason why it is necessary to pass legislation permitting a merger if it can be agreed upon. So what can be done in this situation? Would it be good business for the Federal Government to continue through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advance $300,000 or more each month to carry the deficit for the Postal Co.? This, of course, could be done, or there is the alternative of letting the Postal Co. fold up and attempt to reorganize it. There is a third plan that some wanted and that was for the Government to take over Postal—but I am firmly convinced that this House and this Congress does not want, and will not vote for any bill which will permit the Federal Government to operate either of these telegraph companies, or both. The Postal Co. must be kept operating, especially in this present emergency, for the public and the Government.

There is another reason which may have been overlooked by some as to why this merger should take place, and that is, to safeguard the rights, or to aid the employees of Postal. You will ask what might be done to safeguard these employees, their jobs, and the retirement or pension fund. This question was given serious consideration by the Federal Communications Commission, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House, and I believe that I am safe in saying that all have arrived at the conclusion that the best means to provide for the safeguarding of the employees and to give the Government and the public the necessary service is to permit a voluntary merger. That is, if it is possible to do so, to let the solvent company acquire the Postal. In the bill placing the telegraph companies under the Federal Communications Commission in 1935, it is my recollection that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House inserted a provision permitting the merger of the telegraph companies. This passed the House and was stricken out in conference. The Congress could have possibly been saved all this if this had been permitted to pass back then.

The merger, if it takes place, of the Western Union and Postal companies would terminate wasteful competition. It is my belief that in the end it will give better service.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce studied this question last year and hearings were held. The Senate also passed S. 158 in January. Your committee struck out all after the enacting clause and brought in a different bill in many respects. Both bills are permissive. No company is obliged to merge or consolidate under them. If a merger does take place, it is known by all that only one company in the domestic telegraph field is interested in acquiring the Postal Co. and that is the Western Union.

As I have stated, there are quite a number of differences between the Senate bill and the House bill, and your committee feels that the House bill will more nearly meet the situation and does not impose such terms and conditions upon the merged company as would make it impossible of merging.

This brings me to a more or less detailed explanation of the bill recommended by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. This bill authorizes mergers or consolidations of domestic telegraph properties, facilities, or operations but does not permit the consolidation of domestic and international telegraph properties, facilities, or operations, or the merger of telephone and telegraph companies. It provides that whenever domestic telegraph carriers seek authority for consolidation they shall submit an application to the Federal Communications Commission. The Commission shall order a public hearing, shall give reasonable notice thereof in writing to the Governor of each of the States in which any of the physical property involved is situated, to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of State, and to such other persons as the Commission may deem advisable. If after such hearing the Commission find that subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed transaction is authorized, and conforms to all the applicable provisions of the bill, and is in the public interest, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the consolidation or merger. Moreover, in finding whether any proposed transaction is in the public interest, the Commission is required to give due consideration, among other things, to the soundness of the plan and the corporate and financial structure of the consolidated carrier. The bill prohibits any consolidation or merger if as a result more than one-fifth of the capital stock is owned or controlled or voted directly or indirectly by any alien, or the representative of an alien, by any foreign government or representative thereof, by any corporation organized under the laws of any foreign government, or by any corporation of which any officer or director is an alien. It also provides for the equitable distribution of international telegraph traffic between the several international telegraph carriers, and the telegraph carriers in Canada, Mexico, and Newfoundland. It contains labor protective provisions which are modeled substantially on the labor protective provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act.

The labor protective clauses provide that in its order of approval the Commission shall include terms and conditions providing that during the period of 4 years from the date of such approval such consolidation or merger will not result in the employees of the carriers which are parties to the consolidation being in a worse position with respect to their compensation or character of employment, except that the protection so accorded shall not be required to continue for a longer period than the period during which such employee was in the employ of such carrier or carriers prior to the date of such approval. In other words, an employee who has been in the employ of any carrier which is a party to the consolidation for 4 or more years prior to the date of the consolidation is approved, must not be discharged as a result of the consolidation for 4 years thereafter, and any employee who had been so employed for a period less than 4 years shall be similarly protected for a period equal to the period of his prior employment. The object of these labor clauses is to protect the employees against the effects of consolidation or merger. They do not mean that every employee must continue to be employed for the periods provided, under any and all circumstances.

The bill also gives certain specific protections not required in the case of consolidations under the Interstate Commerce Act, as follows:

The bill gives a preferential hiring status to any employee who is discharged by the consolidated carrier.

I may call to the attention of the House at this point that when we passed what is known as the Transportation Act of 1940 the Congress then established a basis for abandonment or mergers of the rail carriers, and this is patterned, as I have stated, to a great extent after the provisions of that act, which were acceptable to all.

It is recognized that all employees in the consolidation of companies operating on a Nation-wide basis could not be given employment at the very places where they had worked before the consolidation. Therefore, the bill provides for the transfer of employees to other places but requires the consolidated carrier, when such transfers are made, to pay the employee in addition to his regular compensation, the actual traveling expenses of his family and himself, including the cost of packing, crating, draying, and transporting his household goods and personal effects.

Another provision is designed to place the employees of the telegraph carrier acquired in as favorable a position with respect to pensions as the employees of the acquiring carrier. Let me give an illustration: The pension rights of the Postal Telegraph employees today are in serious jeopardy because of the financial condition of that company. If Western Union should acquire the Postal Telegraph under this bill, it would be required to apply the Western Union pension plan to the Postal employees and to credit such employees thereunder with their Postal Telegraph service, so that any Postal employee employed by the Western Union after merger would have exactly the same Western Union pension rights that he would have had if he had been employed by Western Union all the time he was employed by Postal.

The bill, also, provides that any employee who since August 27, 1940, has left a position, other than a temporary position, to enter military or naval service, shall be considered to have been in the employ of the carrier during the time he is in such service, and upon making application for employment with the consolidated carrier within 40 days after he is relieved from military or naval service under honorable conditions, shall be employed by the consolidated carrier and entitled to the benefits to which he would have been entitled if he had been employed by such carrier during all such period of military or naval service.

Another paragraph of the bill provides that no employee of any carrier shall, without his consent, have his compensation reduced, or be discharged or furloughed, in contemplation of merger or consolidation during the 6-month period immediately preceding the date of approval of such consolidation.

The bill also provides that all employees shall retain the rights provided by any collective-bargaining agreement in force upon the date of approval of such consolidation until such agreement is terminated, and, finally, provides that for the purposes of enforcement or protection of rights, privileges, and immunities, the employees of the consolidated carrier shall be entitled to the same remedies as are provided by the National Labor Relations Act in the case of employees covered by that act, and that the National Labor Relations Board and the courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction and power to enforce and protect such rights, privileges, and immunities.

Finally, the labor protective provisions do not apply to any employee whose compensation is at the rate of more than $5,000 per year.

The bill also contains certain amendments to the Communications Act of 1934 which apply to all the carriers subject to that act.

The last provision of the bill corrects an injustice that has existed for some time. It permits the telegraph carriers to charge regular rates for Government telegraph service just as the telephone companies charge regular rates for Government telephone calls.

The bill as amended by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee takes into consideration all the interests, namely first, public service; second, the Government, particularly during wartime; third, postal employees; and, fourth, Western Union employees and stockholders. All these four interests are, in the opinion of the committee, adequately protected in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman stated in his opening remarks that the Western Union had had no preferred stock, and that it was all common stock.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Valued at $104,000,000; that is, 1,049,000 shares at $100 each. What is the common stock of the Postal?

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the House will indulge me, I can give the whole financial set-up of the Postal. As the memorandum of the Federal Communications Commission brought out, the common and preferred stock of Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation were wiped out in the reorganization proceeding. The book value of the common and preferred stock wiped out at that time was $55,000,000. The present security holders of Postal Telegraph, Inc., received their preferred and common shares in exchange for their investment in the bonds of Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation. For each $1,000 bond they received the following securities with the market values as indicated:

|---|---|
| Present market value: | |
| Cash | $35.00 |
| 5 shares Postal Telegraph, Inc., preferred, 19½ | 97.50 |
| 20 shares Postal Telegraph, Inc., common, 1¼ | 25.00 |
| $160 principal amount income debentures of Commercial Mackay Corporation, 63¾ | 102.00 |
| $20 principal amount income debentures, series B, of All America Corporation, $0.90 | 18.00 |
| 20 shares common stock of American Cable & Radio Corporation, 4⅛ | 82.50 |
| Total present market value | 360.0 |

Instead of the primary purpose of the reorganization and the proposed merger being to pay money to speculators, the effect of the plan if present market prices were received by bondholders would be that each holder who had put in $1,000 for bonds will have received a recovery of $360, or approximately one-third of the original investment. A recent study of the stockholders' lists indicate that there are approximately 5,000 holders of Postal preferred and common stock. Of the 5,000 present holders, 3,500 of them were owners of bonds and received their stock in the reorganization so that 70 percent of the present security holders are former bondholders. Since the bondholders received 5 different kinds of securities, it is only logical that some of them should have decided to sell and recover in cash some of their former investment.

Mr. RANKIN. So it seems in that reorganization they attempted to bail out the preferred stockholders.

Mr. BULWINKLE. When that reorganization came in 1940, it was before Judge Cox in the southern district of New York, and at that time going on for 5 years, and on the reorganization plan Judge Cox called in the Securities and Exchange Commission, which he did not have to do, to pass on the question of whether it was all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if those of us who are opposed to this measure are not going to be given some time. This is one of the most important bills before the Congress, and we ought not to have a unilateral trial of the case. Those of us who are conscientiously opposed to it ought to be given adequate time.

The CHAIRMAN. The House provided for the division of time, and it is to be divided 1 hour on the majority side and 1 hour on the minority, controlled by the majority and the minority. The gentleman would have to get his time from either the minority or the majority side.

Mr. RANKIN. I have been here for an hour and a half.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I have been here for an hour and a half and the gentleman never requested that I yield him any time. This is the first time that I have heard that he wanted any time.

Mr. RANKIN. But the gentleman knows that I am opposed to the bill, and I have been here since the House met. I ask the gentleman now to yield me some time.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the minority side yield me 5 additional minutes?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes' time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to the passage of this measure. When you get right down to the bottom of it you will find, with all deference to the committee, that the real result will be to bail out a lot of big preferred stockholders, or bondholders.

The trouble with the Postal Telegraph Co. is that, like a great many other corporations, it has been expanding at the top—"mushrooming"—and in that way piling up obligations into millions and millions of dollars that it now asks you to bail out at the expense of the people you represent, because that is where this money will come from.

If you will take the list of the principal stockholders, which I hope to place in the RECORD, you will find there are a lot of big financial interests in New York that are engaged in handling the watered stock of practically every big monopoly in America. There has never been a time when monopolies were striving harder, under the cloak of patriotism, to entrench themselves and strengthen their hold on the American people than they are today.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] said they owe the United States Government $9,000,000. Then we are supposed to have a first mortgage. We should come ahead of these bondholding, watered-stock-holding speculators who are to be bailed out in order that we may ostensibly get what we have advanced this insolvent concern.

This will eliminate competition altogether in the telegraph business. Do not misunderstand it. This creates a fixed monopoly of the most dangerous kind from which we will not be able to extricate ourselves unless you do follow the trend that is suggested in the threat here of Government ownership. Now, I am not for the Government owning the telegraph business, but I am for the Government regulating it and seeing that it charges reasonable rates, which neither one of them does now.

Of all times, when business is booming as never before, I submit this is no time to come here and ask Congress to bail out this enterprise, instead of permitting it to go through the courts and wring the water out of its stock, wring the water out of its investments, wring the water out of its loans. This is no time to pass legislation of this kind.

I made the same argument when you undertook to merge the telephone companies. I have made the same fight against the big power interests that are today sapping from the people you represent $1,000,000,000 a year in overcharges for their electric lights and power.

I want to make just one comparison, since my time is limited, and there seems to be such a hurry. These gentlemen who ran out on the Dies committee yesterday seem to be in such a hurry to recreate it, I hope they do not merely "keep the word of promise to our ear and break it to the hope of the people" of this country.

I want to show you what the telephone monopoly does now. I have a telephone in my apartment just across the street in a building in which there are 100 telephones or more. I pay a flat rate of $4.20 a month, whether I ever lift the receiver or not. I pay more for my telephone than I pay for my electric bill, even here in Washington. I pay more for my telephone than I pay for the gas with which we cook our meals. Where I live, in northeastern Mississippi, where we have squeezed the water out of the power companies' investments in the lines and in the distribution systems, where we are now paying wholesale twice as much for the same power as the power company was paying 10 years ago, we have reduced the retail rates to the residential electric consumers to less than one-third and in some instances to one-tenth of what they were at that time.

I can take that $4.20 a month I pay for my phone and go there and run every light in my house. I can run my radio, the vacuum cleaner, if I have one, and if I live outside of the reach of the waterworks I can run my water pump, my washing machine, my electric stove, and my refrigerator for $4.20 a month.

You bolstered the telephone monopoly and killed the only competition we had. Now you propose to do the same thing with this telegraph company in time of war when its business is booming.

I note the sop you throw out to the laboring people connected with these two enterprises. They do not want this monopoly.

Certain influences tried to keep Benjamin Franklin from establishing our Postal System. If the Postal System today were owned by the Postal Telegraph Co. and the Western Union, which is dominated by some big stockholders at the top, it would cost you 25 cents to send a postal card from Washington to Baltimore. It would cost you $1.75 to send a postal card from here to Omaha, Nebr. It would cost me at least a dollar to send a postal card from here to my home in Mississippi.

Yet here we find that instead of curbing that monopoly, squeezing the water out of the stocks of both of them and bringing their rates down to within a reasonable reach, you propose to perpetuate the monopoly, to bail out the owners of this watered stock and to see that they get theirs and unload the burden on the people you represent, without the slightest hope of reducing the rates in the least.

Yesterday you swung toward communism, today you perpetuate monopoly, and then wonder why the American people criticize Congress.

It will probably be done by about the same roll call, or almost, I am afraid, and maybe gain a larger majority for this than there was for the other.

Today, when our boys throughout the world are fighting the battles of this Republic, the very influences in a great many instances that opposed raising their base pay to a meager $50 a month bring this pressure to bear on Congress to bail out this great enterprise with all its watered stock and all its inflated loans.

You will find that, if you get right down to the bottom of it, that certain monopolies are largely responsible for our not having any rubber in this country; you will find that the same monopoly that is using boats that would bring this country all the coffee it needs is bringing manganese from a mine in South America when we could easily mine several times that amount of manganese in the United States.

Many of us do not understand these questions because we have not gone into them, but when this one comes up, an open-and-shut case, with the record before us of a company that is concealing the value of its preferred stock—there is where the water is—you propose to bail it out by the passage of this bill. One of the most distinguished men on my side of the House in the other body admitted virtually that that would be the result of the bill. Go back and read the debate.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to fostering monopoly at the expense of the American people; I am opposed to bailing out the owners of watered stock whether it be in a power company, a telephone company, or a telegraph company, and I for that reason propose to vote against this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 32 minutes exclusive of the time yielded to the gentleman from New York.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] is recognized.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I have been following closely for the past year and a half proposals to bail out the corporations engaged in telegraphic communications. This bill—S. 158—seeks to accomplish this purpose.

We have heard a lot of talk about telegraph corporations being in bad shape and the necessity for merger legislation to get them out of a financial hole. But I find that the sponsors of merger have ignored the only important question involved—its effect on the war effort. Great concern has been shown for the interests of the stockholders, but no examination was given to the effects of abandonment of facilities, for instance, during wartime.

The proponents of this legislation, in their haste to get the merger bill passed, have held no hearings on it, on the ground that a year ago, when a similar bill was proposed, they heard all interested parties. Since that time, however, a bottleneck has been developing in the industry, which is exceedingly harmful to the war. But the committee in charge of this legislation pay it no heed.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I know the gentleman is always anxious to be fair in any statement he makes. He is mistaken, however, when he states that hearings were held a year ago. There were hearings during July of 1942, this past July.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. But since then the committee has had no hearings on this bill; is not that correct? There have been no hearings in this session.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. There have been no hearings on this particular bill for the reason that hearings were held on a similar bill in the summer of 1942 and consideration of the bill continued until November when we were ready to report the bill, but because of the legislative situation that existed in the House at that time it was impossible for us to present it; so it seemed useless to hear the same witnesses again whom we had already heard, it being the same bill we had previously intended to bring before the House.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Except that the gentleman ignores the fact that a terrific bottleneck has developed since hearings were held on this bill. Labor's representatives wrote the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from North Carolina, I believe, requesting a hearing on this bill at this session of Congress to point out the development of this bottleneck. It seems to me that when we consider legislation of this kind which deals with a situation that is so important, we should not deny an opportunity to the representatives of the men and women who are engaged in this industry to be heard, particularly when they want to point out the disastrous effect of this bottleneck which has been rapidly developing since the hearings last summer.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I should like to proceed, if the gentleman will permit; then later I shall be pleased to yield further.

I have found from experience that the people who actually do the producing have a substantial contribution to make. They know intimately what the problems of production are, and they can and do make constructive proposals for their solution. The workers in the telegraph industry, who are closest to the scene of production, found cause for concern in the developing chaos.

As far back as 1938 telegraph labor presented evidence to a congressional committee of worsening telegraph service. Nothing was done at that time. In 1939, at the request of labor, the Senate undertook an investigation of the telegraph industry. Instead of examining the operations of the companies with respect to service to the country, the Senate investigation confined itself to the financial problems of the carriers. Telegraph service continued to deteriorate, so that in July of 1942 the Federal Communications Commission found it necessary to order an investigation of wartime telegraph service. The order stated:

It appearing that rapid, efficient, and adequate Nation-wide and world-wide telegraph service is of the utmost importance in time of war; and

It further appearing that such investigation of telegraph service is necessary in the public interest and in the interest of successful prosecution of the war;

It is ordered that an immediate investigation be undertaken to ascertain the facts concerning recorded communications services provided by carriers subject to the provisions of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

There existed at that time and exists this very day, a critical situation with regard to labor supply and training. The turn-over rates in both telegraph companies are enormous. This large turn-over is traceable directly to the miserable wages prevailing throughout the industry. It is no wonder that skilled communications workers who had spent many years developing their craft, left their chosen profession to take work in other industries which would pay them a decent living wage. This large percentage of turn-over was one of the contributing factors to the serious deterioration of telegraph service.

Inasmuch as a high degree of skill is required in many of the telegraphic operations, it is necessary to provide a sound system of training for new employees replacing those who have left the industry. Unless the turn-over is met with a new group of adequately trained operators capable of manning the circuits with the proper speed and efficiency, service in the industry deteriorates still further.

If wages are kept at a substandard level, the prospect of becoming a telegraph operator holds no incentive to the novice.

Therefore, a manpower shortage is created, and the possibility of alleviating such a shortage, which is a critical matter in an industry as vital to the war effort as communications, is almost nonexistent so long as the wages paid are such as to drive workers out of the industry. The shortage of skilled workers in the industry prevented proper maintenance of facilities with a consequent break-down of machinery and equipment, and resulting inevitably in delays which could otherwise have been avoided.

While the companies were looking forward to the juicy prospect of a profitable merger, they were utterly indifferent to the poor service being rendered the country.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If this corporation is not bailed out as provided in this bill but is compelled to go into the hands of the receivers and reorganize, these employees will still stay on the roll and continue this work.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. There is no question about that. The important point which I hope to make later on in my statement is the serious effect on the war effort which will result from the abandonment of facilities. This bill does not guarantee the public against the abandonment of necessary facilities. This is very, very vital. Here we are at war; we need telegraph facilities more than ever before. There is nothing in this bill that will effectively govern or control the abandonment of facilities; and, mind you, by this bill in wartime we are legislating here for the curtailment of facilities. Instead we should do everything to increase facilities. This legislation will result in the curtailment of existing facilities in many, many places throughout the country—facilities which are so vital to the war effort.

Mr. RANKIN. Does that not also take away the Government's preferential rates?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I believe it does.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, it punishes the Government on rates, as I understand, and, as I said, takes care of these big stockholders or investors.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman made the statement just now in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi that there was no provision in here which takes care of abandonments.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I said guarantee against abandonment of facilities. May I answer the gentleman in this way? The only provision here and its language, in my opinion, while not intended to be tricky, nevertheless is. It states that where service is being given to a community——

Mr. BULWINKLE. No. The gentleman has the wrong place in the bill. I call the attention of the gentleman to page 23. It must be in the public interest.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is insofar as the merger is concerned. I am talking about abandonment of facilities.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It relates to everything that is involved.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Why not so state it in the bill? Why not state it in the bill if it relates to abandonment of facilities? Why not mention that in the bill? Why not do so?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I would like to proceed. Let me say to the gentleman from North Carolina, if I may have his attention for a moment, that the point I again emphasize is the question of abandonment of facilities. Who is going to regulate abandonment of facilities? You do not give any power to the F. C. C. On that point you simply say that where the company gives service to a community it does not have to go to the F. C. C. to abandon any of its facilities.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I want to make an observation, and I have had some experience in the telegraph business. There is no regulatory body that can guarantee against the abandonment of telegraph facilities. The figures which the gentleman has given with reference to total mileage in the United States convey no indication of what telegraph facilities really exist. With two wires, a complete metallic service, they can transmit and take from them 144 circuits, just by the use of two constructed telegraph wires.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The present law does not prohibit any abandonment of facilities.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The point is that in this legislation you do not protect the public against the abandonment of facilities.

Mr. Chairman, before the investigation by the Federal Communications Commission, which I mentioned before, was completed, a bill for consolidation and merger of communications companies was introduced into the House. Hearings were held on this bill during the latter part of July last year. At these hearings, with one outstanding exception, all the evidence offered in testimony pointed to the financial problems of the carriers and requested alleviation, in the form of the present merger bill, from their losses. The exception was labor, which considered this legislation from the point of view of its effect on the war, and made what seems to me to be very constructive proposals for gearing the communications to the war effort.

These proposals were summarized briefly in five points:

First. The establishment of a goal of 20-minute service from sender to receiver.

Second. The elimination of all nonessential services, fixed text or otherwise.

Third. The institution of a program of labor recruiting and training to provide an adequate supply of efficient, skilled personnel; the maintenance and rehabilitation of plant.

Fourth. The raising of wages from their present substandard level in order to stabilize the industry by stopping the present disastrous labor turn-over and thereby bolstering morale.

Fifth. The Government to finance the conversion program as it has similar programs in other vital war industries.

These proposals were completely ignored, and a telegraph merger bill was reported out to the Seventy-seventh Congress providing only for improving the financial position of the companies.

In the meantime the war continued, and telegraph service did not improve. So bad did the situation become that the Board of War Communications, which was set up by Executive order to "determine, coordinate, and prepare plans" for the communications industry while our Nation is at war, found it necessary to take corrective measures. Based on the findings of the investigation conducted by the Federal Communications Commission, it issued an order in December 1942 which incorporates two of the proposals embodied in the war program presented by labor which I have mentioned before. This order was issued because—

> The Board of War Communications has determined that the national defense and security and the successful conduct of the war demand that immediate steps be taken to the end that the domestic telegraph industry shall be more closely geared to the war effort.

Now, in this Seventy-eighth Congress the same merger bill is presented to us. Are we to ignore the needs of the war efforts and the security of our Nation in order to provide a financial killing for a few stockholders? Shall we close our eyes to the fact that we are at war, as this proposed bill does, and see only the financial statements of the companies? Do we propose to supersede the order of the Board of War Communications for gearing the industry more closely to the war effort? If we pass this bill in its present form we will make it impossible to carry out even the partial remedies to chaos embodied in this order.

I propose an amendment which is designed to guarantee a communications system able to carry out its wartime responsibilities. It would prohibit the abandonment of any existing telegraph facilities without authority of the Federal Communications Commission, which would hold hearings to determine whether such abandonment is in the public interest. I have heard the sponsors of the merger bill declare their interest in an efficient communications system for the war effort. They can prove their devotion to this purpose by speeding the enactment of my proposed amendment to maintain all necessary existing facilities. If my colleagues are concerned with preventing the communications companies from folding because they are essential to the war effort, then they must support my proposal, which safeguards the efficient operation of telegraphic communications for the purposes of the war.

Now, as to the labor provisions in this bill.

In none of the clauses dealing with labor do I see any clear-cut proposals for protection of employees from the effects on their jobs of a merger. The bill attempts to give the impression of affording limited safeguards to certain employees against losing their jobs. But in actual fact, the proposals contradict each other, the language is vague, and nowhere did I find adequate provision for enforcement of even what questionable guarantees the bill presently contains.

There is, however, one section of which the meaning is unmistakable. I refer to section F-8 which makes null and void the collective bargaining agreements now in force in the industry, except with regard to hours of employment. Employees who have spent a lifetime in the service of the companies would be denied the job securities and promotional rights which they now enjoy through seniority provisions in their collective bargaining agreements. Wage rates guaranteed by contract could be reduced. Vacations, holidays, sick leave, the right to submit disagreements to impartial arbitration—all of these benefits gained by the workers and now incorporated in collective bargaining agreements would be destroyed overnight.

The unions in this country have long ago proven their devotion to the cause of winning the war. Organized labor has made many sacrifices for this cause, and their contributions to increased production have received public acclaim from the agencies of Government responsible for various phases of the war effort. It is therefore inconceivable to me that we should legislate to destroy the gains made by labor in this industry through years of collective bargaining. If we are going to put the interests of profit above the interests of our country such a proposition is in order. If, however, we are interested in victory for our side in this war against Fascist barbarism, we cannot attack the American working people and legislate to destroy their unions.

I propose a series of amendments to the labor sections of S. 158 which would provide a measure of protection to the workers in the industry.

The Communications Act of 1934 as presently in force provides no limit to the foreign ownership of stocks in the domestic telegraph companies. The bill before the House, S. 158, proposes to limit to not more than 20 percent ownership or control of the capital stock of the telegraph carriers. The proposal also would limit to 20 percent the capital stock owned or controlled by aliens in the owning or holding company.

While I do not have at hand information as to the distribution of stock in the telegraph companies and am therefore not in a position to state what percentage of it is currently held or controlled by aliens, I see no reason why, if we are limiting foreign ownership and control, we do not go all the way in securing the communications systems of our country and provide for complete American ownership.

In this connection I am also proposing an amendment to that section of the Communications Act of 1934 which deals with radio communications, and I am proposing that in international communications as well we provide for complete American ownership.

The act currently permits 20 percent ownership of stock in these companies.

Especially in time of war we cannot permit any possibility of Axis penetration or control. As you are all probably well aware, stockholders in a company have certain rights, including the right to find out the identity of the other stockholders. A stockholder may bring suit against a company if he feels that his rights are not being respected, and, under suit, he can examine the books and properties of the company. A stockholder also receives a certain amount of financial information and perhaps also operating information about the company. I say that if we are legislating in the interest of the war effort we must provide for the security of our communications systems and we must not permit any loopholes through which the enemies of our country can penetrate into such a vital service as communications.

It should be interesting to note that in 1930, during hearings held on the amendments to the Communications Act, the question of limiting foreign ownership and control was discussed. At that time Mr. Sosthenes Behn, president of International Telephone & Telegraph, made the statement at the hearings, when he was opposing the limitation to 20 percent of alien ownership of stock, that these proposals came about as a result of an exaggerated bug-a-boo about national defense. Surely that argument cannot apply today when it is no longer a matter of hypothetical national defense but the question of our Nation engaged in a struggle for survival; when our entire economy has been turned over to war production; when the thoughts and efforts and energies of all of its people are devoted to the primary task of winning the war. At such a time, gentlemen, we should close the loopholes and take no chances in impairing the security of our country.

The stated purpose of this legislation is to improve the financial condition of the telegraph carriers, and that is what the legislation as presently drafted has as its primary concern.

I refer the Members of this House to the statement of Senator BARKLEY when this bill was discussed in the Senate, at page 349 of the RECORD.

> We might as well be frank about this proposed merger legislation. It is based upon the theory that two competing telegraph companies in this country cannot succeed, and we all know that one of them is now losing money and has been losing money. The stockholders of that company have received no dividends on their stock, and in order to bail them out, as it were, we are providing for this merger of the two companies. While no company is mentioned, we all know we have in mind the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph Co.'s. By the proposed legislation we would make it possible for them to merge and consolidate, which might result in what is commonly known as the bailing out of stockholders of one of the companies by reason of the merger. They would be put upon a more solid foundation with respect to their stock.

The stock movements of the companies which would benefit from this merger are interesting evidence of what this bill seeks to accomplish. A rise of almost 350 percent in the stocks of one company for instance, which has been losing money steadily, makes me wonder, and so forth.

The speculation in stocks which has been going on ever since merger legislation has been under consideration has caused a good deal of suspicion about this proposed bill.

It is my firm belief that the speculations which have occurred around the stocks of these companies bear investigation from the Government agency responsible in such matters, and I have therefore requested the Securities and Exchange Commission to investigate the following:

First. The rapid rise in recent months in the securities of corporations engaged in domestic and foreign communications by wire, cable, and radio, particularly the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. and the International Telegraph & Telephone Co., and the relation of such rise to the proposed merger of telegraph, radio, and cable companies.

Second. I am informed that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made available to the International Telegraph & Telephone Co. a sum in the neighborhood of $40,000,000 for certain refinancing procedures. At the same time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through Mr. Jones, has adopted a contrary policy toward other segments of the communications industry.

Third. There is presently inadequate information available regarding the foreign share certificates of the International Telegraph & Telephone Co. and the relation of its foreign holdings and contracts and agreements to the policies of the American company, and the effect of consolidation proposals on further penetration of control of American communications systems of Axis-controlled companies.

Unless my proposed amendments are adopted, then the only conclusion I can reach is that the merger bill is being rushed through at the expense of the war effort, and such action is against the best interest of our country. I am perfectly willing to accept in good faith my colleagues' interest in the successful prosecution of the war. If the merger bill is designed for that purpose, then its sponsors should make every effort to secure passage of my proposed amendments, which actually guarantee that communications will be able to carry the wartime burden.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman an additional minute.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that I have prepared a certain number of amendments correcting the weaknesses in the bill. At the time I offer the amendments, I will demonstrate to the House that the bill has no guaranty against abandonment of facilities, no real protection for labor, and that this bill is not in the interest of the war effort.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I have been a little amused, if not amazed, at the turn of events here today. The gentleman from Mississippi has undertaken to lecture some of us because of the action that was taken by the House yesterday. I do not know whether he figures that his position today is strengthened by the fact he finds himself on the same side on this occasion with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Indiana found himself on the same side as the gentleman from New York yesterday.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I want to say that I am very gratified to have so many people on my side.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, we all understand that and we hold both of the gentlemen in the highest affection.

Mr. Chairman, before we get too excited by some of this talk, let us take a look at the facts. In the first place, this measure has passed the other body. It has been under consideration by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House for months. Hearings were started last July and they continued for a considerable time. Everyone was given an opportunity to appear and testify who asked to appear and testify, as is constantly the custom of that committee.

When the bill was under consideration by the committee, people in the industry, interested parties, and governmental agencies were being consulted and were being heard right down to the end of the last session of the Congress.

No bottleneck has developed, to my mind, that would make it desirable that the committee, having held those exhaustive hearings, having had all these people before the committee to give their views, and having done all this work, should start out again a few months later to duplicate the whole effort.

I believe that when a bill comes from a committee that includes 25 Members of the House, 15 on one side of the aisle and 10 on the other, who consider a measure of this sort without any partisanship at all, and who go over it carefully, write and rewrite it, listening to objections here and objections there, the measure as finally drafted should not be lightly cast aside. The committee should not be disregarded because a few Members of the House, undoubtedly acting in good faith, try to create some sort of an opinion about the bill that is not sustained at all by the facts.

Take this matter of the alleged possibility of loss of facilities. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation stops advancing about $400,000 a month to the Postal Telegraph Co., you are going to lose some facilities awfully quick. This bill is not designed to deprive the country in wartime of any needed facilities, but rather to preserve and make more efficient the facilities that are here. That is the very purpose of the bill.

Talk about bailing out. The suggestion was made by the gentleman from Mississippi, attempting to draw a red herring across the trail, that you people are going to use the money of your folks back home to bail out some stockholders in a corporation. Who has been doing the bailing out up to date? The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with some of that money that does come from the folks back home, if it is not repaid, has been bailing out to the tune of about $400,000 a month for so long that it is now $9,000,000 into the Postal Telegraph Co.

As to the statement that this corporation ought to go through a reorganization to wring out the stockholders, it has already been through a reorganization and the stockholders have already been wrung out. I do not know how you could wring them out much more than they have already been wrung out, according to the figures and the facts given by the gentleman from North Carolina, who knows more about this bill, I suspect, than any of us because he has given more time to it.

The fact of the matter is that we are trying to stop the bailing-out process. We are trying to get this to the point where we can have one good, efficient operating company that can handle the wire telegraph business of the Nation. When we get that done, it is to be hoped that we will get to the point where we will not have to continue to put money into it.

This is not a mandatory statute. No one knows for sure whether the Western Union will take over this company. Any offer of merger by Western Union will have to be approved by the Federal Communications Commission, and can you conceive of that Commission approving any sort of an operation or plan that will deprive this country of needed facilities or that will give a great big windfall to some stockholders somewhere? And certainly the Western Union is not going to be interested in putting up that much money to effect this merger. Remember, if this merger is effected, Western Union will have to put up the money to do it. The Government will not put up the money.

As far as the employees are concerned, what better time could you have than a time like this, when there is a real shortage of manpower, to effect one of these mergers? There are jobs for everyone who wants to work in this country if he is capable of holding a job.

In the second place, as the gentleman from North Carolina has pointed out, the employees who may be displaced by reason of the merger are given absolutely the same sort of treatment that has been developed in connection with railroad abandonments and mergers over a period of years. In those cases, certainly, labor has been diligent in protecting its interest. It does seem to me that when we go to that extent we have probably gone just about as far as reason would indicate we should go.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. In the A. C. A. News of Saturday, September 28, 1940, which I believe is the paper of the telegraphers' union of the C. I. O., after the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act there appeared this headline: "Railroad Men Protected by Merger."

The article following it stated in part:

Although the labor provision in the final version of the Transportation Act is considerably modified from that contained in the original Harrington amendment, it represents a standard which will inevitably be considered in relation to employees in the communications industry who are involved in a merger or consolidation.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. It says nothing about the man who pays the freight being protected, however.

Mr. BULWINKLE. What does the gentleman want, may I ask?

Mr. HALLECK. Let me answer that question.

I have just as much concern for the man who pays the freight as has the gentleman from Mississippi. There have been a few times that he and I have disagreed about some things, but I will leave it to the judgment of the Congress and the country whether he has been more diligent in protecting the taxpayer and the fellow who pays the freight than some of the rest of us. He has suggested that if you defeat this merger proposal these Postal employees will continue on the pay roll of Postal. Maybe they will, if the Government through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation continues to put up $400,000 or more every month. The stockholders are not getting any dividends, so I suppose it is all going out for salaries, wages, and the actual cost of upkeep and operation. Therefore, it seems to me that the best we could do for those people would be to try to bring about a merger that would give us one strong, efficient, active operating company, protecting, as we have, according to established precedents, the rights of employees.

The gentleman from Mississippi apparently is very much disturbed about monopoly. I remember, and so do you, when we had a lot of express companies. Now we have one express company, and I do not know that anybody has suffered particularly by that. As a matter of fact, a telegraph company is a public utility. It operates as do other public utilities, under a franchise granted by the Government, which in effect is a governmental monopoly, but in return for that franchise the utility is subjected to Federal regulation and control.

It is the theory of regulation and control by Government that rates are fixed in the public interest, and if they are not so fixed——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. HALLECK. If they are not so fixed, then the fault is of Government, that seeks to regulate, and not of industry. I have always said that you cannot have your cake and eat it, too. If you are going to have utilities, grant them franchises, and subject them to regulation, you cannot in that same system maintain free and complete competition. So, I say that with the Federal Communications Commission having authority over rates and service we should be assured that the public interest will not suffer even though the merger should be effected and we should have just one wire telegraph company.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It has been stated here that one of these companies owes the Government $9,000,000. Is it contemplated that the Western Union, if this merger can be brought about, will take up that and take care of the debts?

Mr. HALLECK. As a matter of fact, as has been said, that is the intent of a first lien. Any merger that would be worked out would have to take into consideration first the $9,000,000 that the Postal company owes the Government.

There is another matter in connection with this alleged monopoly that I would like to talk about. Competition in the field of communications is not simply between the Western Union and the Postal. Competition in that field is between domestic radio communications and telephone communications, and now air mail communications, in ever increasing quantity. So there will be a constant competition for whatever effect it may have in bringing about operation of the telegraph in the public interest.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to be one of those individuals who do not stand for Government ownership of railroads. I do not stand for Government ownership and operation of radio, or for Government ownership and operation of wire telegraph companies. But, like the sheep raiser said to his banker one time, if he did not do something about giving him a loan or an extension or some more money, the banker was soon going to be in the sheep business. That is just the situation here. If we keep on advancing R. F. C. money to Postal, we are going to have to take it over, and the Government is going to own it unless we just let it fold up and quit. If you withdraw the governmental support, then the Postal fails and the public and employees will really lose.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. GRANGER. What does the gentleman say about the service you might expect? Suppose we should have only one railroad? No matter how much regulation you have, would you have the scientific development of industry that is brought about there, and would not that be true of telegraph?

Mr. HALLECK. Whenever you have duplication of service without full-capacity operation of both, it is inevitable that you will not have as good service as when you have one good strong operating company, able to carry on the business.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. Is it not true that telegraph service is close to the Post Office service in service to the people? The Post Office is operated by the Government, and the Government will practically operate this, in a way. It will serve everybody; but it will be under such rules and supervision that you cannot possibly have any better service than that you will get in this merger?

Mr. HALLECK. I think so. Indeed, I think that in some instances the Federal Communications Commission has been overly enthusiastic in some of its regulatory operations.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It seems to me that the importance of service depends upon the abandonment of facilities. I do not think there is any argument as to that. Why does this committee object to having an amendment put into the bill which would simply require that before this new corporation which results from the merger can abandon any existing facilities, it must obtain a certificate of permission from the Federal Communications Commission. The gentleman is not opposed to Government regulation and should not the Government regulate the abandonment of facilities?

Mr. HALLECK. My impression about that is that that authority is in the law so far as it is necessary to insure adequate facilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Indiana said that if this merger occurs the Government will, in his opinion, be protected by a first lien. Suppose the merger does not occur, is not the Government already protected by a first lien on the properties of the Postal Telegraph Co.?

Mr. HALLECK. It looks to me as if the Government has a first lien on a bankrupt, insolvent company that is falling $400,000 short in operating expenses every month. If you think that is a first lien that is worth very much, you can see further than I can.

Mr. RANKIN. And so we must bail it out at the cost of the people.

Mr. HALLECK. We are not doing that. If the merger is effected, the merged corporation will take care of it.

Mr. RANKIN. You are bailing it out at the expense of the American people.

Mr. HALLECK. I have respect for the gentleman from Mississippi, but if anybody knowing anything about the facts and the provisions of the bill can follow that line of argument, he is a mental wizard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is not important and probably it is not interesting, but I happened to be a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce which worked on this bill for many, many weeks. I have listened to the debate, although I have not heard all of it. I am sorry to say I was not present when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] spoke. However, something has been said about the abandonment of service. That was discussed at the greatest length in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and before the subcommittee—the so-called abandonment section. It is something that was gone into with the greatest of care, because we were insistent that no community or part of any community should suffer any abandonment as a result of the merger.

Of course, we all know that in certain communities the Western Union may have a telegraph office in the principal hotel and that right across the street there may be an office of the Postal Telegraph Co. Obviously, a merger might result in the abandonment of one or the other, because it is obvious that one office might be entirely sufficient for the community. But to make it certain, we inserted this language:

> No carrier shall discontinue service to a community, or part of a community, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that neither the present nor future public convenience and necessity will be adversely affected thereby.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The Senate bill contained different language. The Senate bill amended section 214 of the Communications Act of 1934 so as to prohibit, without Commission approval, "the abandonment of a line, plant, office, or other physical facility." You took out that language which was very clear and you substituted language about abandonment of service to a community which is loose and gives the public no safeguard against abandonment of facilities. That leaves a big loophole.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now I think I can cover that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is a big loophole.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not a loophole at all. I beg to differ with the gentleman from New York. We ran into the difficulty of defining what is meant by the term "a line." The average layman visualizes a telegraph line as a line of poles and wires, yet when you get into the technicalities of transmission of messages by telegraph you find that there are many, many other things which are a part of a line as you thus visualize it, and without which the line, so-called, cannot work. So the following language was inserted immediately following the language which I just read:

> As used in this section the term "line" means any channel of communication established by the use of appropriate equipment—

thus improving the provision in the Senate bill and making it extend over a much wider field technically and practically.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. There has been quite a lot said about bailing out a lot of bondholders and stockholders. Is there anything in the bill that would require the Western Union or anybody else to assume obligations of that sort, unless they were founded on just and right principles?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill specifically provides that the terms of the merger shall be O. K.'d by the Communications Commission. All the financial details, all the physical elements in it, must finally be approved by the Communications Commission.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is it reasonable to suppose that the Commission is going to bail out a lot of valueless bonds or securities if this bill is passed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot conceive of the Commission doing it. If the Commission did I cannot conceive of the Western Union consenting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the committee which brings this bill into the House; I do not claim to be familiar with all the advantages or disadvantages of this proposed merger. The information I have on the entire subject is very limited; it consists mainly of an address by Senator AIKEN which may be found on pages 590 to 593 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, under date of February 4. It seems to me that anybody who will read what is contained in those pages will not vote for what I consider to be one of the biggest grabs that has been before Congress in a good many years.

Leaving wholly outside of the question the advantages of a merger, or the disadvantages, from other standpoints, the real thing that is coming before us this morning is whether we in Congress in wartime are going to permit a bill to go through here that means to put $12,500,000 into the coffers of a few men, most of whom live in New York City and are stockbrokers and stock manipulators. That is one big phase of the question.

I call attention to the fact that if the Postal Telegraph Co. is bankrupt, it is not a new thing, but something that has existed a long period of time, and its bankruptcy was caused in years gone by by high salaries and corporation mismanagement and stock-jobbing manipulations. That is what brought its bankruptcy. There was more water in its stock than the corporation could stand.

Here are some facts about this bill: When this merger came before the House, almost a year ago, there was one brokerage house in New York City which held 40,325 shares of Postal Telegraph stock. Five months later Congress took this bill up and there seemed to be a good chance of its passage. The holdings of this one stock-holding-and-selling company increased to 121,656 shares. A money-wise stock-jobbing concern in New York City is sufficiently interested in a bankrupt corporation to invest that much money in that many shares.

Here is another thing: During 1942, while this bill was before the last Congress, the shares of stock sold as low as $9.50. It has continually risen and on January 23, 2 days before this bill passed the other body, it had risen to $18.78; and on February 3, about 10 days after its passage in the Senate, it had increased in price to $19.50. I do not know much about the number of shares of the Postal Telegraph Co.; all I know is what I read on page 592 of the RECORD, in which it is stated that there were 256,770 shares of preferred stock and 1,027,079 shares of common stock. Having this in mind, and considering the price of $9.50 in 1942, as against $19.50 a week ago, multiply it by the number of shares, and it is quite apparent that somebody over there in New York City, where they manipulate stocks, and where they are in this merger game and have been for years, stands to make a profit of approximately $12,500,000.

This bill amounts to a congressional license or authority for that lot of stock gamblers to grab that much money from the merger. It is easy to see why the big speculators bought the stock in a bankrupt company. They were counting on Congress passing this bill to make their deal profitable. If we pass it, they will be the gainers and the public will be the loser.

I have long been suspicious of merger bills, not because of my experience in the stock market, for I come from a long distance away and have had no experience in stock gambling, but I recall many times that when mergers were passed upon by Congress, somebody made a lot of money. There were the mergers and the reorganizations of numerous railway corporations, for instance. There were the machinations of the Pacific railways years ago through which bills passed Congress to authorize mergers, reorganizations, and nearly every form of corporation skulduggery, which cost our Nation billions of dollars. This is another measure of a similar type. Ostensibly intended to benefit a bankrupt concern, it reeks with the same kind of jobbery which all too often receives congressional sanction. I am opposed to the bill, and I shall vote against it. I wish I had longer time to discuss it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I hate to take the time of the committee so much in this debate, but I want to keep the record straight. There has been some talk about pulling somebody out. Let us just get the facts; let me give them to you just as they are. The implication of this statement is that the present shareholders of Postal Telegraph, Inc., have acquired their stock at low prices and that they would make a substantial profit because of the passage of this legislation and the resulting consolidation of the companies. While it is undoubtedly true that some shareholders are in this position, the record clearly indicates that so far as the great majority of the shareholders are concerned, the legislation and resulting consolidation will neither produce a profit nor even restore to these investors their original investment in the company.

The shares of Postal Telegraph, Inc., came into existence as a result of the default and reorganization of the old Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation. That corporation had outstanding $50,670,210 of 5% bonds which was followed by $30,000,000 of preferred stock and $25,000,000 of common stock. That corporation paid interest on its bonds until January 1, 1935, after which the company went into bankruptcy and was reorganized. As part of the reorganization, the $30,000,000 of preferred stock and the $25,000,000 of common stock were wiped out and all the assets of the company were given to the $50,670,210 bondholders. These bondholders received for their original investment some cash and various securities of the new companies which were created to acquire the assets of the bankrupt company. Among these securities were the entire outstanding shares of Postal Telegraph, Inc., namely 256,769.9 shares of Postal Telegraph, Inc., preferred stock and 1,027,079.6 shares of common stock. The significant point which is here emphasized is that the shares of Postal now outstanding came into existence by virtue of an exchange of these shares for an investment which was originally represented by bonds.

The question now arises as to whether the outstanding shares are still retained by those people who originally held the $50,670,210 of bonds or whether they are now held by people who have been characterized as "speculators." It is certainly true that some part of the shares are held by people who were not originally investors in the bonds, but by far the great bulk of the present stockholders are those individuals who were original creditors of the old company. The following facts measure the relative size of these two groups.

The only way of ascertaining how many of the present shareholders were original creditors is by comparing the names and amounts of present shareholders with those who owned the old bonds for which they were exchanged. This is a laborious study to make, but such a study was made as of March 1, 1942, and the following figures are taken from that study.

As of March 1, 1942, there were a total of 5,269 stockholders of the present company owning 256,769.9 shares of preferred stock and 1,027,079.6 shares of common stock. Of these shareholders, 3,592 were formerly creditors of the old company who, incident to the reorganization, received shares of Postal Telegraph, Inc., in exchange for their original investment in bonds. These individuals now hold 202,392 shares of preferred stock and 809,513 shares of common stock. In other words, 78 percent of the preferred stock and 79 percent of the common stock are still held by people who originally held $45,518,539 of the old bonds. These people presumably are not speculators. They have retained their investment in Postal for many years and they have received no income since January 1, 1935. Their total investment has depreciated substantially from the original figure of $45,518,539.

Incident to the reorganization these original investors received in addition to the shares of Postal preferred and common stock, some cash and securities in the other companies which were formed to acquire the assets of the bankrupt company. The present value of all the securities and cash they received aggregates only $16,573,229, or substantially less than the original investment of $45,518,539. Expressed in terms of an individual, the original investor who invested $1,000 in the bonds of the old Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation has today cash and securities received in exchange for that investment which are valued at only $363. Even if the Postal preferred stock were to receive in consolidation its par value of $60 a share—as against its present price of $20 a share—the original investor would have recovered only $563 out of his original investment of $1,000.

From the facts this conclusion can clearly be drawn: The great majority of the present stockholders of Postal are people who originally invested substantial amounts in the Postal Telegraph system and who will not even recover their original investment in the event of merger. The so-called "speculators" who will make a profit as a result of merger are a small minority of the present stockholders and their holdings represent even a smaller portion of the total holdings.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN].

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN].

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, we are deciding here today really just one thing, one very vital, important, and fundamental issue. The thing we are deciding today is whether or not we want the Government to enter this field of business in competition with private enterprise or whether we want to permit this failing company to be taken over by way of merger with a substantial private concern that is now on its feet.

Mr. GWYNNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE. What is the actual value of the physical property of the Postal Telegraph Co.?

Mr. BOREN. I cannot say exactly all of the value that is represented in their paper and everything else but I would guess in the neighborhood of $40,000,000.

Mr. GWYNNE. The Government could get its money out in any event?

Mr. BOREN. If the Government takes it over to get its money out and sells the physical property to the present company or any other source it may sell it to, the result would be the loss of the use of those facilities at this time, when the use of the facilities is of value to the Nation.

Fundamentally, the question we are going to decide today is whether or not you want the Government to go into this field of business. It is not logical for the Government to go ahead with this constant lending that there is no hope for repayment on, other than the hope that is embodied in this bill by permitting—and I want to emphasize the fact that this is permissive legislation—this solvent company to meet that obligation that the Postal Telegraph Co. cannot meet.

We have heard a great deal of talk here about monopoly. I want to point out in the first place that the Postal Telegraph Co. does less than 15 percent of the communication business at this time in that field; so far as monopoly is concerned Western Union has closely approached that long ago.

The intimations that Western Union wants this consolidation is far afield from the truth. The only element of desire that could stimulate Western Union to want to take over this unprofitable portion of the communications business is what stimulation there would be to keeping the Government out of competition with them as a private business, and I am certain that is the basic motivation.

Postal Telegraph wants this merger for one reason only. They have got to do one of two things. They must continue to receive these ridiculous loans from the Government that they know they can never repay as they operate at present, or else they must fold up and let the Government take it over unless we permit them to salvage something by selling what they have to offer to a company that is solvent.

This bill is entirely consistent with the policy adopted by Congress in all similar cases. In the case of all public utilities that are under Federal regulation, we have permitted consolidation and merger.

The Federal regulation principle is the basis on which we have permitted consolidations and mergers of railroads, motor carriers, and water carriers, all of which is permitted under section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, and that has been established as a permanent policy on our part.

Consolidations and mergers of telephone companies are permitted under section 221 of the Communications Act of 1934.

Consolidations and mergers of air carriers are permitted under section 408 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. While we are talking about how vital aviation is in this war and in this Nation's future, may I say there was a provision where the Congress in its wisdom permitted the maintenance of these facilities and services where a company, because of its financial structure, could not go ahead, and permit a stronger company to step in to bridge the gap that would be created.

So far as I am aware, telegraph companies are the only public utilities now under Federal regulation that are not now—under the permanent legislative policy established by this Congress—permitted to effect consolidations and mergers.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said about subjects tangent to this issue. I want to assure you that the seven men who studied this bill studied it with great care and concern. The great Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that reported this bill unanimously did so only after a careful consideration of all the factors that were involved. I myself particularly went into this question of possible profiteering in stock transactions.

In the first place, the fallacy of that assumption rests on the assertion that the Western Union will buy these securities at anything more than their actual value. Remember that this legislation is permissive. Remember that this legislation only extends to this field the principle and policy already established for all other fields where public utilities have been regulated by the Federal Government. That inference is strictly a fallacy. There is no logic at all in the assumption that the Western Union would buy in these shares at whatever their market price might be.

As far as the Government is concerned the vast amount of money we have invested in the form of a loan subsidy to keep Postal Telegraph going we hope to get back by this merger. Western Union is willing to assume these obligations to a point that is consistent with an economic program.

We have a second hold against any such manipulation or any such profits, charges concerning which have been made here. In the first place, the economics of it prevent it. In the second place, the Government regulation over such a merger prevents it. If you will read lines 13 to 15 on page 23 of this bill, I am sure any doubt that might linger in your minds on that point will be erased. That entire section deals with this very question.

You will notice that in the consolidation everything is to be combed for the public interest involved and every agreement reached must be O. K.'d by the Government agency that is going to look after the public interest in the event of consolidation.

There are a thousand and one things I should like to point out as erroneous in some of the discussion here, but I want to talk only a moment or two more. I do want to emphasize that the whole and sole point that is fundamental in this bill is the decision as to whether or not we prefer the Government to enter this field of enterprise, and that is what it will have to do or else continue forever this system of losses and maintain it under Government subsidy. We must determine whether we want the Government to enter this field or leave it in regulated private hands.

A great deal has been said about the employees and the treatment we have provided for them in this merger legislation. We have guaranteed to every employee of the Postal Telegraph Co. that there will be no alteration in the conditions of his employment. We have said in this bill what I really think is far more than justice dictates we should have said. We have said that for 4 years after the date of this merger no employee will have his employment situation changed in such a way that it will be less than the status of his present employment situation. In addition, we have guaranteed that any employees who may have gone into the service must be given a place in the merged corporation when they come back. We have extended to them other guaranties in the way of providing for the cost of the relocation of people transferred or removed.

I cannot imagine any man with reason wishing to ask anything beyond what we have accorded here. I do not mind telling you frankly that I felt that it was going too far to guarantee that their pay and conditions of employment would for 4 years not be made worse than their present situation, whether or not their services were needed. However, all agreed to it as a reasonable compromise.

Mr. Chairman, in order to save this country from Government entrance into this field and from what it would mean if the Government should operate this business, I urge my colleagues to permit this merger so that we can continue to have this business in the hands of private enterprise.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, seemingly there has been considerable heat as well as some light on this subject, and I can realize the reason for that, because legislation of this kind is very intricate and very much involved, and many times it is quite difficult for members of the committee themselves to understand some of the questions that are involved, even after weeks and weeks of study. Yet, in the short time I have today, I shall endeavor to sum up some of the questions that have been brought out here and perhaps give in a brief manner the answers to some of these questions.

Let us in the very beginning understand that under present conditions there cannot even be a discussion between the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph Cos. as to the possibility of a merger. In order that a merger can even be considered legally, it is necessary that Congress pass legislation giving permission for negotiations for such a merger. This bill does not make a merger necessary or mandatory. It simply gives permission for the merger to be made.

How is the merger to be made? After the legislation is enacted into law, the telegraph companies will discuss their problems as to how they may merge. Any agreement they may reach must be brought before the Federal Communications Commission, and that Commission must give its approval.

There is some talk here about the financial value or worth of the Postal Telegraph Co. Nobody knows exactly what that is. That will depend a great deal upon what the Western Union is willing to give for it, what it is appraised at, and what the actual value is fixed at after all these consultations and conversations are over. It will also depend a great deal upon what the Commission itself believes it is worth.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD. Will the Government come out clean?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The Government will come out clean. Let me go ahead and I will explain that.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It has been alleged here by Members that this is a scheme to bail out security holders. May I ask for the sake of the record what that will cost the Government?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am glad to answer that question because the fact of the matter is that it will not cost the Government anything. Instead, it will save the Government money.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. If that is the case, I should like to have someone here in the House tell me who is hurt.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No one is hurt under the bill; in fact, everyone is helped. That is the reason the legislation is here.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Will the gentleman explain section 6 of the bill, which eliminates the authority to grant preference rates to the Government on official business?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes; I will explain that in just one minute. I want to answer this other question first.

The Postal Co. has been running behind and has been a money-losing venture for many years. In 1940 it was necessary that the Postal Co. reorganize, and I think, at that time, if you will check the record regarding all this water that you have seen flowing around this Hall this afternoon, you will find that it was squeezed out of the Postal Co. at that time. Since that time Postal has continued to lose money, and the Government, in order to guarantee service to many of the communities, some of which are the site of great war plants and war industries, encampments, and military and naval establishments, have advanced money to keep this particular company in business, until the Government has loaned the company a total of $9,000,000. That amount of R. F. C. money is now invested in the Postal Co. If this bill is passed, of course, the Federal Communications Commission is not going to permit any merger that does not protect the interests of the Government, and let me say right there that the Federal Communications Commission, the Army, and the Navy, and every governmental agency that appeared before our committee favored this bill and this merger, and they all asked for it.

Some talk has been had that somebody is going to make some money by the stock going up. Of course the stock went up. Let us apply our own common sense to that question. If any of you men or women here had stock in a corporation which, under the law, you could not sell, and that company was losing money month after month, and it appeared that the only answer would be that you were just hanging on until you lost every cent of your investment, the company wiped out, and your stock become worthless; and then it reached the point where there was an opportunity to sell the company to somebody else, so that you would receive back whatever your equity might be worth, of course the stock might increase in market value and be worth something. But when you figure its present value at $19, and you know that the present stockholders started out with a $1,000 bond, then they are not going to get very much out of it. Of course some smart boy, if you want to say so, may have seen this thing coming and may have bought some of these shares, but there has not been much of that, and the Government first gets out its $9,000,000, and the Government is really the one that is being bailed out in this proposition.

This bill does give protection to labor. I have heard some discussions on the floor about what it does for labor. It guarantees to every man in the Postal Telegraph Co., every employee, that when the company is merged, he will be guaranteed employment equal to the time he has already served with the Postal Co., up to 4 years. In other words, if a man has worked for the Postal Co. 3 months, he is guaranteed employment for 3 months; if he has worked for the Postal Co for 4 years, he is guaranteed 4 years of employment, but if he has worked for the Postal Co. for 10 years, he is guaranteed only 4 years' employment, and if a man cannot sell himself and his work in 4 years, then he certainly is not entitled to be considered or to be held on for 10 years, because he would not be worthy of it.

Let me also say in this connection that this is the best time in the world to merge two companies like this, because of the employment situation. There is a shortage of manpower. These companies are looking for help right now, and it is certain that every one of these employees of both companies will have positions waiting for them. Talk about protecting the rights of labor. I wonder how much any retirement pension might be worth to any employee of the Postal Co. if the Postal Co. is forced entirely out of business? They are taken care of under this proposition. Those workers who have retired under the Postal retirement system continue to draw exactly the same amount, and that is provided for in this bill. They are blanketed under the Western Union system. There is one other thought, and I am going to speak frankly about it, because it has not been discussed so far. At the present time the employees of the Postal Co. are not receiving quite as high rate of pay as are the employees of the Western Union Co. What will actually happen is this, if these two companies are merged: The present employees of the Postal Co. who are taken over and will become employees of the Western Union will actually receive a wage increase. Why? Because the Western Union cannot possibly pay its own employees one rate of pay, and the other employees, the new ones that come to them, another rate of pay, and actually there will be an increase in pay for the employees who go to the Western Union from the Postal.

We have had a little quarrel among the labor boys and I think that should be cleared up by being frank about it. The employees of the Western Union, and there are about 38,000 of them, exclusive of the messengers, are organized by the American Federation of Labor. The employees of the Postal Co., exclusive of the messengers, and there are something like 9,000 of them, come under the C. I. O.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Naturally when these two companies merge, and all become employees of the Western Union, the great majority, being members of the A. F. of L., will swing the whole group to the American Federation of Labor membership. That is the provision of the National Labor Relations Board ruling, as I understand it, and, of course, the C. I. O. officials now representing the men in the Postal employ will be out, because there will be no business for them to do, and I do not blame them a bit for the fight that they have made to keep their own jobs.

I want to answer one other question, which came up in committee when I happened to be ill, and that is the provision as to Government rates. Let me say to you that the only form of communication that is giving any special rates to the Government is the telegraph companies. The Government pays full rates for all telephone messages. These telegraph companies insist that they have been handling Government business at a loss. They contend that it is not fair to make them handle Government business at a loss when they have received no help from the Government and permit other forms of communication to receive full compensation.

This measure would increase the telegraphic cost, over-all, to the Government, as I understand it, approximately $1,000,000 a year under present conditions, or about $500,000 a year under normal conditions. It would make the Government pay a fair rate for the communications that they send by telegraph and would put an end to having the telegraph companies handle Government business at a loss.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has made a fine explanation of that section of the bill, but there is one other argument that I think the membership ought to know about. Here is a utility that is under governmental regulation. It requires a certain amount of income to transmit messages, Government and private. If the Government has a 40-percent deduction on its messages, then, of necessity, the rate that the individual has to pay is higher in order to compensate for that lower rate to the Government. Is it not more equitable that the rate be the same for everybody and that instead of the private sender of a message having to make up the deficit on the Government's message, that whatever is necessarily to be paid by the Government should be paid out of the revenues of the Government? In a word, the elimination of the 40-percent discount to the Government should result in a lowering of the rates generally to everybody?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I think that is absolutely correct.

I want to go on from here and conclude by pointing out that all of the rates that are charged by telegraph companies, as well as by the telephone companies, come under the purview and control of the Federal Communications Commission. There is not going to be any monopolistic gouging of the public, because we have an agency of government established to see that that thing does not happen, and that the lowest possible rates are given to the public for the communications they use. I believe that each and every one of you who knows anything about the make-up of the Federal Communications Commission will agree with me that at least that Commission is not controlled by any public utility. Right in the midst of wartime they have compelled great reductions in telephone rates. Certainly they will not look with any particular favor at least upon granting rates to telegraph companies that will permit any large melons to be cut by the stockholders. The complaint that we receive in our committee is that the Federal Communications Commission is really too strict as to rates and really cut them too low.

I think this bill as a whole is absolutely necessary. Let me say it passed the Senate by an almost unanimous vote. It has the support of every agency of Government that has appeared before our committee. There is no objection by any agency of Government, and I believe it will receive the support of this House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as may remain.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Does the rate on international communications enter into this picture at all?

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. No. Mr. Chairman, there is little to be said at this time other than what has already been said. I merely want to take the opportunity to impress upon the House the fact that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce gave this matter very careful and serious consideration over a period of months. This legislation was not brought to the floor of the House without due consideration. We recognized that principles and policies were involved that required the most careful consideration and study. After the committee had given it the careful consideration that it deserved, the bill was brought to the floor of this House with a unanimous report of the committee.

In addition to that, may I emphasize the fact that in the hearings which were conducted by the committee, opportunity was given to every department of Government that would be interested in the solution of this important matter. The result was that without exception every governmental agency that appeared before us or sent communications to the committee expressed unqualified approval of the merger of these two telegraph companies. In fact, anyone who will give the matter even cursory study will come to the conclusion that there was nothing to do under existing conditions other than to provide by appropriate legislation for the merger of these two companies. The existing circumstances leave no doubt that the Postal Telegraph Co. can operate only so long as the Government is willing to advance the necessary funds. It has already been stated that the Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is advancing to the Postal Telegraph Co. approximately $400,000 a month. As a result of these advances an indebtedness has arisen which at the present time is approximately $9,000,000. Under these circumstances only one of two things could happen. That would be either the closing down entirely of the Postal Telegraph Co. by refusal of the Government, through R. F. C., to advance additional funds, or for the Government itself to take over the operation of the Postal Telegraph Co. I have heard no expression of sentiment in this House, either on the floor or off the floor, that would indicate a desire upon the part of anyone to see the Government take over the operation of the telegraph system of the Postal Telegraph Co. or any other telegraph company. There is a very definite sentiment against Government ownership or operation of the telegraph systems of this country. Therefore there was no other solution left than to provide by proper legislation for the consolidation or merger of those two companies and the taking over thereby of the Postal Telegraph by the Western Union.

In fixing the conditions under which merger or consolidation could be accomplished, the committee was just as alert as any Member of this House who has spoken in opposition to this bill in making certain that nothing detrimental to the public welfare would result from a merger or consolidation of these two companies under the provisions of this bill. Any such merger would be subject to the approval of the Federal Communications Commission. The Commission is given power to approve or disapprove. Provisions were placed in the bill by the committee to eliminate the possibility of any conditions of a monopolistic character being created.

I doubt if anyone believes any such danger exists. The regulation that has been provided for under the jurisdiction of the Federal Communications Commission is sufficient to protect the public welfare. In this connection it is also appropriate to point out that provision has been made in this bill to make certain that there shall be adequate service continued throughout the Nation even though there might be only one telegraph company operating. It is also important to realize that the terms of consolidation or merger must be submitted to the Federal Communications Commission before any proposed agreement becomes effective, and the Commission is given power under this bill either to approve or disapprove or to approve with modifications the proposed merger. Thus the public interest has been adequately taken care of by the provisions of this bill.

In the moment that remains may I emphasize the fact that the War and Navy Departments have given their approval of this act.

A statement was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] to the effect that it was a poor time, because of war conditions, to provide for such a merger. On the contrary, both the War and the Navy Departments have taken the position that it should be done now in order that the war may be fought effectively. May I read from the testimony of Brig. Gen. Frank E. Stoner, of the United States Army, before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce? He said:

> The War Department considers this bill a sound, realistic, and carefully considered approach to a solution of a grave problem in the communications industry of this Nation. The maintenance of a strong, cohesive, and far-flung communications system is vital to the successful prosecution of the war.
>
> The War Department favors immediate consolidation of the telegraph companies in the interest of economy in the use of critical equipment, materials, and personnel, all of which are necessary now for the use of important defense communications projects. A merger of the domestic telegraph systems of record communications will avoid duplication of facilities and result in a stable and comprehensive service.
> The War Department is vitally concerned with the security of its message traffic and the prevention of important military information from being viewed by disloyal personnel. Consolidation will limit surveillance to one commercial carrier, one list of operating personnel, and one operating procedure, thereby permitting a single and effective communications security plan.

A similar view was also presented to the committee in a communication from Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War. Likewise, James Forrestal, Acting Secretary of the Navy, gave his approval on behalf of the Navy Department. In his communication, addressed to the committee, he said:

> With reference to the proposed consolidation or merger of communication facilities in the domestic field, the War and Navy Departments are in accord that present conditions demand congressional authorization to that end.

In conclusion, may I point out that in both the House and Senate hearings last spring and summer there was unanimous endorsement of the necessity for and the principle of legislation for consolidation of domestic telegraph carriers. This testimony was given by the Federal Communications Commission, the Board of War Communications, the Army, the Navy, the Department of State, the Department of Labor, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It was the testimony of all of these governmental agencies that consolidation of telegraph carriers was in the best interests of the public, the Government, the employees in the industry, and the prosecution of the war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is amended by adding at the end of title II the following new section:

"CONSOLIDATIONS AND MERGERS OF TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

"SEC. 222. (a) As used in this section—

"(1) The term 'consolidation or merger' includes the legal consolidation or merger of two or more corporations, and the acquisition by a corporation through purchase, lease, or in any other manner, of the whole or any part of the property, securities, facilities, services, or business of any other corporation or corporations, or of the control thereof, in exchange for its own securities, or otherwise.

"(2) The term 'domestic telegraph carrier' means any common carrier by wire or radio, the major portion of whose traffic and revenues is derived from domestic telegraph operations; and such term includes a corporation owning or controlling any such common carrier.

"(3) The term 'international telegraph carrier' means any common carrier by wire or radio, the major portion of whose traffic and revenues is derived from international telegraph operations; and such term includes a corporation owning or controlling any such common carrier.

"(4) The term 'consolidated carrier' means any carrier by wire or radio which acquires or operates the properties and facilities unified and integrated by consolidation or merger.

"(5) The term 'domestic telegraph operations' includes acceptance, transmission, reception, and delivery of record communications by wire or radio which either originate or terminate at points within the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, St. Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, or Newfoundland and terminate or originate at points within the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, St. Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, or Newfoundland, and includes acceptance, transmission, reception, or delivery performed within the continental United States between points of origin within and points of exit from, and between points of entry into and points of destination within, the continental United States with respect to record communications by wire or radio which either originate or terminate outside the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, St. Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, and Newfoundland, and also includes the transmission within the continental United States of messages which both originate and terminate outside but transit through the continental United States.

"(6) The term 'international telegraph operations' includes acceptance, transmission, reception, and delivery of record communications by wire or radio which either originate or terminate at points outside the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, St. Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, and Newfoundland, but does not include acceptance, transmission, reception, and delivery performed within the continental United States between points of origin within and points of exit from, and between points of entry into, and points of destination within, the continental United States with respect to such communications, or the transmission within the continental United States of messages which both originate and terminate outside but transit through the continental United States.

"(7) The terms 'domestic telegraph properties' and 'domestic telegraph facilities' mean properties and facilities, respectively, used or to be used in domestic telegraph operations.

"(8) The term 'employee' or 'employees' (i) shall include any individual who is absent from active service because of furlough, illness, or leave of absence, except that there shall be no obligation upon the consolidated carrier to reemploy any employee who is absent because of furlough, except in accordance with the terms of his furlough, and (ii) shall not include any employee of any carrier which is a party to a consolidation or merger pursuant to this section to the extent that he is employed in any business which such carrier continues to operate independently of the consolidation or merger.

"(9) The term 'representative' includes any individual or labor organization.

"(10) The term 'continental United States' means the several States and the District of Columbia.

"(b) (1) It shall be lawful, upon application to and approval by the Commission as hereinafter provided, for any two or more domestic telegraph carriers to effect a consolidation or merger; and for any domestic telegraph carrier, as a part of any such consolidation or merger or thereafter, to acquire all or any part of the domestic telegraph properties, domestic telegraph facilities, or domestic telegraph operations of any carrier which is not primarily a telegraph carrier:

Provided, That, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, no domestic telegraph carrier shall effect a consolidation or merger with any international telegraph carrier, and no international telegraph carrier shall effect a consolidation or merger with any domestic telegraph carrier.

"(2) As a part of any such consolidation or merger, or thereafter upon application to and approval by the Commission as hereinafter provided, the consolidated carrier may acquire all or any part of the domestic telegraph properties, domestic telegraph facilities, or domestic telegraph operations of any international telegraph carrier.

"(c) Whenever any transaction is proposed under subsection (b) of this section, the telegraph carrier or telegraph carriers seeking authority therefor shall submit an application to the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall order a public hearing to be held with respect to such application and shall give reasonable notice thereof, in writing, and an opportunity to be heard, to the Governor of each of the States in which any of the physical property involved in such proposed transaction is situated, to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of State, and to such other persons as the Commission may deem advisable. If, after such public hearing, the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions, and such modifications, as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed transaction, or an amended proposal with respect thereto, (1) is authorized by subsection (b) of this section, (2) conforms to all other applicable provisions of this section, and (3) is in the public interest, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing such transaction upon the terms and conditions, and with the modifications, so found to be just and reasonable, and thereupon any law or laws which would otherwise make such transaction unlawful shall not apply with respect thereto. In finding whether any proposed transaction is in the public interest, the Commission shall give due consideration, among other things, to the soundness of the plan and the corporate and financial structure of the consolidated carrier.

"(d) No proposed consolidation or merger of telegraph carriers pursuant to this section shall be approved by the Commission if, as a result of such consolidation or merger, more than one-fifth of the capital stock of any carrier which is subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission will be owned or controlled, or voted, directly or indirectly, (1) by any alien or the representative of any alien, (2) by any foreign government or the representative thereof, (3) by any corporation organized under the laws of any foreign government, or (4) by any corporation of which any officer or director is an alien, or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock is owned or controlled, or voted, directly or indirectly, by any alien or the representative of any alien, by any foreign government or the representative thereof, or by any corporation organized under the laws of a foreign government.

"(e) (1) In the case of any consolidation or merger of telegraph carriers pursuant to this section, the consolidated carrier shall, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, distribute among the international telegraph carriers, telegraph traffic by wire or radio destined to points without the continental United States, and divide the charges for such traffic, in accordance with such just, reasonable, and equitable formula in the public interest as the interested carriers shall agree upon and the Commission shall approve: Provided, however, That in case the interested carriers should fail to agree upon a formula which the Commission approves as above provided, the Commission, after due notice and hearing, shall prescribe in its order approving and authorizing the proposed consolidation or merger a formula which it finds will be just, reasonable, equitable, and in the public interest, will be, so far as is consistent with the public interest, in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers, and will effectuate the purposes of this subsection.

"(2) In the case of any consolidation or merger pursuant to this section of telegraph carriers which, immediately prior to such consolidation or merger, interchanged traffic with telegraph carriers in a contiguous foreign country, the consolidated carrier shall distribute among such foreign telegraph carriers, telegraph traffic by wire or radio destined to points in such contiguous foreign country and shall divide the charges therefor, in accordance with such just, reasonable, and equitable formula in the public interest as the interested carriers shall agree upon and the Commission shall approve: Provided, however, That in case the interested carriers should fail to agree upon a formula which the Commission approves as above provided, the Commission, after due notice and hearing, shall prescribe in its order approving and authorizing the proposed consolidation or merger a formula which it finds will be just, reasonable, equitable, and in the public interest, will be, so far as is consistent with the public interest, in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers, and will effectuate the purposes of this subsection. As used in this paragraph, the term 'contiguous foreign country' means Canada, Mexico, or Newfoundland.

"(3) Whenever, upon a complaint or upon its own initiative, and after a full hearing, the Commission finds that any such distribution of telegraph traffic among telegraph carriers, or any such division of charges for such traffic, which is being made or which is proposed to be made, is or will be unjust, unreasonable, or inequitable, or not in the public interest, the Commission shall by order prescribe the distribution of such telegraph traffic, or the division of charges therefor, which will be just, reasonable, equitable, and in the public interest, and will be, so far as is consistent with the public interest, in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers.

"(4) For the purposes of this subsection, the international telegraph operations of any domestic telegraph carrier shall be considered to be the operations of an independent international telegraph carrier, and the domestic telegraph operations of any international telegraph carrier shall be considered to be the operations of an independent domestic telegraph carrier.

"(f) (1) As a condition of its approval of any consolidation or merger under this section, the Commission shall require a fair and equitable arrangement, consistent with the provisions of this subsection, to protect the interests of the employees of any carrier which is a party to such consolidation or merger. In its order of approval the Commission shall include terms and conditions providing that during the period of 4 years from the date of such approval such consolidation or merger will not result in such employees being in a worse position with respect to their compensation or character of employment, except that the protection afforded to any employee pursuant to this sentence shall not be required to continue for a longer period, following such date of approval than the period during which such employee was in the employ of such carrier or carriers prior to such date of approval. As used in this paragraph the term 'compensation' shall not include compensation attributable to overtime not guaranteed by collective bargaining agreements.

"(2) For a period of 4 years after the date of approval of any such consolidation or merger, any employee of any carrier which is a party to such consolidation or merger who was such an employee on such date of approval, and who is discharged as a result of such consolidation or merger, shall have a preferential hiring and employment status for any position for which he is qualified by training and experience over any person who has not theretofore been an employee of any such carrier.

"(3) If any employee is transferred from one community to another, as a result of any such consolidation or merger, the carrier resulting therefrom shall pay, in addition to such employee's regular compensation as an employee of such carrier, the actual traveling expenses of such employee and his family, including the cost of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household goods and personal effects.

"(4) In the case of any consolidation or merger pursuant to this section, the consolidated carrier shall accord to every employee or former employee, or representative or beneficiary of an employee or former employee, of any carrier which is a party to such consolidation or merger, the same pension rights, and health, disability, or death insurance benefits, as were provided for, under comparable conditions, prior to the date of approval of the consolidation or merger, under any agreement or plan of any carrier which is a party to the consolidation or merger which covered the greatest number of the employees affected by the consolidation or merger; except that in any case in which, prior to the date of approval of the consolidation or merger, an individual has exercised his right of retirement, or any right to health, disability, or death insurance benefits has accrued, under any agreement or plan of any carrier which is a party to the consolidation or merger, pension rights, or health, disability, or death insurance benefits, as the case may be, shall be accorded in conformity with the agreement or plan under which such individual exercised such right of retirement or under which such right to benefits accrued. For purposes of determining and according the rights and benefits specified in this paragraph, any period spent in the employ of the carrier of which such individual was an employee at the time of the consolidation or merger shall be considered to have been spent in the employ of the consolidated carrier. The application for approval of any consolidation or merger under this section shall contain a guaranty by the proposed consolidated carrier that there will be no impairment of any of the rights or benefits specified in this paragraph.

"(5) Any employee who, since August 27, 1940, has left a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger, for the purpose of entering the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be considered to have been in the employ of such carrier during the time he is a member of such forces, and, upon making an application for employment with the consolidated carrier within 40 days from the time he is relieved from service in any of such forces under honorable conditions, such former employee shall be employed by the consolidated carrier and entitled to the benefits to which he would have been entitled if he had been employed by one of such carriers during all of such period of service with such forces; except that this paragraph shall not require the consolidated carrier, in the case of any such individual, to pay compensation, or to accord health, disability, or death insurance benefits, for the period during which he was a member of such forces. If any such former employee is disabled and because of such disability is no longer qualified to perform the duties of his former position but otherwise meets the requirements for employment, he shall be given such available employment at an appropriate rate of compensation as he is able to perform and to which his service credit shall entitle him.

"(6) No employee of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger shall, without his consent, have his compensation reduced, or be discharged or furloughed, in contemplation of such consolidation and merger, during the 6-month period immediately preceding the date of approval of such consolidation or merger.

"(7) Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the discharge of any employee for insubordination, incompetency, or any other similar cause.

"(8) All employees of any carrier resulting from any such consolidation or merger, with respect to their hours of employment, shall retain the rights provided by any collective bargaining agreement in force and effect upon the date of approval of such consolidation or merger until such agreement is terminated, executed, or superseded. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, any agreement not prohibited by law pertaining to the protection of employees may hereafter be entered into by such consolidated carrier and the duly authorized representative or representatives of its employees selected according to existing law.

"(9) For purposes of enforcement or protection of rights, privileges, and immunities granted or guaranteed under this subsection, the employees of any such consolidated carrier shall be entitled to the same remedies as are provided by the National Labor Relations Act in the case of employees covered by that act; and the National Labor Relations Board and the courts of the United States (including the courts of the District of Columbia) shall have jurisdiction and power to enforce and protect such rights, privileges, and immunities in the same manner as in the case of enforcement of the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act.

"(10) Nothing contained in this subsection shall apply to any employee of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger whose compensation is at the rate of more than $5,000 per annum.

"(g) The authority conferred by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and any carrier participating in or resulting from any transaction approved by the Commission under this section shall have full power to carry such transaction into effect without securing approval otherwise than as specified in this section."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN moves that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, they continue to tell you that unless we pass this bill to bail out these great investors the Government is going to have to take over the Postal Telegraph Co., and that we shall have Government ownership. As a matter of fact, every well-informed lawyer knows that, if that should occur, all the administration would do would be to appoint a receiver to carry on the enterprise until it could be straightened out, the water squeezed out, and the corporation reorganized.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. HALLECK. Does the gentleman believe a receiver could do any better job running this company, which is now running in the hole at the rate of $400,000 a month, than anyone else?

Mr. RANKIN. A receiver could do a great deal better job than is being asked here, for Congress to bail these people out of all these millions they have invested in watered stock, people who have never contributed anything to the operation of the company.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. I will yield for a question; yes.

Mr. BOREN. The gentleman does not imply by the use of the phrase "bail out" that this Government is going to put up any money, does he? Or that the Government is going to pay any money to anyone?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, they are using the Government here as shock troops. The American people will bail them out; they will pay this in additional rates that will be piled upon them. We had an illustration of this in the Associated Gas & Electric case. We did not merge Electric Bond & Share with Commonwealth & Southern; we appointed a receiver to squeeze the water out and to reorganize the company or to dispose of its property.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman from Oklahoma has raised a question in my mind: Is the $9,000,000 that has been advanced by the R. F. C. secured, or would R. F. C. under a receiver become a general creditor?

Mr. RANKIN. The best information I have been able to get from members of the committee who have spoken here is that we have a first lien.

Mr. BOREN. That is right.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman in his address to the House a while ago talked about the creation of a great monopoly and stated that the stock of both companies was owned by the same people.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; the gentleman wants now to sanctify that arrangement at the expense of the American people.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Please explain how you can have any more monopoly than you have if the same people run the two companies, anyway.

Mr. RANKIN. This bankrupt corporation should go through the same procedure as any other bankrupt corporation. You pass this bill and every time a railroad becomes bankrupt it will come here, especially where their preferred stock is owned by the same concern, and ask the Congress to provide that they may go into a railroad monopoly in order to be bailed out. They will come in and ask the Congress to pass a law to enable them to bail out and to pay these men, like the Lehman Bros.—and it is shown here that they are among the big stockholders—M. Loeb & Co., men of that character, who seem to indulge in speculation in watered stocks. You will be asked to pass a law to protect that merger or we will be threatened with Government ownership. There will be no governmental ownership if this bill fails to pass. Mr. Jones will simply appoint a receiver to squeeze the water out of these inflated valuations that the American people are now asked to pay interest and dividends on.

This is not a new trick, and I am not accusing the committee of anything. I think the members of that committee are more "sinned against than sinning."

This is the old trick of the corporations, the big corporations, that have been speculating in watered stocks ever since corporations have existed in this country.

The Ontario Power Commission does not have any water in its stock. We produce 12 times as much power in this country as they do. Twelve times what they have invested is a little less than $5,000,000,000, yet the private power interests in this country claim fourteen or fifteen billion dollars. You will find it is invariably the holding companies, just as those men at the top, that own the watered stocks and they contribute nothing to the success of the operation company.

This entire measure should be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, it may be absolutely useless for me to rise in opposition to this amendment to strike the enacting clause, for I realize just as a great many Members on the floor do that the gentleman from Mississippi has not studied this, does not know anything about it, and the only place he gets his information is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That is all he knows about it. He does not know even that in 1934 the Congress passed a law prohibiting interlocking directorates under section 12 of the Communications Act. That is the law today.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Committee to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, as it should be.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I do not yield.

Mr. RANKIN. But it does not prevent the holding of watered stock.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The motion was rejected.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARCANTONIO: Section 222 (d) on page 23 shall be amended as follows: On line 19, strike out the words "more than one-fifth" and insert the word "any"; and on page 24, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "more than one-fifth" and insert the word "any."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply substitutes the provision that there shall be no alien control of stocks in place of the existing provision which permits the control of one-fifth of the stock by aliens. This guarantees against any Axis penetration in our communications system.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. Chairman, may I point out that a considerable amount of this stock is owned by citizens of Great Britain, just as Americans own stock in some of the British-owned cable companies. This amendment would make it illegal for any citizen of Great Britain or France or any of our Allied Nations to own stock in this corporation or, if they did own this stock, it would prevent the merger. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed not only to the pending amendment but to the bill itself. I wonder how many of you gentlemen who sit here have considered the fact that you can go down to the Union Station with 150 pounds of baggage and be transported on a train that is powered by a locomotive which cost over $100,000, in a coach that is worth $35,000, manned by a crew of the highest paid railroad employees in the country, on a railroad that cost $25,000 per mile, for the little sum of 2 cents a mile plus the tax? You can be transported bodily for that. But if you want to talk over a wire strung on a pole for 3 minutes it costs you about a cent a mile. Is there any difference between those two classes of service?

I want to talk to you about one of the most hateful monopolies in America. I want to talk to you about the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. I want to talk to you about a system that takes a toll from every businessman in these United States. I want to talk to you about the phone that sits on your desk—two instruments on one wire—for which this Government is paying $2 a month rental. And besides is paying rental, if you please, on every little telephone gadget in the room—little loops of wire, switches, and connections.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Will the gentleman listen to me?

Mr. WHITE. No. I want to talk to you about one of the most profiteering monopolies in America. You have no competition in the telephone business. I will say for the information of this House that I am a telegraph operator—a Morse operator—and I know something about the telegraph business.

Keep these two companies competing. The telegraph companies provide the finest communication service in the country outside of the post office. In fact, the service we are receiving in the House Office Buildings and in the Capitol of the United States from these two telegraph companies is really better than the post office, as good as it is, because you can always find an operator or somebody to handle your business, even after the House post office is closed.

I think everybody knows the service we are getting from these two companies. Do you want to strike that down? Do you want to create another monopoly in this country, a communications monopoly? Communications is a natural monopoly, and we now have a little competition.

I hope the Members of the House will vote "no" on this bill and strangle one more monopoly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARCANTONIO: Page 26, line 18, strike out all of the language of subdivision (f) (1) and substitute the following:

"(f) (1) Each employee of any carrier which is a party to a consolidation or merger pursuant to this Act who was employed by such carrier at the time of the approval of such consolidation or merger, shall be employed by the carrier resulting from such consolidation or merger in the same community for a period of not less than 5 years from the date of the approval of such consolidation or merger at a rate of compensation and at a net weekly compensation not less than that received by such employee at the time of such approval, and, except with his consent, no such employee shall be assigned to work which is inconsistent with his past training and experience in the telegraph industry."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, my amendment seeks to do two things. First of all, I call your attention to the language of the bill at the bottom of page 26:

In its order of approval the Commission shall include terms and conditions providing that during the period of 4 years from the date of such approval such consolidation or merger will not result in such employees being in a worse position with respect to their compensation or character of employment.

My amendment makes that provision read 5 years instead of 4 years.

My amendment further guarantees against transfer. The omission of such a guaranty would permit the company to nullify the job-protection sections of the bill by requiring employees to uproot themselves from their present homes and move their families, bag and baggage, perhaps a thousand miles away. As the section presently reads in the bill, an employee living in Miami, Fla., could be told that under the guaranties provided in this bill he was entitled to continued employment and that a job was open for him in Seattle, Wash.

It is clearly evident that the payment of travel expenses would not compensate an employee for such a drastic upheaval in his life. Rather than give up family, cherished relationships, familiar environment, perhaps even a home which he might have acquired after years of saving, it is quite conceivable that workers confronted with such an alternative would be compelled to leave the employ of the merged company.

Therefore, by the mere offering of undesirable transfers it would be possible for the company to reduce the number of employees to whom these protective provisions would apply.

In other words, this bill seeks to protect the employees for a period of 4 years. It states that the company must keep the employees for a period of 4 years. However, all the company needs to do to vitiate that provision is simply to say to an employee who is working in the city of Washington, "Yes; we are going to keep you on 4 years, but you will have to work at our office in Seattle." The employee cannot accept that employment; that is very obvious. This is a loophole in the bill to destroy the protection which the committee intended to give the employee in the bill. I cannot see any objection to plugging that loophole and guaranteeing that the company will not abuse the right given it by this legislation by sending employees from one city to another, thereby vitiating the protection afforded the employee in the bill.

It is a fair proposal that I am making here. It is merely carrying out the intent of the provision of the bill as reported by the committee. It guarantees to the employee what you propose to give to him. Unless you guarantee against transfer, the 4-year tenure you give the employee will mean nothing, because by allowing the company to transfer him from one city to another, the guaranty you seek to give the worker could be completely destroyed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it may be well to call to the attention of the House what this amendment really does. In the first place, the gentleman from New York omits the words which would require the Commission to require a fair and equitable arrangements consistent with the provisions of this subsection to protect the interests of the employees.

Then, on the other hand, he does this: He says that every employee, no matter how long he might have worked prior to the merger, whether 1 day or 1 month or 1 year, would be guaranteed a job for 5 years in the community in which he lived at the time of the merger; and, further, that he would be guaranteed the same wages paid him at the time the merger went into effect, although we all know that the man might be getting overtime at the rate of time and a half.

I simply call that to your attention. It is no use for me to discuss it, because it is a violation of the policy we adopted in the Interstate Commerce Act of 1940. I ask that you vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 214 (a) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 214. (a) No carrier shall undertake the construction of a new line or of an extension of any line, or shall acquire or operate any line, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transmission over or by means of such additional or extended line, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction, or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line: Provided, That no such certificate shall be required under this section for the construction, acquisition, or operation of (1) a line within a single State unless such line constitutes part of an interstate line, (2) local, branch, or terminal lines not exceeding 10 miles in length, or (3) any line acquired under section 221 or 222 of this act: Provided further, That the Commission may, upon appropriate request being made, authorize temporary or emergency service, or the supplementing of existing facilities, without regard to the provisions of this section. No carrier shall discontinue service to a community, or part of a community, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that neither the present nor future public convenience and necessity will be adversely affected thereby; except that the Commission may, upon appropriate request being made, authorize temporary or emergency discontinuance of service, or partial discontinuance of service, without regard to the provisions of this section. As used in this section the term 'line' means any channel of communication established by the use of appropriate equipment, other than a channel of communication established by the interconnection of two or more existing channels: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed to require a certificate or other authorization from the Commission for any installation, replacement, or other changes in plant, operation, or equipment, other than new construction, which will not impair the adequacy or quality of service provided."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to tell the Members a few things about the telephones in their own offices, and the only reason I am doing so is to make a comparison between the competition that exists between the two telegraph companies, and the monopolistic methods of a communication system that does not have any competition. In the first place the telephone in your own office costs for each instrument a dollar a month rental, and every little loop of wire, every little switch and gadget in your office is placed there on a rental basis. In addition to the dollar a month, you pay a rental for a long line of switchboards, and hire some 40 or 50 switch operators, just to handle the telephone calls in your own office in the Capitol Building, and you pay for that, not the telephone company. And then you pay a toll of 3 to 5 cents for every call that goes out of your office. I took the pains to look into this matter. I knew that we were being charged outrageously, but I was surprised that on a dead equipment in which we must furnish all of the manpower except a few fellows that may repair a wire once in awhile, and pay $85,000 a year here in this Capitol Building and in the Senate and House Office Buildings—$85,000 a year, and when you think a Member cannot put through 1 mile of long-distance call on that bill, when you think of the staggering amount the telephone company is taking out of these other Government departments in Washington, I say to you that it is colossal, and if there is any place in the United States where the Government ought to go into the communications business, it is right here in the District of Columbia, in interdepartmental work.

You can talk about easing taxes with Government debts that we cannot pay, with a thing like that going on, and money scooped out of the taxpayer's pockets by this telephone monopoly. Do you know that down here in one of these apartment hotels in which I have to live, it costs me 10 cents a call on every call I put out of the building, and a dollar rental for the instrument, and then they have the nerve to come around and say that if I would pay them a dollar and a half extra they will carry my name in the telephone book, and I simply told them to go to hell. I have a friend who has an apartment, and he has to pay a dollar and a half for an instrument, but as the toll on the calls that he makes at that rate is higher he had to have a special phone, and now he must pay a rental on the regular phone in his room on the circuit, and he must pay an extra dollar for the idle phone. To change a name on their list for the idle phone you must pay the cost of a new installation. That is the way the business of this great monopoly is conducted, and that is what you are trying to saddle on the people under this bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. No. I am trying to get a wireless message to this House. Do you know that the telephone company has managed to get a clause in the law that in a broadcast you must not address another person. The Governor of the great State of Idaho prepared an address, a radio address, and because there was some party addressed in it, it was a violation of law, and the record had to be destroyed. They have provided that there will be no competition of radio with the telephone. Let us have a little competition in the form that exists today in the telegraph business between the Western Union and the Postal.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Speaking of a telephone monopoly, I call attention to the fact that we would never have gotten a reduction in rates from the telephone company in long-distance charges except that the Justice Department has almost forced the telephone company to give that reduction.

Mr. WHITE. Every doctor in this country, every lawyer, every professional man is loaded up with a telephone charge that is staggering and outrageous. Let us change it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARCANTONIO: Section 2 of S. 158 shall be amended, as follows:

Under section 214 (a) on page 32, strike out the words "no carrier shall discontinue service" on line 21.

Strike out all of lines 22, 23, 24, and 25.

On page 33, strike out all of lines 1 to 13, inclusive, and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) No carrier shall abandon a line, plant, office, or other physical facility, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the abandonment of such line, plant, office, or other physical facility: Provided, That the Commission shall not issue a certificate of public convenience for any abandonment, the effect of which would be to increase the load on remaining facilities to an extent which would reduce the quality of service below standards established by the Commission.

"(2) Upon receipt of an application for any such certificate, the Commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to and a copy filed with the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Governor of each State in which the abandonment of any line, plant, office, or other physical facility is proposed, and to all parties in interest, with the right of those notified to be heard; and the Commission may require such published notice as it shall determine.

"(3) The Commission shall have power to issue such certificate as prayed for, or to refuse to issue it, or to issue it for a portion or portions of a line, plant, office, or other physical facility described in the application, or for the partial exercise only of such right or privilege, and may attach to the issuance of the certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require. After issuance of such certificate, and not before, the carrier may, without securing approval other than such certificate, comply with the terms and conditions contained in or attached to the issuance of such certificate and proceed with the construction, acquisition, operation, or extension covered thereby. Any abandonment of a line, plant, office, or other physical facility contrary to the provisions of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Commission, the State commission, any State affected, or any party in interest."

The title of section 214 in the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, shall be amended to read "Extension and Abandonment of Lines."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly to take the time of the Committee by offering these amendments, but I have been offering them on behalf of labor, organized labor, which is so vitally affected by this bill. The jobs of workers are placed in jeopardy. To them this legislation means everything. I do hope you will give me your attention on this last amendment that I am offering, because it goes to the very heart of the bill. I call attention to the committee report on the question of the abandonment of facilities and to the fact that the Senate had the following language in the bill. The Senate prohibited, without the approval of the Federal Communications Commission, the abandonment of any line, plant, office, or other physical facility. In other words, before the new corporation could abandon any facility, any line or office, it would have to obtain the consent of the Federal Communications Commission. That is what the Senate provided. The committee struck that out and substituted a provision that they could not abandon service to a community without the Commission's approval.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Or a part of a community.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Or a part of a community. What does that mean? That leaves the whole situation wide open. Suppose this company has four offices in a city and they abandon three of them. They do not require the consent of the Federal Communications Commission to abandon three, under the provisions of this bill. Why? Because they can contend that with the remaining one they are giving service to a community or to a part of a community. And you establish nothing in the bill to prevent such a construction.

I cannot understand why the House committee struck out the language of the Senate bill. I cannot understand why they struck out the language that was air-tight, an absolute guarantee against the abandonment of facilities without Government consent. Here we take out the guarantee and we substitute this language which leaves the field wide open for abandonment of facilities.

Now, remember, this will hit back. It will hit back when your constituents and mine are going to complain to us because of the bad service and the lack of real service which will take place by the exploitation of this new provision inserted in this bill.

Therefore I still ask the question, Why did you not leave the Senate language in that bill? I challenge the committee to explain that particular point. Why did you not leave the Senate language, which was airtight and an absolute guaranty against abandonment without the consent of the Government? You took away that airtight provision and you left in a provision which is open for debate, open for construction, wide open, to deprive the public of the essential service that is needed, and deprive the country of the service needed, particularly in time of war.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In support of the gentleman's statement, is it not true that any railroad company or any common carrier, rail, freight, highway or water, must obtain the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission before the abandonment of service?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That is my understanding, but by this legislation as long as the company says they are giving service to a community or part of a community they do not have to obtain approval for the discontinuance of service. In other words, if they have four offices in a town and they take away three and leave one, they would say, "That one is giving service to the community or part of the community and it is not necessary to go to the Commission to obtain permission to discontinue the other three," irrespective of whether or not the people of that town needed the other three.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Practically every provision contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] is taken care of in the original bill. The only difference of opinion seems to be over the abandonment of some physical property or some real estate. The committee, in considering this merger, came to the unanimous conclusion that the thing the American public is interested in, and the thing that Congress is interested in, is the continuance and maintenance of adequate service to each and every community and every part of every community. I do not believe that the Congress or the country is interested in whether the telegraph company should abandon or take out a certain insulator or pole or even close down one office, if the community is adequately served by another office. The only thing that the Congress and the country is interested in is adequate service.

Let me point out what I mean by that. All of you who know downtown Washington know that the Postal Telegraph Co. has an office next door to the Western Union Telegraph Co. in the National Press Club Building. If this amendment is adopted the merged companies would have to keep both offices open until an application was made to the Commission, and permission was given to close one of these offices.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy would have to come into the picture also.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is right. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy would have to approve the closing of the office, where only one single wall divides the two rooms.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Assuming that what the gentleman says is true, why object to having the consent of the Communications Commission, and since we are at war, why object to obtaining the consent of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy? It is not going to harm this company to go before the Federal Communications Commission and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to obtain permission. It is the only way by which the public can be protected.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Now, I did not yield for a speech. I yielded for a question. The answer to the question is simply this, that under the gentleman's amendment the company would have to go to the Commission and to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in order to change any physical equipment whatscever, and under the original provisions of this bill as the committee reported it out the company could not take away any service. In order to change the service in any way they would have to apply to the Commission and get its consent

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BOREN. Under the gentleman's amendment, if they wanted to simply move a wire from one House Office Building to the other, by way of example, they would have to go through the endless red tape of application and hearings and a certificate on the part of the Commission?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And have the consent of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in addition.

Mr. BOREN. Is it not true also that the service itself would not be protected under the gentleman's amendment? They could abandon three-fourths of the service without abandoning any of this physical property because of the so-called secret coil system of expanding many communications over a single wire, so the gentleman would defeat the purpose he has in mind if his amendment were adopted?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman is entirely correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARE: On page 32, at the end of line 11, insert "Provided such carrier shall be required to construct necessary lines to establish and maintain an office at every county seat with 2,000 or more population located within the territory served by such carrier."

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, you will notice that this amendment is intended to effect the very opposite of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York; instead of preventing the discontinuance of service we are endeavoring to establish new services in those communities that do not have it.

A few years ago I had the privilege of introducing a bill somewhat similar to this amendment, because I learned that a good many towns in the United States, ranging from 1,500 to 3,500 population, had a kind of makeshift telegraph system or facilities. The telegraph company operating in the vicinity would establish an office in an adjoining town or a town 20 or 30 miles away, abandon the office in the first town and then expect the people to telephone their messages to the adjoining town. This required the people to pay a telephone charge in addition to the charge for the telegram. I do not know how true it is, but at that time the charge was made that there was an agreement, possibly collusion between the telegraph companies and the telephone companies to the effect that the telegraph companies would abandon offices because they could save clerk hire and increase the telephone business by requiring the person sending the telegram pay the telephone message to the point where a telegraph office was maintained. This amendment attempts to obviate that possibility to some extent. It would require the new company under the merger to establish and maintain an office not in every town but in every county seat with a population of 2,000 or more. I cannot conceive of a town of 2,000 or more people that cannot well support a telegraph office, nor can I conceive why the Congress in passing legislation of this character cannot protect those people and require the new company to establish an office in county seats of 2,000 people, obviating the necessity for the people to pay a telephone charge of 25 to 50 cents in order to send a telegram. I am anxious to see the amendment approved before I consent to support the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. With great pleasure.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I understand that under this bill it is proposed to take care of all those who are working for the Postal Co. That is true, is it not?

Mr. HARE. That is my interpretation of the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. If that is true, has the gentleman figured out how the Western Union can continue those people in employment and still undertake to set up the new offices he contemplates?

Mr. HARE. Yes; these few new offices will aid in caring for those Postal employees where there are two offices in the same town, because one of them can be discontinued under this bill and the new offices will provide work for them. However, the gentleman does not expect me to answer the question as to how the Western Union can make the money, because I am satisfied we both know the Western Union will be amply able to take care of itself. I imagine they are in favor of this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Like the gentleman, I, too, want to help these small communities. I want these Postal offices kept open also.

Mr. HARE. I assume this will be done except in cases in small towns where they are now competitors. In that event one will probably be closed. This amendment serves two purposes: One is it insures the people residing in these county seats of 2,000 or more population telegraph facilities without having to pay extra for telephone charges, and it obviates possibility of collusion between the telegraph company and the telephone company to promote their own interests by eliminating telegraph in small towns while the telephone people in the adjoining town get the advantage of the increased rate required for the delivery of the telegram.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina states that he has two purposes in offering his amendment. The main purpose is the serving of the three county seats in his district.

Mr. HARE. Well, that is enough.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is just the point I wanted to find out.

Mr. HARE. Three in one district would mean from twelve to fifteen hundred throughout the United States.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I just wanted to find out what the underlying motive was; that is all.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I wonder if the gentleman would insist also on an amendment to provide that main-line railroads run through all county seats, too?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I cannot answer that. I doubt if the gentleman from South Carolina has read the bill in its entirety. I read the new language of section 214 (d):

SEC. 5. Section 214 (d) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) The Commission may, after full opportunity for hearing, in a proceeding upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, authorize or require by order any carrier, party to such proceeding, to provide itself with adequate facilities for the expeditious and efficient performance of its service as a common carrier and to extend its line or to establish a public office."

Under the very language of the bill itself a community can get service if it is entitled to it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us take this case: Suppose we establish a new defense town of 10,000 people; under the language read by the gentleman the Authority can force the united company to give the service, can it not?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; it can.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] said a moment ago that if this merger went through there would be no towns of this size that would not have service. If you want to guarantee the present service to all these towns, kill this bill. If the owners who control the Postal Telegraph Co. then undertake to fold it up, the Government will appoint a receiver and see that this service is carried on and that these towns are all provided with the service.

They tell you that this will not eliminate any employees. Then what are they trying to do? Are they going to employ all the same employees? What are they trying to do? To bail out, as I said before, those men at the top who own these inflated bonds, debentures, and watered stocks, who are in control, and they are the ones who have control of an invisible directorate over these corporations.

If you vote the entire bill down, and if they undertake to fold it up, the Government will then appoint a receiver to see that this concern is operated, that it is reorganized, and instead of bailing out these people who have invested in these inflated valuations, the company will continue to give the same service they are giving now to all the American people.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD. We are going to cut down the rates in this bill. Is not part of this bill to give the railroads a cut or a reduction, if we reduce these rates?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. They propose in this bill as written to raise the rates that the Government will have to pay on Government telegrams at a time when, I submit, if you will squeeze all of the surplus water out of these holdings, these rates could not only be held where they are but reduced 50 percent and probably 75 percent. As I said a moment ago, if this outfit owned the Post Office System it would cost you 25 cents to send a postal card from Washington to Baltimore, it would cost $1.75 to send a postal card from Washington to Omaha, Nebr., and it would cost $1 to send a postal card from here to my home in Mississippi. These rates could be drastically reduced if you would squeeze the water out of these alleged holdings, these mushroom investments that have no place in here and that contribute nothing to the legitimate operation of these companies. Then you will not throw people out of employment and you will not take away from these small towns the services that they have and that legitimate competition, the only thing they have been able to rely on up to date to hold rates down to where they are now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE.]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARE) there were—ayes 32, noes 113.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Section 214 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Upon receipt of an application for any such certificate, the Commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to, and shall cause a copy of such application to be filed with, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Governor of each State in which such line is proposed to be constructed, extended, acquired, or operated, or in which such discontinuance of service is proposed, with the right to those notified to be heard; and the Commission may require such published notice as it shall determine."

SEC. 4. Section 214 (c) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Commission shall have power to issue such certificate as applied for, or to refuse to issue it, or to issue it for a portion or portions of a line, or extension thereof, or discontinuance of service, described in the application, or for the partial exercise only of such right or privilege, and may attach to the issuance of the certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require. After issuance of such certificate, and not before, the carrier may, without securing approval other than such certificate, comply with the terms and conditions contained in or attached to the issuance of such certificate and proceed with the construction, extension, acquisition, operation, or discontinuance of service covered thereby. Any construction, extension, acquisition, operation, or discontinuance of service contrary to the provisions of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Commission, the State commission, any State affected, or any party in interest."

SEC. 5. Section 214 (d) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) The Commission may, after full opportunity for hearing, in a proceeding upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, authorize or require by order any carrier, party to such proceeding, to provide itself with adequate facilities for the expeditious and efficient performance of its service as a common carrier and to extend its line or to establish a public office; but no such authorization or order shall be made unless the Commission finds, as to such provision of facilities, as to such establishment of public offices, or as to such extension, that it is reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, or as to such extension or facilities that the expense involved therein will not impair the ability of the carrier to perform its duty to the public. Any carrier which refuses or neglects to comply with any order of the Commission made in pursuance of this paragraph shall forfeit to the United States $100 for each day during which such refusal or neglect continues."

SEC. 6. Section 5266 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 47, sec. 3), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5266. Telegrams between the several departments of the Government and their officers and agents, relating exclusively to the public business, in their transmission over the lines of any telegraph company to which has been given the right-of-way, timber, or station lands from the public domain shall have priority over all other business. No part of any appropriation for the several departments of the Government shall be paid to any company which neglects or refuses to transmit such telegrams in accordance with the provisions of this section. No telegraph company shall, by reason of any benefit received under any provision of the Post Roads Act of July 24, 1866, as amended, be required to transmit such telegrams at rates less than those applicable to other telegrams in the same classes."

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. POAGE: On page 36, line 1, after the period, strike out all the remainder of line 1 and lines 2, 3, 4, and 5.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, the words stricken by my amendment are "No telegraph company shall, by reason of any benefit received under any provision of the Post Roads Act of July 24, 1866, as amended, be required to transmit such telegrams at rates less than those applicable to other telegrams in the same classes."

The effect of those words, which are now in this bill, is simply to wipe out the differential in favor of the United States Government. This is the same principle that this committee has brought before us several times in the past in regard to the railroad land-grant rates.

The Federal Government has given to the telegraph companies, and particularly to the Western Union Telegraph Co., certain rights and privileges, including certain properties, for which the Government was to receive an advantage in the telegraph rates on those messages sent in Government business. The sole purpose of this provision of the bill is to take that advantage away from the United States Government.

This bill starts out on the assumption that it will create an absolute monopoly of the telegraph business. This bill places all telegraph business in the hands of one company, giving that company the advantage of a Nation-wide monopoly of the business. If granted the monopoly created by this bill, giving all of the business in the country to one company, it will obviously make it a profitable business venture. We are told that they are already making a profit. We have the statement of the members of the committee here this afternoon that the Western Union Telegraph Co. is solvent and is making money today. It is proposed by this bill to give this company all of the business of the United States both public and private and then, rather than reduce the rate, which is what we could reasonably expect, if we give them that sort of advantage, it is proposed to give this one company not only the monopoly, not only all of the private business of this Nation, but to give it an increase of 40 percent in the rates that the Government pays.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Will the gentleman tell us how much that 40 percent amounts to?

Mr. POAGE. The United States Government spent approximately $6,000,000 for telegraph tolls last year. That is not this fiscal year, but the last fiscal year. I do not know how high it will be this year, because the number of Government messages is increasing very rapidly. If you add 40 percent to $6,000,000, you will find that it will be approximately $10,000,000. Or rather I should put it this way: The present rates paid by the Government are only 60 percent of the commercial rates. This change would add considerably more than 40 percent to the present bill. The present cost to the Government, $6,000,000, is only 60 percent of what the same messages would cost if this bill should be passed without this amendment.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. That is a 40-percent discount.

Mr. POAGE. Yes; and it runs to nearly $4,000,000 per year.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. That will simply increase the receipts of the Western Union Co. that much more.

Mr. POAGE. All of it would go to Western Union, and it would give Western Union all the business the Postal Telegraph Co. is now getting. Approximately $4,000,000 of new Government money would simply be given to the Western Union by reason of the fact that they would become the greatest monopoly in the telegraph field the world has ever known. In other words, the bigger you get, the more you can charge; the more powerful you are the more you can squeeze the little man. That is the way it always works.

But I have never before seen a committee bring in a report that brazenly said that they proposed to subsidize monopoly. But here is a committee telling us that "we have created a monopoly and to prove to you that we let them get their claws around the necks of the people, we first fasten the fangs of this monopoly on the throat of the United States Government." What do you expect for the poor little citizen, the person living out in one of the county seats for which the gentleman from South Carolina is trying to get service? What do you expect for the individual when the committee itself says, "We do not have the power to resist this great monopoly"? What can you expect for the people when the committee wants to increase the charges this monopoly would assess against the United States Government?

Mr. Chairman, this thing reeks with the proposition that somebody is going to dig the people of the United States, and the first one to suffer under the present terms of this bill is the United States Government.

Read the report. On page 11 you will find the report of this committee explaining this proposal. If you can find one single, solitary reason in that printed report justifying this proposal, I will stand here and apologize to this House and vote the other way. The committee may have some reasons for this gift at Government expense, but they have not put any such reasons in the report. They have not dared to write it down in black and white and tell you why they want to give the Western Union Telegraph such an unheard-of monopoly, such an opportunity to increase the money it is taking out of the United States Government, and particularly at a time when the telegraph business is greater than it has ever been in the entire history of the country. The Government business is growing by leaps and bounds. Presumably, under the general law of economics, when business is handling such a greatly increased volume of business, the cost per unit should be reduced, but, instead of that, the volume of business goes up to the sky but the unit cost is to be deliberately increased by this provision of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we will recall what this committee has sought to have us do in behalf of the railroads. We have been asked to give the railroads all that the Government received in return for the land grants given them by the Government. Let us not do the same thing with the telegraph monopoly which this bill establishes.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that I do not conceive this particular matter to be fundamental to the purposes of this bill. Whether or not this particular paragraph is stricken out has no relation to the real problem of merger. The merger provisions of this bill, all preceding the section the gentleman proposes to strike out, settle the question of whether or not we want the Government in this field as a competitor of private enterprise or whether we prefer to have this business in the hands of regulated private enterprise.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD. Does the Government take over every bank that goes broke, or does it take over every railroad that goes broke? Why should it take this over?

Mr. BOREN. The Government does not own a majority of the valuation of every bank that goes broke.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. This bill does not provide for the Government's taking over Postal Telegraph, it provides for the merger of Postal with another private company. The only danger of the Government's having to take Postal over arises from its continually putting $400,000 a month into that company.

Mr. BOREN. The gentleman refers to the loans we have made and are continually making, which would eventually make the Government the complete owner of this company.

On this particular question, the amount of money involved is something near $3,000,000 a year. It will cost the American public by way of paying taxes to support Government appropriations aproximately $3,000,000 a year to erase this discrimination. If we maintain this discrimination, it simply means that $3,000,000 a year will continue to be charged up to the paying public as an indirect tax.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If my memory is correct, the total amount involved would be $1,121,000 per year. That would be the highest figure.

Mr. BOREN. The gentleman has preceded me on a point I was about to make. Back in 1866, for no real material privileges that we were able to find out about but because it was an established precedent in other legislation, the Government simply saddled on to this particular type of company the burden of carrying the Government business at that reduced rate, 60 percent of the normal cost. Of course, some things such as poles and construction rights were provided, but so far as I know not to any extent ever utilized.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOREN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Is it not a fact that the Government at that time did give these telegraph companies the right to go onto the public land and cut their poles without one penny of expense, that it did give them the rights-of-way they needed without any expense to them, that it did give them the land they needed to put their buildings on, that it did give them the physical assets of land and allow them to use the public domain from which to get the property they needed with which to build their lines?

Mr. BOREN. The gentleman is in error on a number of those points.

Mr. POAGE. Which ones?

Mr. BOREN. About the cutting of the poles I do not know, but these companies as far as I know do not own a single foot of land by way of right-of-way. Their rights-of-way are permissive clear down to the county commissioners' districts in which they operate. Each county commission or board can refuse to give them a right-of-way in any county over which it has jurisdiction, if it wants to. It is a question of easement not acquisition of land.

Going back to the point involved, if you take into consideration the bookkeeping cost, the red tape, and the dual expense to the Government alone, the net saving to the Government would be reduced to $1,121,000. It is a matter of principle as I see it. Why should any Government clerk have special rates not accorded to the public. It is the public that pays for that privilege. Should a bureaucrat be able to send wires to another bureaucrat without limit at special privileged rates when a mother wiring her son in the service has to pay in full.

I do not believe that a wire from Madam Perkins to John L. Lewis should be given a rate not accorded a wire between a mother and her son. That matter of principle I believe is involved and it is a privilege that the bureaucrats misuse and prostitute endlessly.

Why should the bureaus be privileged thus. I do not think it is important in this bill but I do think the provision is sound.

Then, of course, you are also requiring that double bookkeeping red-tape system on the part of the company.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to disagree with my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] on this section of this important bill, but since so much debate has occurred on what the act of July 24, 1866, really said, I think it would be in point to read it to the House at this time. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any telegraph company now organized, or which may hereafter be organized under the laws of any State in this Union, shall have the right to construct, maintain and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been or may hereafter be declared such by Act of Congress, and over, under, or across navigable streams or waters of the United States: Provided, That such lines of telegraph shall be so constructed and maintained as not to obstruct the navigation of such streams and waters, or interfere with the ordinary travel on such military or post roads. And any of said companies shall have the right to take and use from such public lands the necessary stone, timber and other materials for its posts, piers, stations, and other needful uses in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said lines of telegraph, and may preempt and use such portion of the unoccupied public lands subject to preemption through which its lines of telegraph may be located as may be necessary for its stations, not exceeding 40 acres for each station; but such stations shall not be within 15 miles of each other.

I say that this was more than an idle and meaningless gesture by the 1866 Congress in making the deal with the telegraph companies. I believe that when the 1866 Congress passed this law they knew what they were doing. I believe that they entered into a fair and square deal with the then young telegraph companies. Both were to gain by the deal.

The telegraph companies were, as I have read, enabled to obtain their rights-of-way, the poles, the stone, and even 40 acres of land every 15 miles along the line for stations—all free of cost to the telegraph companies for the enterprise. Some of these lines spanned the Nation, much across the public domain.

The Congress, wisely I believe, provided that they were to insure for the United States Government certain privileges, too. This principal one was that the Government would be entitled to certain preferred reduced rates on the official Government business handled by these telegraph companies.

Now, as we grant to the Western Union the right to absorb the Postal Telegraph Co., and thereby have a profitable monopoly on telegraph transmission, I hardly feel it behooves us to waive the right that the Government has to these telegraph rate reductions on its own military and official Government business.

Further, the testimony before the committee reveals that the Federal Government is the biggest user of telegraph service in the country. Surely, this great volume of official business should entitle the Government to a better rate than the person who sends one or two telegrams a year.

It is said that the telegraph companies are poor—but so is Uncle Sam just now. Because of this forthright deal made in 1866, because of the volume of business given the companies by the Government, I feel that the Government is entitled to 40 percent reduction in its special rate and that we, as a Congress, should not authorize the waiving of this right at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am rather surprised that my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] should assume that we are guilty of fraud in this. Let us realize the situation; let us get down to it. The United States Government pays for the full telephone message always. In the telegraph company they pay for 60 percent of the cost of the message. Long, long years ago if anything was given to the telegraph companies by the Government, the Government has reaped the benefit since that time. Is it right that we should sit here and say to this company, "You have got to do this even though it is a loss to you," and there is a loss on the Government telegrams. For instance, in the year 1941 the total operating revenue of the Western Union Co. was $107,165,290. The total net income was $7,053,733. There is bound to be a loss on it at that rate. It is a question whether this House is going to do as the Senate did. The Senate, after deliberation, twice reported from the committee and twice passed the bill in the Senate.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. Am I correct in understanding that this 60-percent rate is not fixed by law but is fixed by the Federal Communications Commission under the Communications Act of 1934, and that the Commission could change the rate if it desired to do so and make it 90 percent or 85 percent or any other percent, if it so desired?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I could not answer that, but I do not think so.

Mr. TARVER. Let me read the law to the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I wish the gentleman would not take up my time.

Mr. TARVER. I am going to ask that the gentleman's time be extended for a minute or two so that I may get some information. In the gentleman's report he sets out the existing law which reads:

Telegrams between the several departments of the Government and their officers and agents, in their transmission over the lines of any telegraph company to which has been given the right-of-way, timber, or station lands from the public domain shall have priority over all other business at such rate as the Federal Communications Commission shall annually fix.

That is the present law. It is all in the discretion of the Federal Communications Commission, and why can we not leave it there?

Mr. BULWINKLE. They have to give them priority. It is a question of law. It is just a question of what is right, what this House should do in the circumstances. I am going to ask you to support the committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I readily recognize that this is the sort of amendment that may appeal to a great many members, particularly if they have not thought the whole proposition through. Probably for some reasons it might be just as well for some of us on our side of the argument to keep quiet and say nothing. But let us look at the principle involved.

Here is a utility that is performing a service for the public. Its customers include not only the United States Government, but private citizens who are taxpayers of the country. It is under the regulation of a commission which is charged with fixing rates. That commission is charged with fixing the rates at a point which shall bring about a fair return to the company, to the end that the service may be performed, operating charges made, and a fair return paid to the people who own and operate it. Rates should be no higher than that. I say that is the theory of governmental regulation of utilities, and it should be the practice. As I said earlier in the afternoon, if it is not the practice, if it does not work out in fact, it is the fault of the regulating body and not the fault of the industry.

Now we start with the proposition that a certain amount of funds must be available to the telegraph company to transmit these messages, public and private. It seems to me inevitable that if you reduce the rate to the government 40 percent—that is, 40 percent below the regularly established rate—immediately it becomes necessary for the private user of that facility to pay an added amount on his messages to make up the deficit that results from the reduced rate to the Government. Now, what is the end result of that? The result is that instead of assessing the taxpayers of the country generally to pay for this service rendered to the Government, as we do all through our governmental operations, with a few exceptions—and this is one of them—we, in effect, tax and assess individuals, private businesses, and industries which happen to have occasion to use the telegraph service to help pay for the service that is rendered the Government.

In other words, if this bill prevails as it is written and the Government pays the same rate as the average citizen pays, then if the regulation is effective the whole rate should come down, to the end that the private user of the telegraph service would pay a lesser rate, and whatever added expense to the Government there would be would come out of the taxpayers generally, rather than out of the private users of the same service.

I have listened to the arguments about Government economy. Without challenging anyone, may I say that I have stood here and fought for economy in Government expenditures when some of the people who contend so vigorously for this particular sort of economy seemed to be absent. But I say it is the sort of economy that cannot be justified.

They go clear back to 1866 to talk about a few telegraph poles or a little land or something of that sort that might have been given to or used by the telegraph companies. Could we on that alone set up in perpetuity the right on the part of Government to demand a 40-percent reduction in telegraph rates, knowing that the burden would be thereby shifted to private users? If you can justify a 40-percent reduction, why don't you go all the way and say, "Mr. Government, you can send your telegrams for nothing. We will take all of it out of the increased charges to the private people who are also using these services."

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has suggested to us that perhaps some of us have not thought this entirely through. I only want to say that when I see a bill of this nature that conveys a $3,000,000 annual gift to the Western Union Telegraph Co. I do not need to think very long about it.

I realize that the Government has been entitled for a long time to this credit for sending telegrams at 40 percent less than the regular tariff rates. I realize that up until 1939 the Government sent telegrams at 60 percent less than the regular rates, but in order to help the companies out it has been changed to a discount of 40 percent. I submit to you on a purely economic basis that is good business for the telegraph company. The Government is the largest user of telegrams that this company will ever see. The Government sends not one telegram to a single place, but frequently the Office of Price Administration or some other agency sends a chain telegram, 50 or 500, or in one case of the old W. P. A. 1,900 telegrams at a single shot. I say to you that the government, doing a business of that nature, ought to have a quantity discount. We are entitled to it, and we ought to demand it and have it.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. The gentleman was not very liberal about yielding, but I will yield to him.

Mr. HALLECK. Is the gentleman in favor of setting up, in the matter of rates charge i by utilities, a quantity discount? I thought we fought for years in this country to get rid of that.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I think if you will look at any gas rate or any electric light rate there are frequently power blocks set aside whereby the large users of power get a reduction. I think that is customarily true.

Mr. BROOKS. In the classification of what is a fair rate, the charge as set by the Communications Commission—as a matter of fact has not the property which was given by the Government to this company been capitalized in the fair rate?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. The gentleman from Louisiana is entirely correct. As I was going to point out, it is not just a question of a few poles or of going out in some quarry and digging some rock; those things have all been set up as franchise values in the financial statement of Western Union years ago—set up to give value to its preferred stock and other issues—and the Government and the private users of its service have been paying on that for years and years and years.

I desire to point out also that there is a recognition of the right of a large user to a quantity discount in the fact that the press associations of this country are given special press rates. If you wish to send a press telegram from Washington to San Francisco, you do not send it at regular commercial rates; you send it at night press rates collect, or night press rate paid, and it is substantially below what other persons have to pay. Nobody objects to that; nobody talks about that; Western Union does not want to cut it out. They want only to take annually $3,000,000 of sucker money away from the American Government.

The president of the Western Union had the courage to testify before the committee. You ought to read what he said on page 74, where he talks about this land. He said that the act of 1866 never conferred any property rights; and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] told you how they used to get their poles and rock and material. He told you of the rights to use tracts of public land. Yet the president of Western Union would have you believe that the act never conferred any property rights. Go on to page 84 and you will see what the president of the Postal Telegraph Co. said. Read his testimony. He said the Government service was costing them money; that they are losing money on it every day. Yet, in these whole hearings there is not one figure of any kind to prove that statement—not one justification for one thing. Is it not amazing? Yet they would take $3,000,000 annual subsidy given by the Government on that flimsy showing. The Government borrows money at 1½ percent, does it not? At that rate of interest, what would $3,000,000 represent? A principal sum of $200,000,000 given to them? Do you want to give Western Union $200,000,000 to rehabilitate its system? If you do, then give that as a grant-in-aid; do not do it by a resolution like this. Support the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike this subsidy from the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it has been my purpose to support this bill and I probably will do so whether this amendment is adopted or not, but I consider the amendment to be a matter of very great importance. I hope the membership of the House understands as I do or believe I do from a reading of the language of existing law as set out in the report that the law as it exists at the present time does not provide for any rate of 60 percent for Government messages; it simply provides for the power on the part of the Federal Communications Commission to fix a just rate for Government messages.

The Commission, after considering the value of the properties which were given by the Government to the telegraph companies, after considering the volume of the Government business, may fix any percentage of the normal rate to be paid by the Government which it may deem to be fair. It may fix 75 percent of the normal rate, 90 percent, 99 percent, or even 100 percent.

The gentleman from Indiana says that we ought to be willing to trust the Commission to exercise its discretion in the fixing of rates which are to be paid by the citizens. I agree with that, but I want to know why, if the citizen must trust the Commission to fix the rates which are to be paid by him, it is not fair for the telegraph company or companies to trust the Commission to fix the rates that are to be paid by the United States Government? Are we willing to trust the Commission to be fair and honest in the fixing of the rates for the average citizen, for all the citizens throughout the country, but wish to indicate that we are afraid to trust the Commission when it comes to dealing with the rights of the telegraph company and therefore feel it necessary to strike out a provision which has been carried in the law for many years which would leave the Federal Communications Commission some discretion in this connection?

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I take great pleasure in yielding to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House, I think there is a misunderstanding of what the effect of this provision is. This does not automatically deprive the Government of the right to a cheaper rate. This amendment is covered by section 201 of the act which provides first that the rates shall be reasonable and just; and then there is this provision:

> That communications by wire or radio subject to this act may be classified into day, night, repeated, unrepeated, letter, commercial, press, Government, and such other classes as the Commission may decide to be just and reasonable, and different charges may be made for the different classes of communications.

The regulation is left to the Commission. The Commission is not required, if this amendment passes, to be controlled by the act of 1866; they can still give the Government a cheaper rate, but they need to be just.

Mr. TARVER. I am sure the gentleman agrees with me that if the language as reported by the committee is enacted into law, the Commission will be deprived of the discretion vested in it by the Communications Act of 1934.

Mr. LEA. No.

Mr. TARVER. And if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] is adopted, the Commission will still have the authority to fix any rates that it may feel are just for payment of Government messages.

Mr. LEA. As I understand, the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas would be to strike out this language, while if you leave this provision in, you would still have the Commission with complete authority to fix the rates that are just and to classify the telegrams in a class by itself and fix what they believe to be a reasonable rate for those Government telegrams.

Mr. TARVER. I think the gentleman misunderstood my inquiry. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is adopted, the existing law, the Communications Act of 1934, relating to this particular subject matter will continue to be the law; and in that act, according to the language which I have before me, the Commission has the authority to provide rates for the Government at such a figure as the Federal Communications Commission shall annually fix. In other words, if we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, the Federal Communications Commission might, if it saw proper to do so, require the payment of the full normal rates by the Government, if it felt that was fair.

Mr. LEA. I think the gentleman is talking about something else.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. I hope the gentleman understands I am not partisan in this matter. I have been supporting his bill and expect to continue to do so, but I think that if this information is not correct the House ought to be fully informed on the subject.

Mr. LEA. I have the interpretation of this from the Legislative Counsel of the House and I am interested only in presenting the facts to the House so that the Members will not imagine that the presentation heretofore made is the correct position. The passage of the Poage amendment would require the Commission to be bound by the act of 1866, while leaving the bill as the committee proposes, it would be left in the hands of the Commission and the Commission would be permitted to fix a rate on Government traffic such as it thought reasonable and just.

Mr. TARVER. Was not the rate provided in the act of 1866 much lower than the rate which has obtained since 1934 and has not the act of 1866 been modified by the act of 1934 so as to provide that the Federal Communications Commission may fix such rate on Government telegrams as it sees fit?

Mr. LEA. It has been modified, but that referred only to lines on Government property, which is a comparatively small part of the total of the Government. If you will take the bill as the committee intended it, then you would have the Commission with the same regulatory power applying to every line in the country and at a reasonable and just rate based on the Government business.

Mr. TARVER. Does not the gentleman agree that under the law as it exists now the Federal Communications Commission does have the right to fix the rates which shall be paid on Government messages? Is that true?

Mr. LEA. Subject to the restriction of the act of 1866.

Mr. TARVER. According to the language of the law as stated in the report, there is no such limitation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I listened as closely as I could to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in his colloquy with the gentleman from Georgia, but what I heard did not convince me that the sentence in question lacks meaning and is innocent. The fact remains that this final sentence of the bill as proposed reads—

> No telegraph company shall by reason of any benefit received under any provisions of the Post Roads Act of July 24, 1866 be required to transmit such telegrams at rates less than those applicable to other telegrams in the same classes.

If this sentence stays in the bill, then it certainly is clear that the Federal Communications Commission cannot demand on behalf of the Government the consideration of the reduced rates to which it is entitled under the provisions of the Act of 1866. I grant there is no guaranty that the Federal Communications Commission will assert the Government's right to reduced rates but if that sentence stays in, the F. C. C. will be prohibited from asserting the right on the basis of the 1866 act.

It has been suggested that abolition of the Government discount can result in a general rate reduction. There is no guaranty of that. There has been no guaranty or no suggestion of a guaranty of that in return for surrender of the right to allow the Government's discount. The only suggestion of any consideration here for a change in the 1866 law is that preceding sentences in this section provide for a priority in the transmission of Government telegrams. In other words, it is proposed here to surrender the discount advantage which the Government had by the 1866 act for a mess of pottage and the mess of pottage is that Government telegrams shall have a priority——

Mr. POAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. In just a minute.

Mr. POAGE. That is the present law.

Mr. CASE. Yes; that is the present law. That is why the consideration is a mess of pottage. The Government already and for other reasons has priority. Its right to receive a volume discount should be preserved, as has been so well stated by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON].

Moreover, this bill itself gives to the telegraph company a far greater benefit than it ever received under the old land-grant, and that is a complete monopoly. That alone should entitle the Government to a discount. What company is there in the country that would not be willing to give a discount to the Government if it were granted a complete monopoly on all the business of its character in the country?

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas should be adopted. The sentence in question should be stricken from the bill. We should preserve for the Federal Communications Commission the right to grant a discount on Government business on the basis of the 1866 act. The adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will protect the Government in that right. The bill as drawn abandons it and prohibits its exercise.

Mr. BOREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. BOREN. I believe that the gentleman is in error on that one point about whether or not the Commission would still be able to regulate. There is no doubt but what the Commission will still be able to give a special rate on such telegrams as are classified as governmental telegrams. There is a matter of principle involved in this. Does the gentleman really believe that Madam Perkins ought to be permitted to send telegrams to John L. Lewis at a rate cheaper than some mother in his district may send telegrams to her son at a post in the service?

Mr. CASE. I would get at that by cutting down the money that Madam Perkins would be permitted to spend.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas which provides that existing Government telegraph rates continue. My view of this bill is simply this. I do not believe there is any reason why the Congress of the United States should grant the Western Union Telegraph Co. a monopoly by law. Further, I think this bill is merely a softening-up process as a prelude to bringing in later a bill to give the railroads the benefits we now get from the land-grant rates.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from California that I agree with him on this amendment. I expect to vote for this amendment, but "all the perfumes of Arabia" would not sweeten this bill to the point where I would vote for it in its present form.

Mr. FORD. I second the motion.

It has been repeatedly stated here on the floor that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been loaning the Postal Co. $400,000 per month.

Well, all I have got to say to that statement is that whoever in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is, or has been, responsible for that loan ought to have his head examined.

It may be argued that this was purely to keep the institution alive. It seems to me that since many of the top ranking financiers in the Postal are also top-ranking financiers in the Western Union, the inference that the Postal was not intended to pay, or was deliberately so managed as to lose money, is by no means outside the realm of speculative probability.

The passage of this bill gives the Western Union an absolute monopoly, subject only to such regulation as the Communications Commission sees fit to impose.

Anyone familiar with the involved technical procedure of these so-called regulatory commissions is welcome to any consolation they can get from that source.

Henceforth and from now on, the Western Union Telegraph Co. will be the sole vehicle by which a telegram or a radiogram can be transmitted.

Will this corporation reduce the rates? It will not. Why should it when Congress, in its deliberative wisdom, which although organized by the Democrats, is controlled by the Republicans, stands four-square for monopoly and still more monopoly?

This bill should be an indication to the country of what it can expect from Congress when controlled by the Republican Party.

It is, this bill, a classic example. It embodies the Republican philosophy at its worst.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 33, line 18, to correct the spelling of a word. The word "qled" should be "filed."

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, what is the purport of it?

Mr. BULWINKLE. "To cause a copy of this application to be filed" instead of "qled."

Mr. RANKIN. We certainly do not want it to appear that we would be glad.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee substitute for the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 186, noes 28.

So the committee substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BARDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 99, reports the same back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 201, noes 56.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that some time in the near future, probably next week, there will be in the city a distinguished visitor, Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, the wife of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, the leader of the Chinese people.

It is fitting and proper that the Members should have the privilege of meeting this distinguished lady. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker to declare a recess on any day during the visit of this distinguished lady to Washington to receive her as the guest of the House, such recess to be subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill just passed be permitted to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

Mr. COLMER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 107) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1605) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to farm-acreage allotments, the farm marketing excess of wheat, the use of excess corn as silage for feed to livestock on the farm, to provide for the adequate supply of peanuts for oil and other uses, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. BELL asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered over the radio last night by Mr. James F. Byrnes, Director of the Office of Economic Stabilization.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on the anniversary of Lincoln's birth, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes to render a tribute to President Lincoln for the assistance he gave in creating a State out of the Territory of Nevada.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCANLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD with regard to the Dies committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement by Kenneth M. Lloyd, of Youngstown, Ohio, on the subject of What the Lake Erie-Ohio River Canal Means to Labor at War and in Peace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of Wednesday, February 10, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes today after the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs placed in the RECORD, page 733, the answer of the Navy to certain questions which I had asked.

I am now asking that the Secretary of the Navy be directed to give the House the answer to the following questions:

First. Do the first two paragraphs of article 8 of title 34 of the United States Code read as follows:

Article 8. Persons to whom applicable. Such punishment as a court martial may adjudge may be inflicted on any person in the Navy—First (scandalous conduct). Who is guilty of profane swearing, falsehood, drunkenness, gambling, fraud, theft, or any other scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals.

Second. Is not scandal, among other things, defined to be—

1. The heedless or malicious repetition of evil reports; aspersion of character.

2. Reproach caused by outrageous or improper conduct.

Third. Is not scandalous defined to be, among other things—

1. Causing, or tending to cause, scandal; * * * shocking to the sense of truth, decency, or propriety.

2. Consisting of evil or malicious reports; tending to injure reputation.

Fourth. Does not House Report No. 110, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, reported to the House of Representatives on February 9, 1943, contain, on page 2, under the answer to question 4, the following language:

Articles for the government of the Navy, articles 8 and 22, authorize the charges of scandalous conduct tending to the destruction of good morals, conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline, and conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

Fifth. (a) On Sunday night, January 31, 1943, Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, an officer in the United States Navy, said in a radio broadcast:

You bet I'm prejudiced against those in high office who guessed so wrong before Pearl Harbor. They're still guessing wrong. I am not in the least comforted by their confessions of ignorance. What worries me most are all those damned fools who reelected them.

(b) Was not the making of the statement, "What worries me most are all those damned fools who reelected them," referring, as it did, to American citizens who voted for certain candidates for Congress, scandalous conduct?

(c) Was not the making of the statement above quoted under paragraph 5 (b) conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman?

Sixth. (a) On the same occasion, to wit, on January 31, 1943, the same Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, of the Navy, among other things, made the following statements:

Congressman HOFFMAN, it appears, had again stated that the 33 persons indicted on sedition charges were innocent victims of persecutors, to which Congressman MCGRANERY, of Pennsylvania, pointed out that Congressman HOFFMAN, of Michigan, was trying to delay the sedition trials, that HOFFMAN'S speeches since Pearl Harbor were still being franked by Nazi agents and propagandists—then, get this—that it is a matter of sworn record that Congressman HOFFMAN'S franking privilege was used by Charles V. Hudson, of Omaha, one of the 33 indicted for sedition. A couple of cute kids.

(b) The statement that Congressman HOFFMAN, of Michigan, was trying to delay the sedition trials was false; the statement that "it is a matter of sworn record that Congressman HOFFMAN'S franking privilege was used by Charles V. Hudson, of Omaha, 1 of the 33 indicted for sedition," is false; and Lieutenant Commander Winchell, having over the radio broadcast that falsehood, has he been punished under article 8 of title 34 of the United States Code?

Seventh. (a) On Sunday night, February 6, 1943, Walter Winchell, a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy, broadcast over the radio a statement which, in substance, charged that the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in an effort to stop a leak in Washington, put out a purposely misleading story at the time of the Casablanca conference, to the effect that the President and Prime Minister Churchill were meeting in Canada.

(b) On the same occasion the same Walter Winchell, a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy, assigned to active duty, stated in substance that less than 24 hours after a misleading story had been put out by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, men who had been guilty of permitting a leak of confidential information were apprehended.

(c) On February 9, 1943, the New York Herald Tribune carried a story in which it was stated that a spokesman for the Federal Bureau of Investigation said that no false rumor had been circulated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation; that no men were taken into custody by the Federal Bureau of Investigation; and that "the F. B. I. knows nothing about this particular case," referring to the case to which the said Walter Winchell made reference.

(d) The foregoing shows that, over the radio, on Sunday night, February 6, 1943, Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, of the Navy, was again guilty of falsehood. What, if any, steps have been taken, under article 8 of title 34 of the United States Code to punish him for the making of such false statements?

(e) Was not the making of the statements set forth in paragraphs 7 (a) and 7 (b) conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman?

Eighth. (a) In his column published in the New York Daily Mirror on February 8, 1943, Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, of the Navy, among other things, wrote:

Hitler is losing on the ground in Russia, in the air over Germany, and on the sands of Africa. He seems to win only in Congress.

(b) Is not the making of, and the causing to be printed, the statement by Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell that "he"—meaning Hitler—"seems to win only in Congress" scandalous conduct?

(c) Is not the making of, and the causing to be printed, the statement quoted in paragraph 8 (b) conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman?

Ninth. (a) In the August 22, 1942, issue of the magazine published under the name Liberty is an article by Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, of the Navy, which, among other things, charged—page 54—that one Smith "now indicted, sabotaged the war effort by spreading disunity."

(b) In the September 12, 1942, issue of the same magazine, on page 32, are the following words:

A correction. On page 54 of the August 22 issue of Liberty it was stated that Gerald L. K. Smith had been indicted. This was an error and an injustice to Mr. Smith, against whom no indictment has been returned. We apologize for the error.

(c) The foregoing shows that Lieutenant Commander Winchell, of the United States Navy, was guilty of falsehood. Have any steps been taken to punish him, under article 8 above referred to?

(d) Was not the making of the false statement set forth in paragraph 9 (a), and the causing of the same to be printed, conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman?

Tenth. (a) On July 12, 1942, Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, of the United States Navy, asked a radio audience:

How about the voters going after those other saboteurs who landed in Congress?

(b) A few days later he inserted in his column published in the press the following statement:

Another reason some Congressmen are demanding the eight saboteurs be shot is that they might talk too much.

(c) On July 26, 1942, Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, of the Navy, over the radio, made the statement that—

Nearly everyone who printed seditious articles has been indicted except those who put the same things in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. * * * But, honeychile, all of them will be confronted by the same charges after November 5.

(d) Was not the making of the statements above referred to in paragraphs numbered 10 (a), 10 (b), and 10 (c) scandalous conduct?

(e) What, if any, action has the Navy taken to end the making of such statements by Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell?

(f) Was not the making of the statements above referred to in paragraphs numbered 10 (a), 10 (b), and 10 (c) conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman?

(g) If the making of such statements was conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, what, if any, action has been taken by the Navy Department to punish the said Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell therefor?

(h) What, if any, steps have been taken to punish him under article 8, of title 34, of the United States Code?

Eleventh. Were the statements, or any of the statements hereinbefore quoted as having been made by Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell a violation of any rule or regulation of the Navy or of any law of the United States?

Twelfth. If any statement quoted above was a violation of a rule or regulation of the Navy, or of any law of the United States, why has not action been taken to end the making of such statements and to punish Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell for making them?

Thirteenth. In the making of the foregoing statements, or of any of them, did Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell state or present the views or policy of the Navy?

Fourteenth. Is there not some rule or regulation which requires officers in the Navy, before making broadcasts or statements to the public, to submit their proposed utterances to some department of the Government?

Fifteenth. If there is such a rule or regulation, to what department of the Government should proposed broadcasts or statements be submitted?

Sixteenth. Should statements such as those indicated in paragraphs 5 (a), 6 (a), 7 (a), 7 (b), 8 (a), 9 (a), 10 (a), 10 (b), and 10 (c), before being broadcast or made public, be submitted to the Office of War Information?

Seventeenth. Were any of such statements submitted to the Office of War Information?

Eighteenth. (a) Is there not a regulation governing the conduct of officers of the Navy, which, in substance, prohibits the making of statements, or conduct, on the part of an officer which is prejudicial to good order?

(b) What are the words and figures of such rule or regulation?

Nineteenth. Why has not Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell been called to account, or been tried, for his conduct which is in violation of article 8 of title 34 of the United States Code?

Twentieth. Why has not Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell been called to account, or been tried, for his conduct which is in violation of article 22 of title 34 of the United States Code?

Twenty-first. What steps, if any, has the Navy Department taken to end the making of false statements by Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell?

Twenty-second. (a) The United States Code makes it an offense for an officer of the Army to use contemptuous or disrespectful words against the President, Vice President, the Congress of the United States.

(b) Is the use of contemptuous or disrespectful words against the President, Vice President, or the Congress of the United States contrary to any rule or regulation of the Navy?

Twenty-third. Is it permissible for officers of the Navy to challenge the patriotism of the representatives of the people elected to Congress?

Twenty-fourth. What steps, if any, have been taken by the Navy Department to prevent Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell from challenging the patriotism of Members of Congress?

Twenty-fifth. (a) In House Report No. 110, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, containing the answers of the Secretary of the Navy to House Resolution 95, which requested information as to the status of Walter Winchell, under the answer to question 8, on page 3 of said report, it is stated:

On March 17, 1942, confidential orders were issued to him (Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell, United States Naval Reserve) to active duty. This was special duty under the commandant of the third naval district. These orders are still in effect, February 5, 1943.

(b) What special duties has Lieutenant Commander Winchell been performing, and what special duties is he now performing, under those orders?

(c) And how much of his time is required in the performance of those duties?

Twenty-sixth. (a) In the House Report No. 110, referred to in paragraph 25, it is also stated on page 3, under the answer to question 10:

On April 3, 1942, this officer's designation was changed to "Deck, volunteer, special service (public relations), United States Naval Reserve.

(b) Is Lt. Comdr. Walter Winchell acting as public relations representative of the Navy?

(c) What duties is he performing in that position?

Twenty-seventh. (a) Who issued the confidential orders, which, on March 17, 1942, assigned Walter Winchell to special duty?

(b) Were such orders issued at the request, or by the direction, of the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy?

Twenty-eighth. (a) Who issued the orders for the changing, on April 3, 1942, of the designation of the said Walter Winchell to "Deck, volunteer, special service (public relations)"?

(b) Were such orders issued at the request, or by the direction, of the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy?

Twenty-ninth. What compensation is being paid to Walter Winchell as a lieutenant commander in the United States Navy?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter addressed to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on three different matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may sit during the session of the House tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 65, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 26 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 321 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and continued under House Resolution 90 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and continued under House Resolution 420 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1945, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the period, insert a colon and the words: "Provided, That the special committee herein continued shall be composed of eight members."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and in the meantime yield 5 minutes to my admiring friend from Georgia, Judge Cox.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I must express my appreciation of the very great generosity of my colleague the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of my committee. This is my resolution. The committee reported it out with only two members making reservations, but the chairman saw fit, however, to report it and to seize all the time and yield 5 minutes to me.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this country are waging two wars, one against a foreign foe, and one against enemies here at home. We have drafted the flower and bloom of our young manhood and sent them abroad to fight the foreign war. They are expecting those here at home to carry on the battle within our own borders. These boys that we are sending across the waters expect to return and find the America that they left and that they love, and it is that expectation that we must fulfill.

In combating the enemy within our own borders the Dies committee has done a noble job. They have had magnificent support given from the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Catholic Church. I think it would be a mistake not to extend the life of this committee.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman whom he is quoting as spokesman for the Catholic Church of America?

Mr. COX. I will say again that the Catholic Church has done noble work in combating those that have been seeking to undermine the foundations of the Government we love.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman that the Catholic Church is unalterably opposed to communism, and so am I. But I repeat the question, I will ask the gentleman on whose authority he speaks for the Catholic Church?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITTINGTON). The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], a distinguished member of the Dies committee.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I want to preface the few remarks I am going to make at this time by reading a telegram I have received this afternoon:

> Representatives of 60,000 United Automobile Workers, Congress of Industrial Organization, members in Midwest vigorously oppose extension of and appropriation to Dies committee, which has not filled purpose for which created. Demand you speak and vote against such action.
> ROY H. SPETH,
> President.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I do not have time to yield. I have to get this off my chest.

This telegram undoubtedly went to every Member of this House, besides a barrage of other telegrams and letters from C. I. O. representatives all over the United States. I say that this telegram is an arrogant one, first because the signer proposes to speak for 60,000 C. I. O. members of the Midwest, 98 percent of whom are good Americans and at least 90 percent of whom are in favor of a continuation of the Dies committee, and they so showed at the last election on November 3 on the vote that sent me back to this House.

The second reason I say this telegram is arrogant is that it says to a Member of Congress "Demand you speak and vote against such action."

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. MASON. No. I have to mention a few points I want to make during this short time that has been granted to me.

About a year ago when the Dies committee resolution was considered, for a continuation of the committee, I set up as a standard or a measuring stick to evaluate the worth of the committee a list of the friends of the committee and a list of the foes of the committee, and I said if any Member of this House would study the character of the friends and the character of the foes of the committee, then they would know how to evaluate the committee. This House evidently did, because a 90-percent vote was given for a continuance of the committee, a vote of confidence in the committee and approval of the work the committee had done. In spite of the obstacles that had been placed in the way of the committee by high government officials, in spite of the ridicule that had been heaped upon it by high government officials, the committee was continued. I still say that that is a pretty good measuring stick to evaluate the work of this committee.

About 3 weeks ago I set up as another measuring stick or standard by which the work of this committee could be evaluated, and I said in substance, I quoted a biblical injunction, "By their fruits shall ye know them." Then I pointed out the fruits of the committee as listed in the annual report furnished to each Member of this House. I took the high points of that committee's report. At that time I did not have enough time to complete the list of fruits of the committee, so in the short time that is given to me I want to list two or three of those fruits today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. MASON. First. The Dies committee has compiled and tabulated an invaluable stock pile or reservoir of facts and information concerning the subversive agents and organizations at work in America today.

Second. The files of the Dies committee are being consulted daily by representatives of the F. B. I., Military Intelligence, Naval Intelligence, Secret Service, and other Government agencies, and the information secured from those files used as a basis for action against these subversive agents and organizations.

Third. The activities of the Committee for Democratic Action, the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, and other organizations that had for their chief purpose the undermining of the Congress and the smearing of many of its most outstanding members of both parties, were so thoroughly exposed by the Dies committee and their communistic tie-ups so clearly pointed out that these organizations were discredited and their activities nullified. As a result not one Member of Congress listed by these organizations for defeat was defeated.

Therefore, on the basis of the fruits that the Dies committee has produced during the past year, the committee is not only entitled to a vote of confidence but also to a new lease on life.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, a member of the Rules Committee [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I remember very well when the original resolution began hanging around the Rules Committee several years ago. At that time the chief object and purpose was stated repeatedly to be the investigation of the German Bund with later some mention of things that might be communistic. I took occasion today to go back and read the original resolution which the pending resolution proposes to continue. In my judgment we face a vitally different situation today from what we faced when the original resolution was adopted in 1938. Now, it authorizes an investigation of the extent, character, and object of un-American propaganda; it also authorizes the investigation of subversive and un-American propaganda emanating from foreign countries or arising domestically contrary to the principles guaranteed by the American Constitution, and such other facts as may be pertinent to enable Congress to legislate. That has been done. I have heretofore supported the Dies resolution, but I think we face a situation so completely changed that its usefulness is a thing of the past. I concede that it has done good work, but I think it has gone far afield from the language of the original resolution and has come to be more of a supervisor of personnel of executive departments, and getting even at that in a clumsy way that throws this House repeatedly into confusion and accomplishes nothing.

For the preservation of the principles guaranteed by the Constitution, we have six or seven million men under arms tonight; that is what they are doing. The whole power and strength of this Government is dedicated to the preservation of those principles. Last year we increased from a little under $25,000,000 to around $39,000,000 the money that the F. B. I. might spend in investigating anything that is un-American. I am not in a position to state the extent of it, but I do know that the Army and the Navy has a comprehensive and widespread intelligence set-up the purpose of which is to make these investigations; and it seems to me that we have passed the stage of propaganda. We are fighting a war to preserve the principles of the American Constitution and it seems unreasonable to me and foolish to have a committee, though it has done good work in the past, fooling around and making some investigation about some little propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS], a member of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina made the statement that the Dies committee had been just fooling around lately. I do not know whether the gentleman from North Carolina has ever been up to the offices of the Dies committee, but if he had, or if he had visited its offices in the last few days, certainly he would never make such a statement.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I thought I said "fooling around with propaganda investigation."

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I can see no difference whether the gentleman says "fooling around with propaganda" or "fooling around" with something else. The impression he was trying to leave was that the committee itself and the investigators of the committee were fooling around, which is absolutely not the fact.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I did not intend to leave any such impression; I was trying to make a contrast between propaganda and war.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Certainly; but the gentleman must nevertheless conclude that it would be very bad for us to stop fooling around, if he wants to refer to it as that, with the very people who are trying to fool around with our country.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Is it not a fact that during wartime the propaganda of all nations is intensified? It is more important than ever that we be alert to detect and expose enemy propaganda.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. No; I am sorry; I have only 5 minutes, and, due to yielding to other Members, my time is running out fast.

The importance of continuing the Dies committee may be measured by reference to some matters which are at stake in its work. I propose to outline a few of these things which are at stake as briefly and as pointedly as possible.

I believe it is correct to say that no other special committee in the entire history of the United States Congress has received as many as four mandates from the House of Representatives. Our committee has been functioning for almost 5 years, and now we are proposing to extend its life for an additional 2 years. These 5 years of investigation have provided us with a foundation and structure of experience which are absolutely indispensable to the Congress and the country at this critical juncture in history. It is absolutely unthinkable that this House or the overwhelming majority of American citizens would wish to halt our investigations into subversive activities at precisely the moment when subversion is more dangerous to the Nation than at any other time in the century and a half of its history. Furthermore acts and movements of subversion may become even more dangerous during the 2 crucial years that lie immediately ahead. I name, therefore, as our committee's first equipment, unparalleled experience.

In our committee's annual report to this House last month it was made clear that the mass of information which we have gathered during almost 5 years of work has grown to enormous proportions.

The seven rooms which now hold our committee's files here in Washington are crammed with the records of subversive activities which involve something like a million individuals or more than a thousand organizations. The files of our committee's New York and Los Angeles regional offices are proportionately large. All of this vast quantity of evidence is, in reality, in the possession of the House of Representatives which has voted the funds for assembling it. Certainly this is not the time to put a padlock upon these files. However, I have not the slightest fear that any appreciable number of Members here contemplates the sacrifice of either our committee's experience or its files of information.

So much, therefore, for the committee's competence to deal with subversive activities by methods of investigation and exposure. I come to the larger question of our free American institutions which are at stake in this national crisis. By calling attention to the internal dangers to our free institutions, I am not minimizing by one iota the paramount necessity of our building and equipping a military force with which to win a crushing and final victory over the Axis Powers. Nevertheless, there are grave internal dangers to the American system of government and the American way of life. The people of this country are becoming increasingly aware of these dangers, and they expect the Congress of the United States to take adequate measures for their protection. Some of us did not have to wait for the election returns to understand how seriously the American people take the question of preserving their form of government and their way of life from the insidious encroachments of bureaucracy, collectivism, radical crackpotism, or any other brand, style, or hue of totalitarianism. The American people are no more in favor of home-grown totalitarianism than they are of the variety spawned abroad. They have a profound distaste for it whether it goes by the name of nazi-ism, or facism, or bolshevism, or whether it is some anonymous totalitarianism invented by Washington bureaucrats.

And while I am on the subject of the bureaucrats, I want to say that bureaucracy is the backdoor entrance to fascism or nazi-ism. The German people entered nazi-ism by the backdoor of a gigantic socialist bureaucracy. The democratic constitution of Weimar was on paper, but the socialist bureaucracy was in office. A people long weary of bureaucracy and finding its legislative branch of government unable or unwilling to cope with that bureaucracy, turned to Hitler as the way out. Of course that was not the only factor which contributed to Hitler's rise to power, but it was one of the important factors and in any understanding of the widespread disease of totalitarianism we must bear it in mind.

Naturally, the Dies committee is not going to deal with the totalitarian threat to our institutions all by itself. But the Dies committee is one of the indispensable agencies for protecting American institutions by an incessant exposure of the Nazi, Fascist, and Bolshevist forms of this disease.

I am not one of those sentimentalists who would ignore these threats in the interest of liberalism, nor am I one who sees "reds" under the bed, but I am one who is certain that a real threat to our American institutions still exists. This threat may appear to some to be dormant today, but actually our entry into the war has accelerated it. The American Communists have cleverly used the war as a vehicle with which to gain power. As a result of the war, they have become accepted in strange places. At least it is safe to say they have made appreciable gains. Where formerly the American Communists operated as rats in the dark, they have now taken on the cloak of patriotism. This, of course, came about only when Germany attacked Russia. I am wondering what the American Communists would do were Russia to make a separate peace with Germany after Germany had been completely expelled from Russian soil.

And it is important to keep in mind that we have no assurance to date that Russia will not agree to a separate peace. We naturally hope and pray that they will not, but at least the possibility of it is there.

In addition to the ever-present threat from the American Communists, there is likewise the threat, especially in wartime, from the insidious agents, provocateurs, and saboteurs of our foreign enemies. I hope that none of us believe that foreign agents and spies have all been driven out of America. If you do, you may someday be in for a sad awakening.

So, taken all in all, America must be on guard, and the more Government agencies we have ferreting into those problems, the better off we will be. There is definitely a place in this picture for the Dies committee. The requests made of our committee by other agencies of the Government is proof enough.

When our fighting men come back from the shambles of Samoa, the sandy wastes of Africa, and the ruins of Berlin, they will expect us to have done our best to not only eliminate the foreign agents but to also preserve at home the free institutions and the American way of life. It would be a sad state of affairs were these boys to return to our great land only to find the Nation in the throes of disorder, the Government in the hands of foreign sympathizers, and the economic and fiscal state in total chaos. You and I, as Members of this House, have a solemn obligation to these boys. We must above everything else protect the things back home that are so dear to them, and, therefore, we cannot afford for one second to close our eyes to the dangers which constantly becloud our institutions and our way of life. The Dies committee is one kind of national insurance against this, for which, if our soldiers, sailors, and marines had an opportunity to request, they would be for almost unanimously. The least that we can do today is to cast a vote for them.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, in 1938 I received letters and telegrams from American Legion posts, from the automotive industry, from management, from chambers of commerce, from practically everybody in Detroit in favor of the Dies resolution. It is most significant that now we do not have anybody in favor of it; in fact, the two Detroit papers, the Detroit News and the Detroit Free Press, independent Republican, are opposed to the Dies resolution. Organized labor, both the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L., are opposed to it.

We find today a different situation than we had in 1938. The Dies resolution cannot serve any good purpose any more. I am voting against the Dies resolution.

I believe that we have the F. B. I. and we have Army and Navy intelligence that is taking care of the very thing that the Dies committee was supposed to do, taking care of people who are disloyal to the United States of America. We should not have a Congressional committee that is going to undertake to suppress the right of free speech, the right of a free press, the right of a man to express himself, to write an article, say, to a Communist paper in New York or any other paper. Every man has a right to write a letter, or a newspaper article, and speak out his mind on a matter of economics. The only question involved is: Is he loyal to the United States? Is he supporting our win-the-war program? Is he fighting the enemy—the Nazis, the Fascists, and the Japs?

This question here is not a fight against the Communist. It is a fight against American teachers, educators, and economists. They may disagree with you and I, but they have a right to express themselves. They are not hurting us in our war effort. They are cooperating with us in the war effort and they have proven themselves to be good, loyal Americans during this time of war. I do not see any reason for persecuting a man because he disagrees with me on a question of economics and indicting him as un-American. We have all been guilty of calling people who disagree with us "crackpots and radicals." I have done the same thing and you have done the same thing, but we are never going to accede to the proposition that that man has no right to express himself. This Congress should not take that position. While our Army and Navy is driving the Japs out of Guadalcanal; while our boys and our English allies are giving the enemy hell over in Africa; while our Russian allies are annihilating the Nazi hordes at Kursk, Kharkov, and Rostov, the Dies committee comes here for another fat appropriation to fight organized labor, teachers, professors, and economists who have worked to create higher living standards for the common man in America.

The important thing before us now is to win this war. To beat the Axis. To beat the Nazis, Fascists, and the Japs. The Dies committee was formed for the purpose of investigating un-American activities—to me this meant to get after the enemy, the Nazis and the Fascists.

Regularly, the chairman of the Dies committee has promised the Congress and the American people that his committee would produce facts and documents to expose the workings of Nazi and other pro-Fascist agencies and individuals in this country.

These promises have usually been made to coincide with requests for renewal of the committee's life or for new funds to keep it going. The latest such promise was made on January 3 of this year, when the chairman renewed a pledge made the previous July to bring out a 1,000-page documentation of such enemy activities.

With equal regularity, the chairman and the committee have failed to keep even a semblance of these pledges of anti-Axis investigation and exposition. Let us look at the record of these broken promises.

Speaking on the radio as far back as September 18, 1939, the chairman of the Dies committee said that he had evidence of collaboration between the Nazi bund and certain native fascists, including George Deatherage, recently indicted for seditious activity. No action was ever taken to follow this up, in fact, when Deatherage appeared and refused to answer the committee's questions, the matter was let drop.

On November 30, 1940, Representative DIES was quoted in the Philadelphia Record to the effect that he was about to reveal a bund plot to sabotage war industry. This plot against our country is still unexposed by the Dies committee.

In the same period, Representative DIES promised an exposé of a Nazi fundraising drive in this country. The exposé is still to come, though the chairman at the time said he had lists of some 220,000 names of people involved in the conspiracy.

July 1941, the gentleman from Texas, Representative DIES, made another promise, this time to expose anti-Semitic, pro-Fascist tie-ups. This promise is also still unfulfilled. In August 1942, the gentleman from Texas, Representative DIES, again promised an exposé of pro-Axis activities. This time he carried it to the length of demanding perpetual surveillance of some 17,000 individuals he said were Nazis or their agents. Nothing has come of this promise, as nothing has come of the others.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the record of unfulfilled promises is clear. At the same time, it is equally clear that numerous pro-Axis and native Fascist groups and individuals have felt perfectly safe and free to operate without interference from a committee supposed to combat un-American activities. Let us look at the record again for a minute.

This question is from George Sylvester Viereck, convicted agent of Nazi propaganda:

I have the highest respect for the Dies committee and sympathize with its program.

From Fritz Kuhn, Bund leader now in prison:

I am in favor of it [the Dies committee] to be appointed again and wish them to get more money.

From William Dudley Pelley, native Fascist leader now in prison:

I founded the Silver Legion in 1933—to propagandize the same principles that Mr. Dies and this committee are engaged in prosecuting right now.

From James A. Colescott, imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan:

His—

program so closely parallels the program of the Klan that there is no distinguishable difference between them.

None of these unsavory characters was ever exposed at any time by the Dies committee. Indeed, it would appear that they were actually sheltered by the committee. Those that have been indicted and punished have been brought to book without the aid of the committee.

While no promise to expose Axis agents and their activities has been kept, Chairman DIES did come out with one astonishing statement to the effect that he had evidence that would have forestalled Pearl Harbor, had he been permitted to make it public by the administration.

This statement, if true, would have branded our Government as incapable of looking after our national defense and therefore no longer worthy of the confidence of our people. It would also have branded Representative DIES as equally derelict in his duty for permitting such information to be buried. The newspapers have always been available to Representative DIES in unlimited space. If it were true that he held information to prevent the national disaster of Pearl Harbor, he had the duty to use every possible means of circumventing an administration censorship—if such a thing existed.

Actually, as we know, Representative DIES had no such information. Mr. Sumner Welles, Under Secretary of State, issued a statement on behalf of the Secretary of State and the State Department completely contradicting Representative DIES' false claim.

Later it transpired that Representative DIES had refused to aid the Department of Justice in a request for information—on activities of Japanese agents—sent by Attorney General Francis Biddle in August 1941.

This is a partial record of the failures and refusals of the Dies committee to hunt down and expose the subversive activities of known pro-Axis and native Fascist groups and individuals.

On this record, the chairman of the un-American Dies committee appeals for a new grant of authority from this Congress. It should be apparent that the committee does not deserve the confidence of Congress, that it has wasted the authority and the money granted to date, and that its activities against the enemies of our country and their agents have aided those enemies rather than hindered them.

This Congress would be as remiss in its duty as the Dies committee itself if it were to grant that new authority.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, in voting for this resolution, I do so after very careful consideration of all that is involved, and only because I regretfully believe the country does have need of some means of protest against the policy of the present administration to appoint and keep in positions of varying degrees of authority men and women whose purposes are to destroy our representative form of government.

If the existence of this committee is what its opponents claim it to be, namely a factor preventing unity so necessary to our war effort, it seems to me the blame, if there is any, should be placed at the right door, and the pressure applied to the cause rather than to that which is only a symptom.

However, the methods employed by the committee have been such that I have found myself in protest against them. They have given rise to doubts as to the stability of justice and of the great American principle of fair play.

With the need for increasing unity for victory such doubts take on larger proportions in some sections of our people than would ordinarily be the case.

I am completely agreed that the Congress has an important role to play in conducting proper investigations. I am exceedingly jealous of the prestige and the influence of all congressional action. This committee has done so much that is fine that it is particularly unfortunate that its methods have become increasingly such as to create doubt of its present value in many minds, including my own.

Fanaticism and intolerance seem to have been allowed to play a part in decisions that should rest upon calm judgment and incontrovertible fact. I am completely out of sympathy with all action stemming from such thinking.

In studying the protests being made by the groups opposing the continuance of the committee, I have found many things with which I agree. But when I discovered in them evidence of the same spirit of fanaticism and lack of fairness they protest against, it gave me pause.

In these last days the membership of the House has shown the Nation and the world that it still considers the fundamental principles of fairness and justice of first importance.

If in its action today the House continues the committee to investigate un-American activities, it would be well for that committee to take to heart what yesterday's vote indicated. In its insistence upon fair play for a man who holds the respect and love of thousands of our finest Negro citizens because of his constant and self-forgetting work in their behalf, it was a declaration that this body will assume anew the responsibility that is really ours to see that this committee we have created does its work in accordance with the highest ideals of American justice and in the interests of our American dream of freedom.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY].

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein some telegrams and an editorial from the Milwaukee Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, last week the gentleman from Texas grossly maligned a respected citizen of my State, a high-ranking official of the War Production Board, Paul R. Porter.

When Mr. DIES' investigator sought information about Mr. Porter from the W. P. B. he asked one question only—the size of his salary. I made inquiry about his character and the value of his work. I asked his boss, Donald Nelson. Mr. Nelson authorizes me to quote him as follows:

> I consider Paul Porter to be an outstanding public servant. I have observed his work closely and intimately. He is doing a first-rate job in one of the most difficult positions of the whole war effort.

I hold in my hand telegrams of praise for Mr. Porter from the general counsel of the Henry J. Kaiser Co., from Henry J. Kaiser himself, and from outstanding industrial and labor leaders.

The word of these men carries more weight with me than the insubstantial, reckless, and defamatory statement by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. Speaker, as a newcomer to the House, I shall shortly be called to cast a vote for the first time upon the continuance of the Dies committee. I have tried to approach this matter with an open mind. In this same spirit I intend to examine the accusations made on this floor a few days ago against a number of persons by the gentleman from Texas. The names of most of those persons are not known to me. Paul R. Porter is known to me personally. He is a respected citizen of my State, a man of excellent character and unimpeachable patriotism who enjoys high standing in his home community.

Mr. Speaker, if one wishes to know the character of a man or the worth of his work it would seem appropriate, indeed essential, to question his superiors and his associates. I would have supposed, therefore, that the gentleman from Texas or his investigators would have talked to Mr. Donald Nelson, the chairman of the War Production Board, or to high officials in the Maritime Commission, or the Navy Department with whom Mr. Porter has been closely associated. I would have supposed that Mr. Porter would have been called for a hearing. I find that none of these things were done, so I made my own inquiries. I found that Mr. Porter has the confidence of the highest officials in the War Production Board, the Navy, the War Department, the Maritime Commission, and that his work is highly regarded wherever he is known.

Mr. Porter is known for his work in helping to effect wage stabilization in the shipbuilding and aircraft industries, our two most vital war industries. What do the outstanding spokesmen of both management and labor in these two industries think of Mr. Porter's executive ability, his judicial temperament, and his devotion to our country? I ask approval to introduce into the RECORD telegrams and letters praising Mr. Porter's character and work from the general counsel of the Henry J. Kaiser Co., from Henry J. Kaiser, from officers of great shipbuilding and aircraft corporations, from officers of the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, and from the C. I. O. Shipbuilders Union.

Mr. Speaker, the word of these men carries more weight with me than the insubstantial, reckless, and defamatory denunciation made last week by the gentleman from Texas. The gross injustice done to a man for whom I can personally vouch convinces me that there is something radically wrong in the operation of the Dies committee. The men who have been attacked by the gentleman from Texas come from many States. I hope that the Members of this House will ascertain which of those persons may come from their own State, or their own district, and will make their own inquiries as I have done.

My own inquiry compels me to believe that the so-called investigations made by the Dies committee have been made either with slipshod and irresponsible carelessness, or that information that this House is entitled to have has been, at least in some cases, withheld. Had this House been properly informed concerning Mr. Porter, for example, the report would have shown that the committee which he heads has established, and now supervises, voluntary wage stabilization agreements covering a million workers in our most vital war industry. The report would have shown that these agreements have been an important factor in enabling the shipbuilding industry to surpass the high production goal set for it last year. The report would have shown that sitting with Mr. Porter, as members of this committee, are high officials of the Navy Department, the War Department, the Maritime Commission, 12 high officials of the Nation's shipbuilding companies, and an equal number of representatives from both major labor organizations. The report to which this House is entitled would have included an evaluation of the chairman's work from those associates who are best qualified to make an appraisal.

A proper report should show that only last week Mr. Porter, in addition to his W. P. B. duties, was named to be Chairman of the Shipbuilding Commission of the War Labor Board, which commission will, in fact, be a little War Labor Board for the shipbuilding industry. The report would show that Mr. Porter was unanimously nominated for this second post by representatives of the Navy Department, the Maritime Commission, by the shipbuilding industry, and shipbuilding labor.

A true report, Mr. Speaker, concerning Mr. Porter will show that he was recently borrowed from the War Production Board by the War Labor Board to help work out a wage-stabilization program for the Pacific coast aircraft industry, and that his report, now before the War Labor Board for its consideration, has been praised for its fairness to all parties concerned and for its soundness.

I think a proper investigation of Mr. Porter would have included some inquiry among his fellow townsmen at Kenosha, Wis. A true report would have shown that they esteemed him highly enough to elect him to that city's school board. A true report would include testimonials to his character and patriotism from ministers, civic leaders, workers, merchants, and manufacturers.

Mr. Porter, who has not even had the most elementary sort of hearing, is not on trial before this House. I therefore do not address myself to the so-called charges made by the gentleman from Texas. But I am fully convinced that should he be accorded a hearing that he could answer the flimsy and unsupported charges to the satisfaction of every Member of this House.

Mr. Speaker, what kind of an investigation is it when only one question about Mr. Porter was asked of the War Production Board, for whom he works?

About 2 weeks ago some unidentified person from the Dies committee telephoned the War Production Board and asked one question—one question only—about Mr. Porter. That question was the size of his salary. It is a pity that at least a second question was not asked. That question might have concerned the status of another man denounced by the gentleman from Texas, a Mr. Paul F. Brissenden, who we were informed was an employee in Mr. Porter's office. I find that Mr. Brissenden, whom I do not know but who may be a very estimable gentleman, has never worked as assistant to Mr. Porter, that he worked for the War Production Board for a few weeks only on a special assignment, and that that was more than 18 months ago.

Mr. Speaker, I must frankly say that I consider a report so unreliable as the one presented to this House last week to be an offense to the intelligence and dignity of its Members.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to enclose in this evidence certain telegrams received by Mr. Paul R. Porter as a result of this dastardly attack. First, we have the following telegram from Mr. E. R. Perry, assistant to the president of the Boeing Aircraft Co., which advises:

Unexpected departure from Washington last week prevented my seeing you again personally to express the very sincere appreciation of myself and associates from Boeing Aircraft for your genuine helpfulness and understanding of our problems in the Pacific coast air frame wage stabilization matter which has carried on since July of last year through two meetings in Los Angeles and recent hearing before the National War Labor Board on your recommendation. We compliment you on the thoroughness and excellence of your report to the Board and appreciate your fairness and impartiality as chairman of the Los Angeles meeting.

Mr. John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor, wires as follows:

Following telegram forwarded to Congressman DIES: "Paul R. Porter as chairman of Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee attends to working conditions of over 1,000,000 shipyard workers. In that position he has won the respect and confidence of Government officials, of management, and of labor. He has contributed to shipbuilding in an outstanding manner. For his efficient services I am personally appreciative."

Mr. Monroe B. Lanier, president of the Ingalls Shipbuilding Corporation, and president of the Gulf Coast Shipbuilding Association, wires as follows:

I am taking the liberty of sending the following telegram to Congressman WILLIAM COLMER, Representative from our district of Mississippi, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.: "It has been called to my attention that Congressman MARTIN DIES has included the name of Mr. Paul R. Porter among a list of officials and employees of the Government who are alleged to be engaged in a campaign of defaming or casting reflection upon the name of Members of the Congress of the United States and others. I have not the honor of knowing Representative DIES and am taking the liberty of making a request of you as Representative from our district in Mississippi to immediately convey to Representative DIES following message:

"'As president of the Ingalls Shipbuilding Corporation and as a representative of all shipbuilders of the Gulf zone in the negotiation of the amendment to Gulf zone agreement between labor, Government, and industry and as a member of the shipbuilding stabilization committee of the War Production Board and an alternate of the Shipbuilding Commission of the War Labor Board I have been in frequent contact with Mr. Paul R. Porter, chairman of the shipbuilding stabilization committee. Prior to the organization of these agencies I have had frequent occasion to contact Mr. Porter when he was an assistant to Mr. Sidney Hillman in connection with labor disputes. I have found Mr. Porter to be conscientious, fair, and able in the many conferences, some of which have lasted continuously for a period of weeks. I have never heard him utter one word of disparagement or criticism of any men connected with the legislative, executive, or judicial branches of the United States Government. I consider him a man of the highest standards and ideals and patriotism, and in my opinion no charge of subversive action or speech could properly be attributed to him. I regret that anything might be said which will tend to hamper the highly constructive efforts of Mr. Porter in behalf of labor and industry in the vitally important shipbuilding industry.'"

Mr. Harry F. Morton, general counsel of the Henry J. Kaiser Co., and vice president of the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation, wires as follows:

I have today wired Congressman DIES with copy to Donald Nelson: "News dispatches from Washington yesterday indicate that in course of speech in Congress you mentioned Paul R. Porter, chief of shipbuilding stabilization branch of War Production Board, as 'typical of the irresponsible, unrepresentative, crackpot, and radical bureaucrats who are attempting to undermine the confidence of the people in Congress.' I am sure you must have been misinformed regarding Mr. Porter. For the past year or more I have been in close touch with Mr. Porter as an industry member of the shipbuilding stabilization committee, of which he is chairman, and I have been impressed by his unyielding devotion to the cause of our Government and to the successful prosecution of the war effort. His approach to the problem in the shipbuilding field has not been that of a bureaucrat or crackpot but rather that of a practical executive. Much of the success of the shipbuilding industry in meeting the President's program is, in my opinion, due to Porter's understanding of the problems which have arisen and his efficient handling thereof. I feel it my duty to advise you of this and respectfully suggest that you make inquiry among the other members of the committee."

Mr. Speaker, I should like to enclose as a part of this RECORD an editorial which appeared on February 3, 1943, in the Milwaukee Journal, which is Wisconsin's most important newspaper:

DIES DOES NOT HELP

Representative MARTIN DIES did some effective work in the days of the "isms" conspiracies. He exposed the lies of the Communists and the false fronts they set up.

It is equally true that Mr. DIES did not do a comparably good job exposing the Fascists, no matter what he says now. However, the Bundists, the Silvershirts and the Coughlinites were discrediting themselves, so that failure made little difference.

But we fail to follow DIES in his latest attack. It is true that what he terms bureaucracy has bungled some things and has often proceeded in contradictory directions. There are, in Washington, too many "chief and assistant analysts" of this and that; too many "policy consultants," "information advisers," "economists" and other gentlemen with pet and often fuzzy notions. They are as thick as fleas on a stray dog's back.

But over and above all this, perhaps in spite of it all, stands the fact that we have made amazing progress in the biggest job America has ever undertaken. We have accomplished so much more in the first year of this war than we did in the first year of the last that one can hardly make comparisons. Hasn't Mr. DIES anything to say for that?

Adolf Hitler would like nothing better than to have Americans think that they are ruled wholly by incompetent bureaucrats and conspirators in a system that is not worth fighting for. That would prove his charge of "decadent democracy" to the letter.

DIES, unwittingly of course, does his little best to get this idea spread throughout the Nation. And therein lies the danger of the present Dies performance. He can hurt America.

DIES says that the apostles of hate and disunity are the enemies of democracy. They are. But who are these apostles? Largely they are the men and the agencies that DIES is associating with now. They are a combination of unconvinced isolationists, unregenerated America Firsters—only, to be sure, a part of the original America First movement—political haters of Roosevelt who have more hate than either fairness or sense, economic Bourbons who want to put this country back where it was in 1890, and all those who are willing to play politics throughout this war period in order to be ready for a possible political overturn as soon as peace comes.

Why does not Mr. DIES say something about this group? He makes no more progress there than he did against the Fascists. He strikes a popular chord with Congressmen, no doubt, by appearing to be the champion of a downtrodden Congress. The answer to this is that the record of Congress will be what Congress makes it—no worse and no better. It took one of the youngest Members, WILL ROGERS, son of the famous humorist, to puncture the Dies performance. Too many of the Congressmen, apparently, "ate it up." ROGERS has not been there long enough to accept a champion without examining his qualifications and aims.

MARTIN DIES is an example of a man who does not know where to stop. His extravagant performance discredits whatever case he may have.

Mr. Speaker, the following telegram was sent February 8, 1943, to the gentleman from Texas, Hon. MARTIN L. DIES.

Endeavored to reach you on the telephone today, but was unsuccessful, and since I am leaving on the streamliner today, want to state I have read of the effort of you and your committee to assist in expediting the war effort by removal of those whose activities and record of performance in this country's service is either directly or indirectly hindering the effort we all must make. You know how sincerely I feel that greater production is one of the prime factors in quickly winning this war and also the preservation of our national security in the post-war. I know how conscientious you are, and thought you would want to know my experience with Paul Porter, whom you mentioned. As to his record amongst others you are investigating, I would like to say that our contacts with him have been limited solely to his work on the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee, of which I am a member. From this personal knowledge of Porter's activities in this field, I know him as one whose activities have been to attain more production with greater efficiency. Among other things Paul Porter's personal effort in forwarding the 7-day workweek in shipbuilding is foremost in my mind. I therefore felt it was my duty to advise you that as I know Porter in connection with his work on shipbuilding stabilization, he has been striving for greater production, and therefore I can conclude from my knowledge of Porter that in this emergency, he is making a contribution to the war effort.

HENRY J. KAISER.

Mr. Speaker, the following statement was made to me on February 9, 1943:

Paul R. Porter has been most unfairly maligned by Congressman DIES. I have known him for a number of years. He not only has the full confidence of labor, but I know that he is also respected by industrial management and Government officials charged with responsibility for war production. Porter has never been associated with any organization whose loyalty can for one moment be questioned. I know Porter to be a sincere and able defender of democracy.

JOHN GREEN,
President, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, Camden, N. J.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Henry Knight, of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, made the following statement to me on Monday, February 8, 1943:

I think Paul R. Porter has done one of the most outstanding jobs, with very many difficulties involved, in the airplane stabilization proceedings. His efforts have been well received by both labor and management. I have had lunch with him, that is, personally, about 10 or 15 times, and have discussed his views with him. He is sound in most of his reasoning, and I am convinced that he has a sincere interest in winning the war and furthering our total war effort. I feel he is a sincere American.

Mr. Speaker, the following telegram was sent yesterday, February 9, 1943, to Paul R. Porter:

Following wire was today dispatched to Hon. MARTIN DIES: "I am informed some question has been expressed regarding the character and ability of Paul R. Porter, of the War Production Board. May I respectfully advise you that I am personally acquainted with Mr. Porter and have personally observed his actions and activities as a representative of the War Production Board and a special representative of the War Labor Board, and I do not hesitate to vouch for his honesty, capability, and conscientiousness both as an individual and in his Government capacity. Robert E. Gross, president, Lockheed Aircraft Corporation."

LEONARD K. SCHWARTZ,
Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, Burbank, Calif.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of the Dies committee has overshadowed everything that we have done or tried to do in this session of Congress and has prevented this great legislative body from performing the services which our constituents and our country expect from us. Judging from my own experience here and from the irresponsible actions and words of the members of this committee, I am forced to conclude that those who love their country should vote against this un-American Dies committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the rule and I am opposed to the resolution and will vote against it. As a preface to my remarks let me say that the patriotism of the distinguished gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Dies committee, if at all, is exceeded only by his great ability as an orator. As an orator and swayer of audiences by oratory, I doubt if the gentleman has few equals and perhaps no superior today. It is my opinion that no Member of this House or member of any other legislative branch of the Government could move a body of women and men to the point that they would continue the life of this committee on the report and the arguments made by the distinguished gentleman. Nowhere can I find an excuse for its existence today as it has been functioning.

One would think we were at war with Russia instead of with Germany. Plenty could be found to do in connection with Nazi sympathizers in this country, but the Communists and those of communistic leanings are the ones at which the shafts are driven. Personally I have a deep affection and a great admiration for this distinguished gentleman, but I cannot go along with him in view of the record.

This resolution deals with the continuation of the committee. I doubt if the so-called Dies committee has been functioning as a committee. We know not the acts of this committee except as it reports to the House and what we are told. In the last report filed by a dissenting member of the committee to the membership of the House, I quote from:

1. There has been no opportunity for discussion or amendment of the report or for committee members to do any work upon it. No meeting has been held for its consideration. The report was presented to members on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. It is, in my judgment, wrong for such a document as an annual report of this committee to be treated in this manner, particularly at the present time.

2. Beyond this I have one major point and several of lesser importance which I am impelled to make. The major reason for my dissent is this: America is at war against Germany, Japan, and Italy. The very existence of freedom, democratic government, and all America has stood for hinges upon the outcome of that war. It is perfectly clear to me that under circumstances of this sort, the primary task of a committee on un-American activities is the exposure of the activities and propaganda of forces friendly to enemy countries and of groups in this country who wittingly, or unwittingly, promote their cause.

I further wish to quote from this minority report:

But I feel very profoundly that the main excuse for this committee's existence at the present time is that it may contribute to the maximum possible extent to stiffening of the resistance of the American people to open or covert pro-Axis propaganda and to the building of a vigorous and unified democratic sentiment in the United States. Its annual report offered an opportunity to strike a blow in that direction. That opportunity has been neglected.

I commend the reading of the minority report filed by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] to the membership of the House.

We Americans today have but one concern. We are imbued with but one thought, that is, the winning of this war as quickly as possible with the least possible loss of life and property. Our every word and our every act should be bent toward this one objective. Anyone who utters a word or commits an act that causes confusion or disunity which, in turn, would prolong the war for 1 hour or 1 minute is rendering a grave disservice to his country and to the boys who on land and sea and in the air are giving up their lives for you and me.

I am not going to charge that on the other side of the aisle there is nearly unanimity of support for this resolution for political purposes. Let the consciences of these gentlemen answer that. Neither am I going to say by implication or otherwise that this whole thing is a drive at the executive department of this Government. Again let us search our consciences.

I, too, was attacked in the last campaign by those bitter and prejudiced publications such as the New Republic, who deliberately falsified as to my record in Congress. I let those lies pass because I felt my people knew me better than these propagandists who were trying to put over something apparently nefarious to the interests of my country. My people chose not to follow their advice and lies.

There is an old expression that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." I think we will all agree that the proof of that rests on elementary common-sense thinking. Now, that being true at all times, how much more true is it when that house is at war, and not just another war, but a conflict that were we to lose, the United States, that we know and love, might never again be as we now know it.

Japan today, controlling as it does about 90 percent of most of the vitally necessary raw materials and possessing as it does the hordes of cheap labor, is in a very advantageous position to compete and dominate in any world market. It, together with Germany, who has shown herself very adept at competing in a world market, would be in a position to keep us very much subjugated for a long time to come.

I seriously question the wisdom of extending the life of this committee, and let me say here and now that being neither a Communist nor a sympathizer of things communistic, my action springs not from a wish to protect those who would destroy our Government but rather, notwithstanding that abhorrence of communism, I feel that this is no time to create confusion, suspicion, doubt, and distrust in the minds of our soldiers and workers by giving them the impression that this great and awful struggle is all for naught—that if they win their freedom from the unholy forces alined against us they will find they have lost their freedom at home. From some of the daily papers one would get the idea that the end of the war will see the Communist Party in control of the administrative, legislative, and judicial branches of our Government. And, if this is the impression registered upon us, how abysmally apathetic—yes, even openly antagonistic—must it leave our great ally Russia. The recent publicity given this committee must be all the more embarrassing to our already embarrassed military and diplomatic group who must make daily contacts with Russia. I had heard that conditions were very strained, Lord only knows how they could be otherwise, and was very upset to see in the Times-Herald of February 4 an article which clearly shows that in at least one of our chief military theaters of war conditions had reached such an impasse that General Eisenhower felt forced to issue the following statement:

> We must realize that we are fighting a touchy war, and everything we do, day and night, must be directed toward the winning of that war. I remind you once again of getting the word spread of my attitude toward irresponsible talk directed at any one of our allies. All officers must be made to understand that in unwarranted criticism of any ally we are playing into the hands of the Axis, and in case of an American officer, he will be subject to direst punishment that I can possibly inflict administratively.

Strong words but conditions must warrant and necessitate a strong remedy because American officers are, as a general rule, not inclined to be autocratic.

After all is said, the fact remains that Russia is not only an ally, but the one ally but for whom the good Lord above only knows how far and to what extent Hitler and his cohorts would be successful, and while it is true that Russia is fighting her own war, do not forget even for a moment that in her heroic and costly struggle with the Germans she is also fighting our war, stopping bullets that your sons and mine are next in line to receive. May I suggest, on reading history, Russia and France were two of the greatest Old World friends this country ever had in the past.

If, for no other reason than those given, I think the question of communistic infiltration into our Government should be left to the Department of Justice who are at once both able and patriotic enough to see that our form of government is not lost while we devote all our energy, attention and thought to the quick and successful conclusion of this awful conflict.

I have on former occasions opposed the continuation of this committee save once—then following certain statements given to the press by the chairman of the committee when the appropriation came up for the committee, I opposed and voted against the appropriation. I only voted to continue the life of the committee because at that time I was assured by a member of that committee that they were going after our common enemies, Germany, Japan, and Italy and their friendly cohorts. Doubts of this nature were not appearing only to myself—the conservative and scholastically well thought of Washington Post in an editorial of March 31, 1942, had this to say of the sudden pursuit of this committee from our common enemy, Germany and Japan, to our ally Russia:

> Mr. WALLACE declares in his statement that the doubts and anger which this and similar statements of Mr. DIES tend to arouse in the public mind might as well come from Goebbels himself as far as their practical effect is concerned.

The Post says "this is strong language," but goes on to say "it cannot be said that it is undeserved."

I could justify the setting up of an altogether new committee sooner than I could justify my voting to continue this one. Such a new committee, for which I see an actual need more and more every day, would have as its sole purpose and function the seeing to it that while our soldiers and workers abroad and at home were fighting to protect the freedom and benefits they had won by hard and long years of toil and suffering that that same freedom and those benefits were not lost here at home. There is an ancient and fishlike smell about the way the committee has been directing its efforts. We had better pause in this trying moment of our history to decide whether or not we are going to throw away our liberties, scrap the Bill of Rights, throw our judicial traditions and admonitions of some of our greatest leaders into the discard and engage in a hysterical Nation-wide witch hunt, or whether we are going to preserve the principles on which this country was founded.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, that great and beloved American Jurist, penned an answer to the right of any group to defame and persecute any other group when he said:

> If there is any principle of the Constitution that more imperatively calls for attachment than any other, it is the principle of free thought—not free thought for those who agree with us, but freedom for the thought we hate.

God forbid that we, by a misguided sense of patriotism, scrap freedom, democracy, and justice at the very time when that despotic triumvirate is seeking to do the same thing but for another reason.

I think it is not off the point, in making this plea to you to reflect and weigh the probable consequences of the act you are about to undertake, to tell you of an incident in another country which took place about 100 years ago. This story has to do with some young Irish home-rule advocates who in their way were considered with much more apprehension by the English than the Communists are in this country.

During the young Ireland disorders of 1848, nine young men were captured, tried, and convicted of treason against the Queen. The sentence was death.

The presiding judge read the names of the condemned:

> Charles Duffy, Morris Lyene, Patrick Donahue, Thomas McGee, John Mitchel, Thomas Meagher, Richard O'Gorman, Terrence McManus, Michael Ireland. Have you anything to say before the court passes sentence?

Thomas Meagher had been chosen to speak for them all:

> My lord, this is our first offense, but not our last. If you will be easy with us this once, we promise on our word as gentlemen to try to do better the next time. And the next time, sure we won't be fools enough to get caught.

The indignant judge sentenced them to be hanged by the neck. But passionate protest from all over the world forced Queen Victoria to commute the sentence. The men were transported for life to the penal colonies of the then savage Australia.

In 1871, a Sir Charles Duffy was elected prime minister of the Australian State of Victoria. To her amazement, Queen Victoria learned that this was the same Charles Duffy who had been transported for high treason 26 years before. She demanded the records of the other men who had been transported, and this is what she learned: McManus and Donahue were brigadier generals in the United States Army. O'Gorman was the governor general of Newfoundland. Morris Lyene had been attorney general of Australia, to which office Michael Ireland succeeded. McGee was president of the Council for the Dominion of Canada. Mitchel was a prominent New York politician who became the grandfather of the Mitchel who was mayor of New York. Meagher was Governor of Montana.

The moral of that story and the point I want to drive home is that perhaps time is a better and saner judge and adjuster of the new and the untried and that after all perhaps persecution sharpens rather than dulls the determination of those minorities with whom we find ourselves in disagreement from time to time.

Let us by our acts today take steps that will unify the people of our country as we cannot afford to take chances of a division among ourselves. This war is not to be trifled with.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I hope that I can be one Member who will discuss this matter on its simple merits. I hold that certainly there is no man in this House who would desire to put a blind bridle on the Congress in these emergent times. I can see no wisdom whatsoever in permitting picayunish and other disputatious phases to enter into a proposition which has to do primarily with making it possible for this Congress to live up to the fullest possible degree to our respective oaths of office to defend the Constitution against enemies foreign and domestic.

There may be some comment concerning or objection to the modus operandi, but when it comes to the dead level test of whether you want to do a job in these emergent times, for God's sake let us keep the Congress advised, even if we do make a mistake about a man now and then concerning the enemies within our ranks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, when this resolution was first before the House, in 1938, among other things I said, and I voted for the resolution originally:

> Any committee appointed by the Speaker will be fair, just, and impartial, both in its investigation and its findings.

I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, I was in error at that time, and events have not justified my optimistic hope. Not that I place any blame whatever on the Speaker, for I am sure he did not suspect the lengths to which it would go. However, 2 years later, after the committee had demonstrated the methods by which it operates, I said, on the floor of this House:

> It is indeed difficult to vote to continue a legislative committee which, in itself, has adopted methods which are a mockery on democratic processes.

I also said:

> Time after time persons and organizations have been accused of un-American leanings and, because of the manner of the committee in handling and disclosing the charges, have been found guilty, at least in the public's mind, without even being permitted to offer a defense. Practices of this sort are born of intolerance and beget hysteria in the public's mind.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress should not, by its vote today, give further authorization to this committee because of its record of the past in following procedures which are violative of fair play and the sacred right of the accused to a fair hearing before being adjudged guilty. This Congress should not excuse and should not tolerate such conduct on the part of any committee conducting a legislative inquiry, for by so doing it will gradually lead to a contempt for established principles of justice.

Who is there who will say that unbridled demagoguery is not a menace to democracy and true Americanism?

This committee is bringing disrepute on the Congress. The Congress demonstrated only yesterday that it has no faith or confidence and places no reliance upon the charges and allegations of this committee. If we had faith in the charges and findings of the Dies committee, why did we, after it had named certain individuals as being linked with subversive elements, determine, with scarcely a dissenting vote, to appoint another special committee to investigate the same persons who were named by the Dies committee and make a report to us as to whether the charges could be sustained?

Perhaps we should go one step further and appoint another special committee to investigate the un-American procedures of the so-called Dies committee.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion may I say this committee has created suspicion, distrust, and disunity all over the United States. It has embarrassed the Department of Justice, it has embarrassed the State Department, and it has had a bad effect upon our diplomatic relations with other countries. This Congress can have no pride whatsoever in the operations of a committee of that sort and I hope that its continuance will not be authorized.

I cannot, by my vote, endorse a practice which adjudges a person guilty before the accused has had an opportunity to be heard in his own defense.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GALE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GALE. Mr. Speaker, a large number of us are afraid to vote against the continuation of the Dies committee. Afraid to vote our honest convictions because we are afraid of the misconception and the false impression which that committee, through abundant publicity, has built up in the American public.

We are afraid that a vote against the Dies committee is a vote for communism. I think most of us know better.

Investigating un-American activity under the leadership of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has become as un-American as any cheap smear campaign. Only in this case the smear is paid for by the people and authorized by this august Congress, the last stronghold of popular government.

Is it un-American to make accusations, to defame character, without giving the accused the slightest chance to defend himself? That is what the Dies committee does. Maybe he is guilty and maybe he is not. Is this the American way? Most of the victims are set upon not on the grounds of treason, not on the grounds that they have committed a crime, but only on the grounds of being liberals.

The men in the Government selected for the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] are not accused of incompetence in office, inefficiency, or corruption, but of holding different opinions.

If there are seditious elements eating from within, sabotaging our war effort, that is for the F. B. I., who can do everything the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] does and do it a lot better.

Is this the American way? Freedom of speech? Freedom of thought?

A dangerous precedent to turn loose the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to charge back and forth across the land, "investigating un-American activities."

What does "un-American" mean? Today it means Communists. Tomorrow perhaps Jews, perhaps Catholics, perhaps isolationists, perhaps Republicans.

A fine precedent—this Dies committee—poorly conceived and worse in execution. I hope we will have the courage to vote down this parody of the American way.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN].

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise at the risk of having my character examined to oppose this resolution. I am not afraid to have it examined. I am not afraid to declare my position.

My family left England in 1638 to avoid the kind of thing this committee tried to do yesterday, and they have been here since then. They have fought in every war of this country. If that be communism, make the most of it.

I believe that some of the important corporations on the boards of which I sit as director would like to know that if I oppose this resolution I am going to be declared to be favoring communism. I oppose it bitterly. I say to you that the best weapon against it is American fairness and a contented and a prosperous community. That is the only weapon that will prove effective against communism.

More than anything else, Mr. Speaker, I am opposing this resolution as I did last time because in discussing the matter with some of our military and naval leaders they told me this story, which I give to you. You can draw your own conclusions from it. They said, "Mr. BALDWIN, have you ever shot bird over a green dog that flushes birds so soon that most of them get away?" That is the way we feel about the Dies committee.

I hope this resolution will not prevail. I do not believe it is proper for a legislative body to have a permanent investigating committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter from a soldier and one from Secretary Ickes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

LET'S QUIET MARTIN—FOR THE DURATION

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I am unalterably opposed to the continuation of the Dies committee. I speak as one who voted for the Dies committee in 1941, when it was my belief that the committee did some good work and little harm, but at that time we were at peace with the world. Now we are engaged in one of the greatest global conflicts in world history.

Yes, we are fighting for our very existence, our self-preservation, and if we are to succeed, we must mobilize the entire resources of the Nation and obtain the cooperation and unity of every man, woman, and child.

Fighting men, guns, ships, planes, and tanks alone will not win this war. It will require the ingenious exercise of tact and diplomacy to display a real spirit of harmony and unity with our allies and peoples in the countries occupied by American soldiers, as well as the development of public morale and a solidarity from within. We can succeed only if we are united. We know we must defeat all who would divide us. We know that the unity in America and the unity of America with all its allies must be complete. Furthering the cause of international unity, I quote a communique from the Allied headquarters in North Africa, February 3, 1943, which reports that—

Lt. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower issued a sharply worded memorandum warning that any American officer engaging in unwarranted criticism of any ally would be subject to the direst punishment that I can possibly inflict administratively.

"We must all realize that we are fighting a tough war and everything we do, day and night, must be directed toward the winning of that war" he said in a memorandum to all his staff officers.

The gentleman from Texas, Congressman DIES, charged that radicals and crackpots seek to overthrow the United States Government, but he failed to produce one scintilla of evidence that this condition is true. Does he make this assertion because a few Communists are on the pay roll? Is our country in danger of being overthrown because of these Communists on the pay roll? If that is true, then we certainly are in a sad condition. If these Communists plan to overthrow the Government, they can be prosecuted under existing law and we in Congress—including the gentleman from Texas, MARTIN DIES—know that to be fact.

Although the RECORD does not disclose these very words, I can recall the following statement made to this House last Monday a week by the gentleman from Texas, Congressman DIES: "The war against bureaucrats is more important than anything else." Is it more important to defeat Roosevelt and his administration than to lick Hitler?

The Dies committee by its hit-and-miss statements against certain Americans made in the past 2 years, is dividing the American people and creating distrust between the United States and our able ally, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. I hate communism and everything it stands for. We all know that is the basic philosophy of the Russian Government, yet today we find ourselves allied with Russia, both of us fighting for the very same objective—the extermination of the barbaric German horde. The unconditional surrender of the Axis is the new key word of the Allies and the Russians are certainly doing their part to bring about our objective. Russia's cause is our cause; if she loses, we lose. We continually praise the Russian soldiers for their heroism and courage; we praise the Russian people for their great sacrifice. Yes; we pat them on the back with one hand and then place a time bomb under them with the other.

The primary function of the Dies committee was to ferret subversive and un-American activities that attempt to overthrow our Government. In 1942 the committee submitted a lengthy report and with the usual reckless hit-and-miss policy, a number of outstanding members of the Board of Economic Warfare, of which Vice President HENRY A. WALLACE is chairman, were mentioned as Communists, among them a David Vaughn, a splendid American who unequivocally denied any such communistic affiliation. David Vaughn entered suit against the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] realized that there was a man who called Mr. DIES' bluff, he publicly apologized before this House and then had the House Accounts Committee pay the costs of settling the suit. At that time the gentleman from California, Congressman JERRY VOORHIS, an outstanding young liberal member of the committee, filed a dissenting report in which he stated that DIES had not called a meeting of the committee, but issued the report without consulting him.

Two weeks ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] again published a list of "Communists" and made remarks on the floor against them and against many of our leading citizens who are as patriotic and as genuine Americans as any Member of this House, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. I speak particularly of Frederick C. McKee, of Pittsburgh, Pa. I want the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to know that my people resent such unfair innuendos and misstatements of fact against Frederick C. McKee which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] made before the House. Even the Pittsburgh newspapers which are supporting the Dies committee through editorial comments resent the attack against McKee, and I quote a part of an editorial of the Pittsburgh Post Gazette:

The Dies committee has shown a lamentable weakness in confusing perfectly legitimate activities with those of un-American tinge. An example of this is the committee's reflections upon the Citizens for Victory Committee and its treasurer, Frederick C. McKee. This is no subversive agency of either the right or the left.

I know Frederick C. McKee personally. His family constitutes pioneer Americans, the type that help make America great. One of Mr. McKee's great grandfathers founded one of the first window-glass plants in Pittsburgh; another founded the first newspaper in Butler, Pa. His maternal grandfather was a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature; his father was an eminent lawyer and a member of the original select council of Pittsburgh, and one of its most successful business executives. Mr. Frederick C. McKee enjoys that reputation today.

In 1938 Mr. McKee founded an organization of Pittsburgh citizens to oppose the purchase of Japanese goods and to secure an embargo on shipments to Japan of scrap iron and oil while Japan was carrying on her war of aggression against China and expanding south toward the Dutch East Indies. Impressed with his objectives, in the Seventy-seventh Congress I introduced H. R. 4824 and H. R. 4825, which provided and placed an embargo on petroleum products and scrap iron exported to Japan.

Mr. McKee was a member of the National Executive Committee for Nonparticipation in Japanese Aggression of which Secretary of War Stimson and Admiral Yarnell were honorary chairmen. American purchases of Japanese silk were reduced 20 percent but enough people did not recognize the Japanese menace and the necessity of preventing the shipment of 20,000,000 tons of scrap iron which is now being used against us via Japanese ships, guns, and tanks.

Since when cannot citizen groups organize to weed out and purge Members of Congress who are obstructionists and are impeding the war effort? Since when do Members of Congress have an inviolate right to this office? Mr. McKee believed that the die was cast when the lease-lend policy was established by the majority of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and it was his belief and the belief of members of his committee that Congressmen who continued to oppose, snipe, and delay were obstructionists and that such Congressmen seriously interfered with our war effort, and as a result were placed on the committee's purge list. Is this a subversive act? Is an attempt to defeat any Congressman for any reason un-American? Of course not, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] knows better than that.

Again we find the gentleman from California [Congressman JERRY VOORHIS], of the Dies committee, disagreeing with his chairman, and I quote page 705, of the RECORD of Monday, February 8, 1943, where the Congressman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] states:

The list of the 39 people submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] was, as he said himself earlier today, submitted by himself and not by the action of the committee. Indeed I have tried myself since the list was submitted to see the evidence. The gentleman from Texas of course told me I could see it but so far I have not been able to see it. It has not been available.

In this total war, I want the Federal Bureau of Investigation to represent this Nation and ferret subversive and un-American activities, and guard against sabotage and espionage. I quote J. Edgar Hoover who has done a magnificent job with his splendid F. B. I. staff:

There has been no foreign concentrated or directed act of sabotage in the entire United States of America in this World War to date.

I am familiar with dozens of arrests made of men in the mills in my district in which such plots or plans were nipped in the bud by the F. B. I. In time of war, I prefer the F. B. I. with its subtle, careful, well-planned, organized, and unpublicized manner of dealing with sabotage and espionage, and subversive and un-American acts against the Government rather than the headline-seeking, advance-notice dangerous tactics of the Dies committee.

Leading newspapers of the Nation concerned only with our Nation's welfare ask for the elimination of the Dies committee. Among these is the Christian Science Monitor, Detroit Free Press, Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, New Orleans Times-Picayune, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Chicago Times, Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph, El Paso Times, Chicago Sun, St. Louis Star-Times, Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph-Herald, and many others. Let me quote the Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer, one of the finest independent newspapers in the Nation:

He [DIES] has a tendency to confuse liberal, humanitarian, and progressive thought with communism. He often seems to be moved not so much by a deep and sincere wish to expose antidemocratic activities as by an eagerness for publicity.

I am attaching hereto a letter from Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, which clearly proves the hit-and-miss methods pursued by the gentleman from Texas, Congressman DIES, when he lambasts Hugh Miller, senior attorney in the Bituminous Coal Division, as a Communist in the Government's employ when Hugh Miller is now a private in the United States Army, having enlisted on September 26, 1942, and is assigned to the paratroops division now serving overseas. When any lawyer leaves his job to get into the paratroops service, he deserves the credit and plaudits of all Americans.

In view of DIES' reckless misstatements and in view of contradictions made by a member of his own committee, in the legal parlance which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] as a lawyer well understands, I say to him and his committee: Falsus in unus—falsus in omnibus. False in one—false in all.

This scrapping among ourselves is certainly not doing the public morale any good. But it certainly is excellent propaganda for Goebbels and his Axis cohorts.

I also attach hereto a letter from a soldier in the Mojave Desert, Calif., who is ready to die for his country and who pleads for the elimination of the Dies committee.

Martin, we are fighting for our very lives in this global war, and to win this war we need the fullest cooperation of every man, woman, and child in America, and the cooperation of every ally abroad—and this means Russia, too—so until the peace is written, let us suspend the activities of your committee. If we preserve the energy expended fighting each other and our allies and mobilize this energy in our fight against our common enemy, the Axis, victory in this war will be quick and certain.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 8, 1943.

Hon. SAMUEL A. WEISS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WEISS: This will acknowledge your wire of February 5 requesting information concerning Alice Barrows and Hugh Miller, mentioned in my recent press conference.

Miss Alice Barrows was employed on school building problems in the Office of Education, which was under this Department until July 1, 1939, when it was transferred to the Federal Security Agency under the Reorganization Act. She retired from the Federal service at the close of last August.

With respect to Mr. Hugh Miller, he was a senior attorney in the Bituminous Coal Division of this Department and went into the United States Army voluntarily as a private on September 26 last. He wasn't looking for a soft job and he wanted to fight his country's enemies. It is my understanding that he has been trying to get an assignment with the paratroops. Personally I think that when a lawyer leaves his job and tries to get into the paratroop service he deserves some credit.

In my opinion it is as bad as it is un-American to assail, without a hearing, those who might have the benefit of some official channel of defense, but it is shameful when they are no longer on the Federal pay rolls. It shows the recklessness of Congressman DIES and the lengths to which he will go to gain the spotlight when he thinks it to his advantage. If Congressman DIES' interest is merely in purging the Federal rolls of undesirables, why does he not confine his efforts to those who are actually on the job in the Government departments?

I could not but note that in his arraignment of Federal employees who had been given no chance to defend themselves, Congressman DIES made no reference to any possible investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of any of the persons he named. If there were such investigations fairness demanded that they should be put into the record. I know of my own knowledge that, with respect to some of the persons listed by Congressman DIES as being suspected of communistic connections or dispositions, this simply is not true, and even if it were I still insist that the good old American practice of not condemning unless a right to defend has been offered is a good one. The more troubled the times the greater the necessity for fair play.

If there are any Communists in my Department I would like not only the names, but the proof. I will not fire anyone unless my action is based upon facts. My position is the same with reference to employees of pro-Nazi sympathies. One thing that surprises me is that Mr. DIES can so readily find "Communists" and so rarely discover a Nazi, although the Federal Bureau of Investigation not only seems to find them but, in many instances, already has been able to prove in open court acts of actual aid and comfort to the enemy.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

THURSDAY MORNING.

Time: 11:30 a. m.
Place: Mojave Desert, Calif.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Received both your letters today and it helped to bring up my morale a little more. I presume that we will be here in the desert for a month or two longer and then probably a trip home before we land, possibly in Africa, as this is only my guess.

I am glad to hear that Mother is visiting Mrs. Weiss for it keeps her mind from wandering to California. It is a shame that all those young kids have to come into the Army, but I guess it's for the best, for we all have to make sacrifices to preserve our great democracy, for I believe the same blood that ran in the veins of our forefathers at Valley Forge runs in the veins of American boys today.

I have great faith in our President, and that meeting between him and Prime Minister Churchill is encouraging news and has boosted the morale here in our battery 100 percent. He's got the kind of guts that is leading the way for us younger boys to emulate, and I am anxious to get into action and help end this struggle.

There is only one discouraging note and that is the Dies committee. Why doesn't he quit until the war is over, because I think his committee will divide the American people, and I don't think Russia will trust us as allies if the Congress continues to endorse him. I hate communism, but why stab Russia in the back when only by their courage and sacrifice have they made it possible for Uncle Sam to train us boys and prepare to lick our one common enemy, Hitler. Let DIES investigate the Fascists and the Nazis and blackshirts and he will be doing a damned sight more to promote national unity than he is today. Please, Sammy, help defeat him.

Give my regards to Mrs. Weiss, and the future Congressman, Jimmy, and oh, yes, my sweetheart, Joy (bet she'll like that).

Your pal,

JOHNNY.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE].

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I am in very much the same position as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN], who preceded me. I enlisted in the last war when I was 19, 2 days after war was declared. I served 22 months. I am a charter member of the American Legion of Vanderburgh County, and I think I enjoyed the support of 90 percent of the Catholic clergy in my district in this election.

To me, it is unfortunate that we have had personal matters brought into this discussion. I do not hold for 1 minute with those who have approached me filled with personal vindictiveness against this committee. I am not interested in those who profess their interest in the Constitution. A virtuous woman never has to profess her virtues. However, I think that this committee is a negative approach to Americanism. You will make Americanism work only by making democracy work, and that is a positive job in America and not a negative one.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I should like to first read from the Daily Worker, which, if you have been keeping up with the Dies committee, you know is the official Communist organ of New York. I read from the issue of January 31. It concerns myself:

A pleasant and amiable young man, ROGERS has, in my opinion, one shortcoming which may interfere with his maximum effectiveness and may blind his vision on some issues—a strong, unreasoning anti-Communist bias.

For years in my newspaper I have vigorously attacked and denounced Communists. In my election they bitterly opposed me. They tried to split the Democratic Party, and some of you gentlemen know how disastrous that can be. The Communist candidate who ran against me received 1,200 votes.

I speak today because one of these 38, of which so much has been spoken about, is an American paratrooper. I was recently in the Army, and came here directly from the Tank Destroyer Center at Camp Hood, Tex. I feel it unfair to accuse a man of seeking to overthrow the United States Government by force and violence when, indeed, he is intending to lay down his life to defend his country. I feel it unfair to attack this man without a hearing, without an adequate checking of the facts, and when that American soldier has no opportunity to defend himself. I feel strongly about this attack on a man in uniform, but there has been enough of hate here today and I do not want to add to it.

I agree with the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] that the hatreds raised by this committee has been on both sides, and I do not want it to go any further. I do not feel, gentlemen, that this committee should be continued. I ask you to vote for tolerance today.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to raise what might be called a personal issue in this House, but I must vote against this committee as presently constituted. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is personally very amiable, and he is a brilliant debater. I have no feeling against him. But in his activity he has succeeded in stirring up such animosity and division in this country by his reckless name calling and his prejudgments that I think he has done more harm than he has done good. It does not do any good to say that only the Communists oppose this committee. Many responsible newspapers do not favor this resolution, and many responsible and great Americans deplore the activities of the gentleman. He has injured the cause of labor by frequently referring to as friendly to communism those labor leaders who are really trying to drive communism out of the labor movement. He has by his insinuations cast suspicion upon our great President, who has been divinely appointed to lead us through this crisis. He has constantly attacked the most trusted advisers of the President.

He has tainted with suspicion men whose Americanism I would place as high as that of any Member of this House. He has been accuser, judge, and special pleader in this House against many good men, as well as a few rascals.

He has acted arbitrarily and alone, without consulting his committee. He has been the committee.

I am against communism—have no doubt of that. But I am also against unfairness, witch hunting, and legislating by emotion and prejudice rather than in the exercise of cool judgment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. OUTLAND].

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Speaker, we are being called upon today to vote on an issue that has far-reaching consequences—the continuance of the committee to investigate so-called subversive activities. I bow to no one in my hatred of all "isms" and in my fidelity to the United States of America. However, I cannot conscientiously vote to continue this particular committee. I have only a few moments, so I must cover ground rapidly.

Just what are subversive activities? Who is to be the judge? There have been people who have called the chairman of the committee subversive, which in my opinion is entirely incorrect. But the permitting of individual interpretation of just what is deemed subversive is a dangerous and un-American thing.

The essence of the American Constitution, which this committee claims to be upholding, is the Bill of Rights, those 10 amendments which guarantee, among other rights, individual freedom of speech, of press, and of assembly. When a congressional committee uses its power to denounce publicly individuals of liberal or progressive tendencies simply because such points of view do not coincide with those of the committee members, we are trampling on the Constitution, not upholding it. For example, of the 38 names that have been so frequently discussed on this floor, my colleague from California, a member of the committee, on Friday showed conclusively that, far from being subversive, many of these individuals are honorable American citizens, against whom such charges were baseless.

Mr. Speaker, this is dangerous business, and in my judgment the actions of the committee definitely indicate that it should be abolished, not continued.

If we do have un-American and subversive activities in our midst, what type would we expect them to be? We are at war all over the world with the forces of fascism and nazi-ism. Is it not logical to expect that it would be these elements that would be the real saboteurs? However, what do we find? We find approximately one-tenth only of the committee report devoted to these truly dangerous activities. On January 4, 1943, the Department of Justice charged 33 individuals with a Nation-wide conspiracy, interfering with the military and naval forces of the United States. The comittee in question did not even go into this matter except indirectly and certainly most inadequately. Many of these individuals were not even mentioned by the committee. If such a committee justifies its existence, such justification must come only after it has proved its worth, not by chasing red herrings, but by capturing yellow rats.

Leaders all over America are asking that we discontinue this committee. Great educators, outstanding editors, leading professional people are demanding that the Dies committee be relegated from the front pages to the obscurity to which it so rightly belongs.

Mr. Speaker, a nation at war must have unity. In my opinion, a far greater degree of unity can be achieved if this committee, which is setting one American element against another, which accuses without sufficient evidence, is not given taxpayers' funds with which to continue.

The chairman of the committee said on the floor the other day, "America must live; America shall live." I am in hearty agreement with him on that point. However, is America so weak and is American democracy so uncertain that it must have a committee to defend it? American democracy will survive long after committees which have occupied unduly the front pages have been forgotten.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, for 4½ years the tactics of the opposition have been to engage in personal abuse and in denunciation of the most vicious kind. Every effort has been made to stop this investigation or to sabotage it. What are the facts? The facts are that last year we received 138,000 requests from your Government agencies for information which they could not obtain from any other source. Sixteen hundred agents of this Government came to our committee offices in Washington to secure information that we were obtaining in 1938 when we were laughed at and ridiculed. They wanted information concerning subversive organizations, and I recall at the time that some people who are now opposing this committee ridiculed us for calling these organizations subversive, and yet when the President established his own committee last year they confirmed our findings in every respect. This committee in 1938 was ridiculed for calling the German-American Bund an espionage agency and for denouncing the Kyffhauser Bund and for denouncing Fascists and Communists and Nazi organizations, and no action was taken until the war was declared, and then suddenly they woke up to find we had in America groups and organizations not loyal to this country, and then they came to our committee every day for information. Finally they assigned men permanently as liaison officers for the various departments to secure information.

The truth is, and no one can deny it if he wants to be fair, that, in spite of errors that we made, errors that any committee would make when dealing with explosive and complicated matters of this character—in spite of that this committee, by reason of securing through its subpena powers all of the information that was then obtainable and which ceased to be obtainable after the war was declared, was able to furnish information that has been the basis for the prosecution and conviction of 98 percent of everyone who has been convicted in this country of violating our espionage and sabotage laws.

I do not appear before this House to ask as a personal favor that this committee be continued. As far as I am individually concerned, I have never dealt with anything in my life in which I and my family have been so completely and so incessantly abused and threatened and hounded from all sides. I have never been in anything in my life in which the agents of this Government and representatives of newspapers, such as PM, have gone into my district for the purpose of smearing me. They have fought me at the polls. They have denounced me in thousands of pamphlets. It is not me alone that they denounce. They also denounce a majority of the Members of this House. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I say to this House, continue the committee, but only on one condition, that we will do our duty, the administration, the C. I. O., and other foes notwithstanding, and if this Congress and if this country does not want a fearless and courageous investigation, if you do not want this committee to expose these evils that threaten this country, then, Mr. Speaker, I submit, the investigation should be voted down and the committee discontinued.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to permit any personal attack upon me to provoke me into diverting the 2 minutes which have been allowed me to make any defense. I do not need it. My record will be judged by the American people, by time, and events.

I rise at this time to objectively, dispassionately discuss the role of this committee in a time when we are at war against Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy, and Japan. Yes; we must defend ourselves against our enemies—our enemies there and our enemies here.

The record of indictments, the record of prosecutions up to this time do not disclose any plot on the part of labor, any plot on the part of those people who have been mentioned by the Dies committee—in fact, no plot at all on the part of the Communists against the safety of this Nation. All are fighting and working in the defense of the country.

However, I hold in my hand an indictment which tells the story of a most gigantic conspiracy against the safety of America, an indictment for conspiracy which was more powerful and widespread than the conspiracy of Aaron Burr against our internal safety. I hold here an indictment of 34 individuals, 42 organizations, and 41 publications of domestic Fascists, all indicted by a United States grand jury. For what? Interfering with, impairing, and influencing the loyalty, morale, and discipline of the military and naval forces of the United States; causing insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States. What did the Dies committee do about it since it came into existence in 1938? Not a single iota of evidence, not a piece of exposure since the inception of this conspiracy which began in 1933. I repeat, not a bit of attention was ever given to this gigantic conspiracy, to these traitors, to these enemies of the Nation by the Dies committee. The Dies committee failed in a crucial hour and on a crucial matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Rules Committee has no time available for himself, and, therefore, I yield him 3 minutes and will keep the remaining 3 minutes for myself.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman very much. I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I must conclude that in the opinion of some of my fellow Members, I am not a worthy Member of this body. I am not mad. I am sad. When I appeared before the Rules Committee a day or two ago to oppose the continuation of the Dies committee, a gentleman for whom I have the highest respect asked me if I believed in the Communist or communistic theory of government. All I could say was, "No." I am a Democrat. If I were not a Democrat I would be a Republican. I am not seeking third-party connections or affiliations in order to express my views on governmental questions.

I must oppose the continuation of this committee or go home to myself and have no further confidence in myself. I oppose it, my fellow Members of this Congress, because I believe it is almost slanderous to refer to it as a committee on un-American activities. If it were and were needed, I profess to you I would give my last drop of blood in order to maintain its activities. But I have been persuaded—I voted against it before—I have been persuaded that it is a Martin Dies committee and nothing else.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], a member of the Dies committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, for 4 years I have been a member of this committee. Three times before today I have come into the Well of the House, on similar occasions, and have made speeches in which I said that I believe, as I do now, that a committee of this kind could render a useful service; that I believed that this committee had done work which was important and valuable, that I had certain convictions about the mistakes that such a committee could make which would very seriously weaken if not ruin its effectiveness, and that so far as I was concerned I would pledge the House that I would use my best efforts to see that those mistakes were not repeated and that rules of procedure were adopted that would prevent their being made. It has been my conception that a committee of this kind should investigate all types of activity which were subversive of constitutional government with equal force and vigor. It has been my conviction that a committee of this kind should in time of war direct its efforts primarily against agents and propaganda of enemy powers. I believe a committee of this kind should act as a committee, and as a group; should consider carefully every public statement before it was made by any member. It is my conviction, deepest of all, that the effectiveness of the battle by any democracy against communism on the one hand and fascism on the other is to be won first and foremost by the kind of fairness, justice, and opportunity of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN] spoke, and that democracy is not helped if those charged with the task of investigating such matters are not very careful indeed to distinguish those who fundamentally do not believe in constitutional government from all those who are fundamentally loyal to constitutional government regardless of their political opinions.

The events of the last few months and especially those of the past week have impelled me to recognize that the direction in which this committee is now veering is away from and by no means toward my conception of the way this job ought to be done. I have seen it becoming more and more a political instrument of definite conservative bias, and less and less a dignified, impartial, and effective congressional committee. For when a committee or one member of a committee includes people, loyal to their country but whose opinions simply disagree with those of a majority of that committee on a list of those to be proscribed, and accused, then such action becomes dangerous to democracy itself instead of an exposure of un-American activities.

It seems obvious to me, in time of war especially, it becomes of fundamental importance that the emphasis of such a committee's work should be against the efforts of enemy powers and their agents to weaken our nation's war effort. I do not say the committee has done nothing in this field, for it has, but the real impact and emphasis of its work falls more and more in the field of domestic political controversy, less and less where, in my judgment, it belongs if our Nation's cause is to be served. I voted three times to continue the committee; I cannot do it this time. I am impelled by my own conviction and by the fact that I know perfectly well from my experience, that although I might try to urge that certain changes be made in the methods of the committee so mistakes might be avoided, I should not succeed. For this reason it seems to me that the only thing for me to do, is to vote against its continuance, and I shall do so when the roll is called. Under these circumstances, of course, I should not expect that I would be named as a member of it in the future.

Two reports of this committee, the reports of 1940 and 1941, carry my signature. Those reports I helped to prepare along with other members of the committee. I stand on what was said in those reports. The last annual report I could not sign. My minority views are appended thereto and represent, together with my speech of Monday last, my further reasons why I cannot vote to continue this committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of time. Unfortunately under the rules there is only allotted a short time for debate on this Dies resolution, and in my desire to yield time to the many Members who desired to voice their opposition, I have only a few minutes within which to give my reasons and expressions why the resolution should not pass.

Mr. Speaker, I was responsible for the passage of the first resolution creating a House committee to investigate un-American and subversive activities. I have earnestly sought to be helpful and bring to light the activities of persons and groups whose actions and propaganda were inimical to the best interests of our country, and especially those who were in any way instrumental in bringing about disunity and discord. I oppose the pending resolution because of the evidence which has come to me in the thousands of letters and telegrams from ministers, priests, preachers, university professors, and various civic and labor organizations from every section of our country. I believe, you the same as I, if you read one-tenth of these communications in protest that you would in honor bound oppose the continuation of this committee, and I am satisfied if a secret vote were taken the resolution would not pass.

The committee was originally appointed to investigate subversive and un-American activities and un-American organizations. This they have not done. On the contrary, they have devoted themselves to investigating the so-called communistic organizations, or what they call fronts, all of whom, however, are cooperating 100 percent in the struggle against Hitler and the Japs in our efforts to win the war. They seem to forget that we are at war with Hitler and the Japs, and not with Russia. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has devoted his time to charging that he was being smeared by some newspapers that printed the records of those who voted against war preparedness and the President's defense program.

The gentleman from Texas did not give us a single reason in his 2-hour speech the other day, nor have other members of the committee, as to why the life of this committee should be continued. In that speech the major portion of his time was given to assailing those whom he termed "crackpots" and "bureaucrats" in the departments and executive agencies of the Government. He complains in his speech, as I have stated, that he was smeared by some newspapers and commentators. It would appear that he and the proponents of this resolution are past masters at smearing.

Hundreds of outstanding, patriotic men and women never were given a chance to defend themselves against his smearing, or the smearing of those who have similar views. Mr. Speaker, he charges about 20 organizations with being communistic, or having communistic leanings. One, two, or three of them possibly could have been classified as communistic before the war, but since the war they have demonstrated in every way their loyalty and patriotism, and are not trying to bring about discord and disunity Mr. DIES is apparently endeavoring to engender.

For the information of the House I insert a list of the organizations that the gentleman from Texas has branded either inferentially or directly as communistic, as follows:

National Congress for Unemployment and Social Insurance.

American Peace Mobilization.

Workers Alliance, of which Mr. DIES says:

A few years ago one of the largest and most influential front organizations of the Communist Party in this country.

Trade Union Conference for United States.

Federal Writers Project.

Student Congress Against War.

American Fund for Public Service.

National Student League.

National Conference on Constitutional Rights.

Robert Marshall Foundation, which he classifies, inferentially, as communistic.

Greater New York Emergency Conference on Inalienable Rights.

National Federation for Constitutional Liberties.

American Committee for Protection of Foreign-Born.

American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom.

League of American Writers.

American Youth Congress.

National Negro Congress.

American Student Union.

National Lawyers' Guild.

These organizations, Mr. Speaker, are no more communistic than I am a Nazi ideologist. It is my understanding that this list of organizations was filed by the director of research of the Dies committee, and may I ask who is the director of research? Is it not a fact, Mr. DIES, that he himself formerly belonged to the Communist Party? I do not know the background of some of the personnel of your committee. May it not be possible that they, too, have been formerly affiliated with the organizations which you so unfairly and so unjustly denounce as communistic? It is to be regretted, as I said many times, that your committee should confine its work and energy, especially during the last year or more, to ferreting out what, to my mind, are nonexistent communistic activities, and failed to bring to light the activities of the Nazi-Fascist bunds and other un-American and subversive organizations, as well as exposing the hundreds of men who were used by Viereck and his stooges to undermine our form of government, aimed to bring about disunity, using the same methods that Hitler employed in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, there has been appropriated for the use of the Dies committee in its investigations the staggering sum of $495,000, many times in excess of the expenditures of any other House investigating committee heretofore appointed, and it is my observation, in view of the results obtained, that the committee should not receive any additional moneys. Because all their activities have been directed unfairly in a direction beyond the proper scope for the investigation for which the committee was appointed, in vilifying and abusing the administration's activities.

For the information of the House and the country I list the six specific appropriations for the investigations conducted by the committee, as well as the rates of yearly compensation paid to some of the employees of the committee.

Appropriations for the Dies committee

|---|---|
| June 9, 1938 | $25,000 |
| Feb. 9, 1939 | 100,000 |
| Jan. 25, 1940 | 75,000 |
| Sept. 26, 1940 | 35,000 |
| Feb. 11, 1941 | 150,000 |
| Apr. 28, 1942 | 110,000 |
| Total appropriation | 495,000 |
| Balance today | 20,000 |

Compensation of employees of Dies committee

|---|---|
| 1 research director | $7,200 |
| 1 chief investigator | 4,800 |
| 3 investigators, each | 4,200 |
| 6 investigators, do | 3,600 |
| 1 translator | 3,600 |

In 1938 and 1939 the committee's hotel expenses and charges for subsistence amounted to $17,000 and transportation amounted to $18,000.

In 1940, 1941, and 1942, $22,000 was expended for hotel quarters and subsistence and $33,000 for transportation.

Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that the Republican membership should be misled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] as to the need for the continuation of the committee. Mr. FISH, ever since his return from Germany, cannot see or say anything but Red.

I want you to know that I am as patriotic as any person can be. I yield to no one my patriotism. I have been loyal and devoted and am willing to give my life today for my country that has done so much for me, in upholding its institutions, and I feel that it is my duty, in every way that I am able, to aid the cause of America, my country and your country, especially at this time when we are facing threatening dangers.

Mr. Speaker, as to the indirect vilification of the President and others in the administration, history tells us that Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, and Wilson were similarly attacked and villified when they espoused or sought to aid the cause of the masses. Personally I know that the President can take these attacks because the people, if not the Dies committee, have confidence in him. Notwithstanding the attacks and centralized activities against him on the part of the misled forces of Fascists, Tories, and Nazis, the country will demand that he carry on with that courage, wisdom, determination, sincerity, and ability which is his and which is recognized the world over. And I am satisfied, as I was 3 years ago, that he will again be forced to continue. God grant him health that he may continue to safeguard our freedom and our liberty and to carry on, not only as the President, but as the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, to an early, positive victory, and permanent and everlasting peace.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I call upon the membership of this House that in the interest of fair play and in the present and future interests of our country that this resolution for the continuation of the Dies committee should not be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee has just said that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has not presented a single reason for the continuance of his committee. The President of the United States has recognized by creating a departmental committee the fact that the Dies committee has made serious charges against numerous Federal employees that they are Communists and he is having those charges investigated. Certainly, there can be no compromise between Communism and Americanism.

I believe that there is more reason to continue the Dies committee now than ever before. If the administration and those in authority, including President Roosevelt, who have appointed Communists, Reds, and Fellow Travelers to key positions had ousted them from the Federal pay roll when they were exposed by the Dies committee, there would be no need to continue the Dies committee. But instead of throwing them out of the Government they have appointed more and more of them. Every Member of the House whether Republican or Democrat, takes a solemn oath of office to support and defend the Constitution against its enemies, foreign and domestic. At the present time we are engaged in a great war and all our forces are on the march to all-out victory. But it is up to us here in the House to see to it that we combat with every influence we possess those enemies from within, and particularly those communistic termites on the Government pay roll who are seeking to undermine and destroy the very foundations of the Republic. No individual has a right to receive pay from our Government who seeks to promote communism and overthrow our republican form of government guaranteed by the Constitution.

The Congress is determined to put an end to the un-American and communistic activities of our enemies from within especially those holding key administrative positions. That is exactly what the Dies committee is trying to do. Twenty-three Members, or one-third of those who voted against the continuation of the Dies committee last year, were left at home by the electorate.

I wish to deny a statement made heretofore that organized labor is against the continuation of this committee, as it is not a fact. I hold in my hand a letter signed by William Green, president, American Federation of Labor, favoring continuation of the Dies committee and funds to carry out its work against un-American and subversive activities.

I rang up the American Federation of Labor on the telephone and talked to Mr. Hushing, its legislative representative, and he had this to say:

The American Federation of Labor is very much in favor of continuation of the Dies committee. It is doing an excellent piece of work against very powerful opposition.

I hold in my hand a letter from the American Legion, signed by Francis M. Sullivan, executive director, national legislative committee, which has this to say:

At the same time we know that certain subversive individuals and groups, supposedly active in the prosecution of the war, are more interested in tearing down our democratic form of government.

As usual, the opponents of the Dies committee have set up arguments that to further continue its efforts would promote disunity, intolerance, hatred, and in fact would seriously interfere with the prosecution of the war. In our opinion, such statements are preposterous, and no loyal American need fear continuance of the Dies committee.

The letter concludes by urging that—there be no interruption in the splendid work of this committee in investigating the activities of un-American individuals and groups whose major interest, in our opinion, is to substitute a form of government foreign to our American ideals of democratic government.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars and most patriotic organizations are united in requesting the continuation of the Dies committee. The Congress has a duty greater than ever before to use its power and influence to preserve our free American institutions and to safeguard representative and constitutional government. That cannot be done by remaining silent and thereby permitting Communists, Reds, and fellow travelers to remain in powerful key positions within our own Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, change the period to a colon and insert "Provided, That the special committee herein continued shall be composed of eight members."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I join with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in that request.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 302, nays 94, not voting 38, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

(Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

THOMAS ALVA EDISON

Mr. SUNDSTROM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUNDSTROM. Mr. Speaker, in the Seventy-seventh Congress a joint resolution was passed and signed by the President, proclaiming February 11 as Edison Day in commemoration of this great inventor's birthday. Accordingly, in 1942, the President and the Governors of the several States issued a proclamation for the observance of Edison Day.

On January 21 of this year I introduced House Joint Resolution 63, to urge the continuance of this commemorative day. However, in view of the organization program of the Seventy-eighth Congress, action could not be taken on this resolution. Yet I feel that the American public would not forget a man like Edison, even though war has possessed the world.

Thomas Alva Edison, through his more than 1,100 inventions, is helping the United States and our allies to win this war, not through mere inspiration, but in the very real sense of extra fire power and faster speed on the fighting front and more and better production at home.

Mr. Edison has been called, and rightly, "the father of American industry," and surely none of us doubt that it is American production which is now turning the tide toward certain victory.

Thomas Alva Edison was the real father of American industry. His great works actually created new industries, contributed mightily to others, and, in other cases, provided the means by which minor industries became major ones. Edison inventions and methods directly affect practically every industry in America, including our now all-important war industries. These contributions ranged from safety devices and measures to new and fundamental processes of manufacture; to creating new American markets and along with them outlets for the American worker.

It is not enough to refer to Mr. Edison merely as an inventor, the greatest one in history. It is not enough merely to associate him with the electric light, or the phonograph, or the motion-picture camera, or the storage battery. True, all of these and hundreds more are the products of his ingenious mind. But to fully appreciate the influence of Edison on America's gigantic war effort today, we must look beyond any recitation of his inventions and look to their effect in industrial use. Wherever you go, along our enormous production front, you would find Thomas A. Edison—be it far below ground in a mine, aboard a fast freight train, on a ship ploughing the seas, or in any war plant you would choose to name.

There is much inspiration for today's war worker in the life of Mr. Edison himself. He was a worker's worker who claimed that genius is "99 percent perspiration and 1 percent inspiration." A man who, while making industrial America possible, never became an industrialist himself in the ordinary sense of the word. A man who, in surmounting obstacles, worked to make the world a better place to live in.

To give here a detailed list of Edison's contributions to each individual industry would be an almost endless, but amazing, recital. It is a fact that Edison's inventions, placed at the disposal of other men, actually created some of our most war-vital industries. It would be difficult to name any industry that is not more efficient and more productive because of Thomas Alva Edison. What is true in industry, is likewise true on our fighting fronts. Every American plane, ship or tank is a better, tougher piece of fighting equipment because of Thomas Alva Edison. His efforts in the interest of a more peaceful and pleasant world will soon result in our customary way of life.

Since action on House Joint Resolution 63 would be ineffective for this year's celebration, I have introduced another House joint resolution requesting the President to proclaim February 11, 1944, as Edison Day, being mindful at the same time that the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln are also celebrated in the same month. His outstanding deeds and meritorious contributions to humanity warrant the continuance of this celebration, as I feel the American people could never have Thomas Alva Edison placed in obscurity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] is recognized for 15 minutes.

ACCELERATED ARMY MEDICAL PROGRAM, COORDINATION OF INTERNSHIPS

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts from the Journal of the American Medical Association and certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, what I am about to say has no connection with the Ruml plan but, like the Ruml plan—which has been defined as being as simple as daylight saving—the very statement of the problem of Army use of interns should indicate the obvious solution of the problem.

The Pennsylvania State Board of Medical Education and Licensure are aware of the probable enactment of a Pennsylvania statute to permit the 9-month internship—in lieu of 1 year—for the duration of the war. While 33 States will not, as yet, permit the 9-month internship, information at hand indicates that many States may reduce this period shortly.

However, a substantial problem arises here: Before accepting a physician for commission the Army and Navy require a year of internship. This will mean, so far as many hospitals are concerned, that on the expiration of each 9-month period interns will be released from one hospital, lacking facilities for the retention of both incoming and outgoing interns, resulting in a 3-month time lag for these outgoing interns, who will be required to shop around at some other hospital in an effort to put in the additional 3 months required by the services.

Medical authorities have been unable to secure from the armed services any information as to what type of training will be expected of these interns during the extra 3 months. When these interns leave the hospitals after completion of a 9-month rotating internship they will have qualified for the State board examinations. Hospitals in my district are not aware of any set requirements imposed by the Army for the additional 3 months, or of any total requirements as to how full internship should be distributed.

Another unanswered question is: What will happen to an intern who is in the Reserve and who is unable to obtain the 3 months service anywhere?

A recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association states:

The Surgeon General, United States Army, has issued general suggestions and recommendations pertinent to closer cooperation between hospitals approved for internship and the medical colleges under the accelerated medical program. The Surgeon General is loath to recommend that a graduate physician of an approved school be called to active duty with the armed forces prior to completion of a 12 months' general rotating internship. It is obvious that if the hospitals approved for internships do not cooperate with the accelerated program it would lose its effectiveness in releasing men for duty with the Medical Corps as soon as anticipated. There is now an urgent need for young, physically qualified medical officers for field troop duty.

Original directives from the War Department indicated that graduates were allowed 12 to 18 months for completion of essential internships. In many instances interns have interpreted this directive as being authority to utilize the additional time for hospital training before beginning the 12-month rotating internship. This has also allowed hospitals which customarily start their intern classes on or about July 1 of each year to maintain original schedules. It is believed that each hospital should establish a schedule of internships commencing on or about April 1, 1943, available to those who graduate in March 1943 under the accelerated medical program and thereafter as students graduate.

This obviously results in the doubling up of those who have not yet completed their 12 months beginning July 1, 1942, but it is hoped that these interns can be used in approved affiliated internships or in the capacity of subresidents to assist in the orientation of medical school graduates of March 1942. The most recent information available of the interns' situation indicates that there are excessive position vacancies over the supply of available interns.

Unless the situation demands it, the War Department does not desire to shorten the period of internship to less than the 12 months required. However, under the increasing pressure of our military needs, it is necessary to expect graduates to be immediately available, if physically qualified, 12 months from the time of their graduation. The War Department does not feel that the 18 months is necessary for completion of a 12-month internship, and this time will, therefore, no longer be allowed.

It is hoped that all interns will be trained in the rotating type of internship for the 12-month period; that is, one which provides training in medicine, surgery, pediatrics, and their related subspecialties, together with experience in laboratory and roentgenologic diagnosis. It is desired that house officers' positions be filled by those individuals not physically fit for military duty and those who are over-age for troop duty. By following this procedure and increasing the duties of house officers and the essential staff membership, it is believed that a greater proportion of each year's intern class will be made available for active military duty.

Attention is invited to the new War Department directive precluding the appointment of senior medical students or interns as medical officers, Army of the United States, until within 60 days of their proposed active duty date. Such students and interns are protected from call to active duty by the War Department by:

1. Selective-service agreement.
2. Medical Administrative Corps commissions.
3. Commissions as Reserve line officers, which they will receive on graduation from college.

This is accomplished under the authority of the War Department, A. G. O. letter dated May 8, 1942, subject Commissions for Medical Students, the main purpose of which is to protect the essential medical training program.

A letter from the committee on public health legislation of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, addressed to the chairmen of intern committees of hospitals approved for internship by State board of medical education and licensure, under date of January 25, 1943, reads as follows:

DEAR DOCTOR: Inasmuch as medical schools are graduating medical students every 9 months because of the calendar reduction in the length of the course from 4 years to 3 years, there has been considerable confusion over the desirability of reducing the immediately subsequent student-intern year to 9 months.

The Surgeons General of the United States Army and Navy are on record as desiring a continuation of the 12 months' service; but advise, if necessary to reduce, that it might well be the interns' rotation in obstetrics and gynecology should be postponed or eliminated.

Hoping to become intelligently informed on this question, I should like to have your comments:

1. Whether your hospital and management have the facilities or desire to maintain double your quota of interns for a 3-month period of each year;

2. How many interns are required to meet your hospital's service needs during 1943–44?

Kindly answer as soon as possible, so that if it becomes necessary to grant the Department the authority of declaring, for the duration, 9 months as the regular intern year, appropriate legislation may be framed and introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature during the next month.

Very truly yours,

C. L. PALMER,
Chairman, Committee on Public Health Legislation.

Dr. Palmer subsequently stated, on February 5 of this year, that bills in the Pennsylvania Legislature—will be introduced next week requiring a minimum of 9 months internship as the necessary legal training for interns in a hospital approved for intern training. This will continue throughout the duration of the present war and 1 year after. Under such temporary measure the hospitals that desire to rotate their service for interns during the 9 months instead of the year will be able to do so.

My comments have been particularly directed to the dilemma arising from the failure of the Army, as yet, to coordinate its requirements with the new conditions arising as the result of the State medical programs. These programs were instituted in order to expedite the training of medical students at the request of the armed services and in consonance with the demands of the war. There is some reason to believe that the Procurement and Assignment Service contemplates the establishment of a central clearing agency for interns who can be given only 9 months' training, but no announcement has as yet been forthcoming, and it is difficult to understand why the Army does not adopt a procedure similar to that of the Navy. The Navy procedure will permit the immediate commissioning of interns after 9 months of service and will combine the usual naval indoctrination period with 3 months of intern training at a naval hospital.

The Army program has not made provision for absorbing the 3-month time lag between the termination of the 9-month internship and the 12-month period required by the Army. This is a waste of highly skilled manpower, desperately needed, and is most difficult to understand. The Navy program may be summarized as follows:

It is the present policy of the Bureau to order lieutenants (junior grade), MC–V(G), United States Naval Reserve, to active duty in a naval hospital in order to complete 3 months of intern training. These nominations are accomplished in cases where the hospital in which these Reserve officers are serving have adopted an accelerated intern schedule and it is not practicable to retain these officers for the full 12-month period. In the event the Reserve officers desire to complete 3 months of intern training at a naval hospital, they should be advised to submit the following statements in duplicate, signed by the medical director or superintendent of the hospital:

(a) That their hospital has adopted a 9-month schedule of intern training and it is not practicable to retain them at that institution for 1 year of intern training.

(b) That they are released from their contract without prejudice.

(c) List of the services which they have completed and the time spent on each service.

These statements should be forwarded to the Bureau as soon as possible in order that this Bureau may have sufficient time to nominate these officers for active duty.

A table is appended hereto relative to the estimated number of graduates of approved medical schools:

It is comforting to realize that, rather than permit this war to interfere with the education of physicians, the Federal authorities, in cooperation with medical schools, have adopted programs which will increase the output of physicians and at the same time retain the normal curriculum without any material lowering of standards.

Furthermore, the acute need of the Army is for young physicians for assignment to duty with troops. This need must be met, and there is here offered to recent graduates who have just completed internships an unusual opportunity for service. Reports indicate that there are still many qualified graduates of 1941 who have not yet applied for commissions in the Medical Corps.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I quote in part an article from the August 15, 1942, number of the Journal of the American Medical Association:

The 732 hospitals approved for intern training in February 1942 offered a total of 7,228 internship appointments annually. These in relation to the number of medical graduates—5,275 in 1941—would indicate a shortage of nearly 2,000 interns, but actually in view of the availability of second-year men the approved hospitals had only 927 unfilled positions at the time of reporting. The number of vacancies has since increased, however, because of the curtailment of many of the advanced training courses and the appointment of additional interns in some hospitals to compensate for the lack of residents. In this connection it would seem particularly essential that all hospitals cooperate in maintaining an equitable distribution of interns by limiting their appointments to actual minimum needs. As a general rule the ratio of house officers to patients should not exceed 1 intern to 600 annual admissions.

INCREASED PRODUCTION OF INTERNS

The present shortage of interns has a compensatory factor in the accelerated program of undergraduate training now adopted by most of the approved medical schools. Thus within 3 years there will be 4 graduating classes available totaling 21,029 students, as indicated previously in the section on undergraduate education. The first impact of this program will be felt in March 1943, when approximately 4,180 graduates will be ready to begin their intern service 3 months ahead of the usual date. Since the previous group will not have completed its service until July, there will be an overlapping of assignments for 3 months unless the older interns can be advanced to senior positions or be assigned to affiliate services in other hospitals that are short of house officers. If the affiliate plan is adopted, the original hospital should maintain supervision and be responsible for the entire educational period; otherwise it would not be in position to offer an internship certificate covering the last 3 months of training.

CHANGES IN INTERNSHIPS

The Council on Medical Education and Hospitals and the Association of American Medical Colleges have both recommended that internships should not be reduced below 12 months. The essential character of the intern service has likewise been recognized by the Army, Navy, and Selective Service, which have made provisions whereby medical students may be deferred from active military duty until they have completed a year of hospital training. The individual hospitals, however, are confronted with the problem of integrating the 1-year internship with the accelerated medical curriculum under which a new class graduates every 9 months. That intern services are rapidly being modified to coincide with the change in graduation dates is apparent from reports received in July 1942 indicating that 544 hospitals have recently readjusted their appointment schedule. At the same time there has been a reduction in the number of long-term assignments, as evidenced by the fact that 711 hospitals are now offering 1-year internships as compared with 608 last February. Five have scheduled an 18-month service, 9 a 2-year internship, and 14 a combination of assignments varying from 12 to 24 months. The corresponding figures at the beginning of the year were 17, 71, and 36. Of the hospitals currently approved, 687 offer a rotating service, 12 have mixed internships, and 19 provide straight assignments, while 21 have more than 1 type. Previous reports were 660, 27, 18, and 27, respectively. The list of approved internships published in this issue contains in addition to the clinical data up-to-date information concerning the number of interns required annually, type of internship, length of service, date of appointment, beginning of service, and monthly stipend. The approved hospitals now total 739; the approved internships, 8,349.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, I ask unanimous consent that this special order be transferred to tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

USE OF SHIPPING SPACE FOR GOVERNMENT PROPAGANDA MAGAZINE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time in order to call attention to another one of the bureaucratic activities of this Administration which is definitely hampering our war effort.

The Office of War Information has recently issued a pictorial magazine called Victory, and in an announcement on February 4 they call attention to the fact that 450,000 copies have been distributed in English and another run of 540,000 copies is now being printed in various languages for circulation through various parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa.

I think this activity is criminal, and I do not mean to say that it borders on that. It is clearly over the line.

I am not going to go into the history of the publication of Victory, even though it is placing the Government in the publishing business where they are soliciting advertising at the rate of $3,000 a page from the companies having war contracts and which have no other way to pay for the advertising except to charge it back to the Government in the cost of the products which they sell to the Government. It is Mr. Taxpayer who is footing the bill.

All this, however, is probably not as harmful to our war effort as the waste of shipping space which is entailed by sending this unnecessary publication abroad. The magazine itself, exclusive of any wrappings or container, weighs exactly 13 ounces. This means that the first two issues, totaling 990,000 copies, will rob 402 tons of shipping space that might better be filled with bombs or bullets for our enemies. Four hundred and two tons of bombs would do a lot more toward winning the war than 402 tons of Victory. It is a sad state of affairs when shipping space is so short that our soldiers cannot receive a carton of cigarettes or a box of candy or the home town newspapers from their families, but plenty of space seems to be available for such foolish publications as Victory.

I wonder how long it will take this administration to wake up to the fact that a war is going on and that we are up to our necks in a fight for survival. I know very well that a majority of the American people do not approve of this type of fighting and I am in hopes that they will find some way to impress the New Deal administration that it ought to wake up and realize the seriousness of our situation. If we have to use shipping space for sending articles abroad, it seems to me that the people living in those countries would obtain much more satisfaction from a loaf of bread, or the ingredients from which it is made, than they would from such magazines.

We have shortages in this country of everything that goes into the manufacture and distribution of this magazine. Newspapers are rationed; we are short on the dyes which go into the ink; we are short on manpower and shipping space in this country; we are short on overseas shipping space. Yet, in spite of all this, the O. W. I., under the direction of Elmer Davis, has brazenly gone ahead and carried on the publication of this useless magazine.

I only wish that we were not so short on brains in the O. W. I. It is time to limit such activities as this. The sooner we stop wasting our substance on such things the quicker we will win the war.

MATTHEW LYON

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, 142 years ago Representative Matthew Lyon, of Vermont, cast the deciding vote in this House electing Thomas Jefferson President of the United States on the thirty-sixth ballot. Today in my home city of Jacksonville, Fla., his great, great grandson, J. B. Lyon is celebrating his eighty-seventh birthday anniversary, in company with his brother, J. M. Lyon, who is 84 years of age.

They are directly descended in the male line from Col. Matthew Lyon, who served in this House from Vermont and Kentucky. Their father was James Benjamin Risley Lyon, son of Rev. Mason R. Lyon, who was the son of James Lyon, first son of the famous Colonel Lyon.

J. B. Lyon, my constituent, has for 60 years been editor and publisher of newspapers, author and columnist. His great grandfather, James Lyon, son of Col. Matthew Lyon, was apprenticed in his youth to Benjamin Franklin to learn the printing trade and newspaper profession. When his apprenticeship was ended Colonel Lyon bought a printing press from Franklin, on which he and his son printed the articles critical of President Adams, which led to the iniquitous alien and sedition laws, under which Colonel Lyon was imprisoned.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MALONEY, for the week beginning February 8, on official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 11, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who dost speak to listening hearts in the holy hush of the dawn and in the brooding quietness of the evening, speak to us now in the heat and burden of noontide's toiling. May we regard the faithful service of the commonwealth as a sacramental task. As we come to the high altar of patriotism in this temple of a people's hope and trust, may it be with clear minds, clean hands, and courageous hearts.

Teach us to value a conscience void of offense and the royalty of inward calm above all the pedestals, prizes, and preferments earth can give. May the tyranny of majorities and the tirades of minorities be equally impotent to sway us from the right as Thou dost give us to see it. Forbid that any actions or attitudes of ours should ever deny or betray the white principles for which on land and sea, under alien skies, our brothers in arms are paying the last full measure of devotion. Along the road of this day and of every day may we walk with Thee in the bright fellowship of those who fight the good fight and keep the faith. In the Redeemer's name, we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 8, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1648) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—QUESTIONNAIRES AND REPORTS REQUIRED FROM THE PUBLIC (S. DOC. NO. 4)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, transmitting, pursuant to law, an additional report of the joint committee relating to an investigation of the questionnaires and reports required from the public by the various agencies of the Government, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

On motion by Mr. BYRD, the report was ordered to be printed as a document for distribution and also to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

FEBRUARY —, 1943.

Report to the President of the United States; the Vice President of the United States; President of the Senate; the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

In accordance with title 6 of the Revenue Act of 1941, Public Law No. 250, Seventy-seventh Congress, an additional report herewith is presented by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 38, introduced by Senators VANDENBERG and BYRD, was adopted by the Senate. This resolution is as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures be directed to investigate the existing methods of all departments and bureaus in respect to the manner and form of questionnaires, reports, and all other methods of inquiry to which citizens and/or corporations are required to respond in connection with all phases of the war effort; and be it further

"Resolved, That the committee be directed to report any legislative recommendations which would either eliminate or simplify or concentrate these processes to the end that citizens and/or corporations shall be relieved of any needless irritation, labor, or expense in this connection and that the war effort shall be relieved of any needless obstacles or complications and that the Federal pay rolls shall be relieved of any needless personnel."

In accordance with the mandate contained in this resolution, the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures made an investigation of the questionnaires and reports required from the public by the different agencies of Government.

The committee conducted public hearings and heard all the witnesses who desired to testify.

The committee required each agency of the Government to submit to the committee a complete list and a sample of all questionnaires sent out by the various agencies of the Government during the period from July 1, 1941, to December 1, 1942.

The responses made by the agencies show that a total of 7,025 separate and distinct Government reports and questionnaires were required by 48 agencies to be answered by the public.

This figure is exclusive of the reports requested by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Farm Credit Administration, and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, this information not having been furnished the committee.

This number, also, does not include a large number of letters asking for specific information and only includes the printed forms.

The committee has obtained sample copies of each of the questionnaires and reports, but has not been able to secure from the different agencies exact information as to the number of each report distributed, although it is indicated that the number sent to corporations and individuals will run into the millions. The Office of Price Administration, for example, has issued and requested statistical data on 7,715,229 report forms, exclusive of rationing forms and instructions.

(This does not include further information and reports asked for by letters and special requests.)

It would, of course, be a monumental task to analyze each of these carefully as to form and content, and this the committee could not accomplish without a long and exhaustive investigation, but the committee, after a careful survey, reports—

1. That there has been no attempt at uniformity of these numerous reports.

2. The purpose and use of many forms are not clear.

3. Identical information has been requested by several agencies.

4. The Budget Bureau's attempt at uniformity, simplicity, and conciseness has often been circumvented by the use of so-called administrative forms, which requested statistical data at great length.

5. Many of the questions are couched in language too technical for the small businessman.

6. The forms were not constructed with a view toward saving the businessman or the Government time and money and, in many instances, have been prepared without regard to the accounting practices of the particular industry.

7. Where the purpose of the form is clear many superfluous questions have been added.

8. The investigation of the committee indicated that many of these reports serve no useful purpose; that a great many are filed away by governmental agencies, and the information contained therein is not tabulated.

The committee, of course, appreciates that some reports are necessary, but the vast number of reports requested, and the complexity and details of the questionnaires have, in the judgment of the committee, constituted a serious obstacle to the full utilization of the resources of the country for the war effort. Many business enterprises have been compelled to divert trained personnel from essential and important war work in order to prepare reports, many of which thereafter serve no useful purpose. War production is vastly more important than reports.

It is impossible to estimate the cost of preparing, analyzing, and tabulating these reports on the part of the Government, but this cost is necessarily high. The nearest approximate estimate that can be used is that of Mr. Joseph I. Lubin, former chairman of the War Production Board Committee for Review of Date Requests From Industry, who stated that the War Production Board had eliminated 20 percent of the existing forms and reports and, according to Mr. Lubin, has thereby released the equivalent of 15,000 men working every day, which means a saving of 30,000,000 man-hours a year now consumed in compiling such reports.

The War Production Board issued 741 questionnaires; therefore, the elimination of approximately 140 occasioned this saving in manpower, which, if applied to the entire number of more than 7,000, in similar ratio, the saving of manpower and cost would reach very great proportions.

Mr. Lubin stated that he hoped to reach an elimination of at least 40 percent of these reports. The committee are inclined to the opinion that 60 to 75 percent of the reports now required can be eliminated without in any way impairing the necessary records of the Government.

On the part of private business the cost of preparing these reports has been colossal in comparison to the benefits derived by the Government, and the task of preparing them has confused and discouraged many private business enterprises engaged in essential war work.

An investigation of the more than 7,000 questionnaires impresses the committee with the importance of protecting the businessmen of the country in the emergency now existing from a continuation of the necessity of diverting thousands of trained men from vital war activity to useless paper work.

The committee is driven to the irresistible conclusion that much of this paper work involves an intolerable waste of time and resources not only for the victims of these needless inquisitions but also for the Government itself. The committee also could not escape the conclusion that one of the chief sources of unpopularity, irritation, and resentment in connection with rationing and price controls is the nature and extent of the needless complex reports too often required by the Government. While fully recognizing that the war effort unavoidably requires a substantial increase in the paper work which our unavoidable war controls entail, the committee believes that this necessity should be serviced with a minimum of red tape and a maximum of simplicity; and it condemns the excessive, costly, and often unintelligible quiz-mania which has been too often exemplified in some of these bureaucratic zeals.

The committee commends the action of the Bureau of the Budget in accepting all-over control of questionnaires and reports with a view to reducing this burden.

The committee commends the action of the Treasury Department and the War Production Board in voluntarily abandoning some of the paper work and commends this excellent example to other branches of the Government.

The committee is hopeful that its clear exposure of this hazard—a menace which frequently actually threatens the war effort itself through a needless diversion of time and effort—will contribute to curbing substantially these excesses, and that the supervision of the Bureau of the Budget will substantially reduce this paper output.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The committee recommends that the Budget Bureau, under the power it now has, or with additional power granted by Congress, should such be necessary, exercise full and complete control over the various agencies of the Government that are issuing questionnaires and reports not absolutely essential to the prosecution of the war; that the Budget Bureau endeavor not only to simplify but to eliminate most of these 7,025 reports now being required by the Government, and to coordinate the remainder; that, wherever possible, one annual, semiannual, or quarterly report be sent to the Budget Bureau as a central agency, containing the information required by the various agencies; that such reports be filed with the Budget Bureau and be accessible to the other agencies of government that need the information; that the entire question of these unnecessary reports is of such paramount importance that it be reviewed and simplified by further planning and coordination on the part of all Government agencies under the central control of the Budget Bureau; that the questionnaire mania be curbed by persuasion, if possible, and, if not, by strong congressional action.

The committee further recommends that the appropriation bills limit definitely the amount available to each agency of the Government issuing forms and questionnaires; that full information as to the number of reports issued, their character and purpose, be made a part of the records of the respective appropriations committees, so that such information will be readily available as to the number printed and distributed, and the cost thereof.

By exercising such careful supervision of that part of the appropriation available for the preparation, analysis, and cost of printing and distributing the reports, the Congress can retain in a very effective measure control over this questionnaire problem in the event proper cooperation of the various agencies affected is not forthcoming.

ADDENDA TO THE REPORT

Analysis of testimony and information received by the committee

A survey of 89 companies in 10 war industries revealed that 84 of these units completed 3,479 Government reports in the second quarter of 1942. This is an average of 164 reports per company per year. Industries with the heaviest war production carry the heaviest burden of reports. To complete the forms, the 89 companies require a total of 495,480 man-hours a year. Of this total 13 percent is for nonrecurring and 87 percent for recurring reports. The machinery group of manufacturers believes that 43 percent of these reports are unnecessary.

In the Worthington Machinery & Pump Corporation, which employs 4,000 people, six departments must perforce devote full time to the preparation of 545 reports of 66 different types; in addition, there are 478 reports to 80 State, county, and city governments. Reports vary from 1 to 20 pages in length, and the number of questions varies from 10 to 100. The cost of the Federal reports for this corporation alone is approximately $90,000 a year.

Manufacturers declare that Federal red tape delays production and lengthens the war. Priorities and allocations involve entirely new sets of routines. Allocations of vital war materials to a plant must frequently wait until all other plants in the same production field have placed their requisitions.

In his testimony, Eric A. Johnston, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, told our committee that "it requires a Philadelphia lawyer or an Indian crystal gazer to figure out the answers to some Government questionnaires." He said the requirements for necessary and basic information in wartime are bound to place a great burden on individuals and business concerns. "That makes it all the more important," he declared, "that requests for information should be kept at a minimum and be put in such form as to make for practical replies and utilization of their contents."

The War Production Board reports that a large automobile company complained that preparation of Government forms cost $125,000 and required more than 100,000 man-hours. In another large industry elimination of a single form will save 400,000 man-hours annually and also 100,000 man-hours for the Government.

Senator VANDENBERG told the committee about a Chicago businessman who employs some 2,000 men. Excluding tax and social-security reports, it cost this firm $55,000 in 9 months to answer Government questionnaires.

A large drug manufacturer testified that some Office of Price Administration reports are impossible to fill out, both from the standpoint of time involved and ability to understand what is wanted. For example, it would take months to determine how to proceed with Report 1-1071 PL of 5 ROBV-COS-WP, entitled "Report on New Proprietory or Cosmetic Product." This one dealt with new products. Later it was revised to include any alteration in the size, style, and shape of the container or formula of any existing product. Mostly at the request of the War Production Board, hundreds of these changes have occurred in products marketed before March 1942. Bottles are now used to replace cartons; corks to replace caps; glassine paper and label varnish have been eliminated. Now the company is asked by Office of Price Administration to go back to March and fill out forms for every change made in 450 products and about 1,200 sizes. This involves 600 to 800 changes requiring 600 to 800 reports. This would require months because it takes a competent man from 1 to 2 days to make a report. All this is supposed to be for price approval by the Office of Price Administration, although the law has already fixed these prices as of March.

The same manufacturer testified that his company has recently completed work on a product designed to reduce the mortality rate of 16 children a day who die of whooping cough. The Office of Price Administration was requested to act promptly on the price rate for this formula so that the company could market the product and save human lives. Weeks passed. Telephone calls brought no action. After 6 weeks a price was received from the Office of Price Administration. This procedure would be necessary for each of the 600 items.

The manufacturer presented to us another report, OPA Form Q-51, Budget Bureau No. 08-ST029-42. Completed, it would be 4 feet wide and 20 feet long. The company was unable to discover the purpose of the report, which was supposed to be completed in 4 days. The first page asked for the following: Name of product, unit ingredient cost, unit fabricating cost, unit factory overhead, unit administrative expense, unit sales, and advertising expense, etc.

To make matters worse, the Office of Price Administration asked for a type of cost breakdown different from that of the Treasury Department and different also from that of previous Office of Price Administration questionnaires. The manufacturer said that assignment of unit cost to a vitamin product would involve administrative expense and research which could not be estimated. He said the probable cost of filling out all Federal questionnaires would be over $100,000 annually if a firm of 3,600 employees. Office of Price Administration, War Production Board, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Commerce all require separate reports.

Another manufacturer testified the latest Office of Price Administration report was the straw that breaks the camel's back. Declaring there had been a 90-percent turn-over of personnel in his accounting department since January this witness could not determine when the report might be completed, although it was due November 7. It would require, he estimated, 300 to 350 additional hours of work by a highly experienced employee. In July, two men from the Office of Price Administration visited this manufacturer and asked for detailed information covering 31 sheets. They wanted the material in 2 days and a large number of people were taken from their work to prepare it.

In November the same Office of Price Administration man asked for much the same information on another vitamin questionnaire. The manufacturer told our committee that civilian needs and greatly increased war needs, plus a labor shortage, made the compiling of all this information virtually impossible.

A witness from a large industrial laboratory told us of duplication in questionnaires on vitamins issued by the Office of Price Administration, the Fish and Wild Life Service, the Bureau of the Census, and the Army-Navy Munitions Board. Two of these questionnaires have been changed from a quarterly to a monthly basis.

A representative of a large contractors' association said his office has sent out 178 bulletins explaining governmental regulations. These concerns must file 47 to 52 reports for the Treasury Department, the Office of Defense Transportation, the Office of Price Administration, and the War Production Board. Form No. 21 of the Office of Defense Transportation requires 6 or 7 reports, some recorded daily, some monthly. Involved questions are asked, such as tire mileage for each tire, mileage for each vehicle per year and an estimate for the next half year, number of trips, average load per trip, gallons of gasoline used, and so forth.

Senator VANDENBERG presented a letter to the committee from a Kansas farmer who had filled out a 2-page report in order to get a pair of rubber boots. If he lost the boots he was subject to a $10,000 fine or 10 years' imprisonment.

Eastman Kodak employs 84 persons 3,224 hours a week, enough to build 3 flying fortresses, to complete 409 reports for each quarter.

Constructive criticism includes:

1. Clarify subject matter.
2. Allow sufficient space for reply.
3. Eliminate superfluous requests for information.
4. Avoid "peaking" the reports required.
5. End duplication.
6. Don't penalize a company on priority by failing to win the "paper race."
7. Change method by which companies must wait until all similar companies have filed returns for priorities.

Mr. Fred A. Baughan, of the Retail Food Dealers Association of California, was the next witness. Mr. Baughan testified as to the complexity of regulations issued by the Office of Price Administration, pointing out that calculations must be made on 1,800 to 3,600 items by the neighborhood grocer. He also expressed the belief that Office of Price Administration regulations, red tape, and price ceilings will eventually force all small-size grocery stores out of business. According to Mr. Baughan, the lists which the retailers have compiled—tons and tons of them—remain piled up in the garages of California, unexamined by anyone, unclassified by anyone.

The average number of reports and questionnaires from a business of moderate size is as follows:

1. Federal Power Commission.
2. United States Department of Agriculture.
3. United States Department of Justice.
4. Federal Communications Commission.
5. War Production Board.
6. Interstate Commerce Commission.
7. Office of Price Administration.
8. Bureau of Internal Revenue.
9. Social Security Board.
10. Federal Trade Commission.
11. Salary Stabilization Unit—Bureau of Internal Revenue.
12. Federal Manpower Commission.
13. National War Labor Board.
14. Wage and Hour Division.
15. Alcohol Tax Unit—Treasury Department.
16. Board of Economic Warfare.
17. Defense Savings Staff—War Bonds—United States Treasury Department.
18. Collector of Internal Revenue—Richmond.
19. Collector of Customs.
20. War Department.
21. Navy Department.
22. United States Department of Labor—Labor Statistics.
23. United States Department of Commerce
24. Office of Defense Transportation.

One company furnished the committee with the following information as to the cost of the preparation of these reports:

|---|---|
| Number of Federal bureaus or agencies which requested information | 24 |
| Number of types of reports or questionnaires | 134 |
| Number of reports submitted | 24,160 |
| Man-hours required to prepare information | 132,560 |
| Cost of personnel | $192,500 |

The cost shown above does not include related expenses, such as traveling, telephone, telegraph, postage, and rent.

On the basis that there are 43,000,000 people gainfully employed (not including agriculture), it would indicate that the time of 188,000 persons is consumed in preparing Federal Government data. This number would be increased if it were to include the man-hours used in agriculture to prepare the many Federal returns required in that field.

The problem of answering questionnaires and making reports to the Government has become so great that it has been necessary to assign to an executive of the company the full-time job of following up this matter. This man is specializing in this field and at the present time one other man is devoting his full time to the study of priorities as it affects the company.

Mr. Hugh F. Hall represented the American Farm Bureau. Mr. Hall testified that the questionnaires sent to farmers had a deleterious effect in that farmers were overwhelmed by the enormity of the problem of estimating past and future gasoline consumption, mileage, etc. The impracticability of the questionnaires, the consumption of time in filling them out, the lack of understanding by officials of farmers' problems, all caused Mr. Hall to believe that the paper work required of farmers is overdone. Many will suffer. Some will not be able to harvest. Ultimately the purpose of the questionnaires will be defeated.

Mr. Fred Brenckman, of the National Grange, testified that farmers, for-hire operators, and large utility companies are harassed by complicated questionnaires which ask questions no one can answer.

Mr. Brenckman suggested suspending regulations that have been issued so far as they affect operation of farm trucks, and call in committees of practical farmers to assist in the preparation of a conservative program that will meet the desired objectives.

OBJECTIONS TO QUESTIONNAIRES AS REPORTED TO THE COMMITTEE

1. Severin Electric Co., San Francisco, Calif.: "Overhead costs due to questionnaires have increased 35 percent. Questionnaires have delayed vital work—cannot get manpower to do the job—has to put keymen on this job."

2. T. L. Rosenberg Co., Oakland, Calif.: "Questionnaires and Government requirements of forms, etc., have caused increase of 5 percent overhead—loss in productive manpower is 1 percent—increased field staff 7 to 10 percent."

3. Pacific Electric Motor Co., Oakland, Calif.: "Questionnaires and forms cause 14.6 percent direct increase in overhead, and a loss in productive manpower equal to five employees on a 44-hour week."

4. S. C. Sachs Co., St. Louis, Mo.: "Government questionnaires and forms has increased office personnel 55 percent."

5. Carl I. Schaeffer Electric Co., St. Louis, Mo: "Government forms and red tape have increased overhead 2 percent—loss in productive manpower equals 25 percent."

6. Hensley Electric Co., Fort Worth, Tex.: "34 percent of total man-hours devoted to Government forms, etc."

7. Mill & Marine Electric, Inc., Gastonia, N. C.: "Burdensome forms, questionnaires, etc., of Government costing us 30 percent more to handle business—taking into consideration inexperienced men overhead would be nearer 50 percent."

8. Charles A. Langlais, San Francisco, Calif.: "Object to Office of Price Administration and Labor Department questionnaires and forms—increased cost of doing business 25 percent and decreased available manpower 25 percent."

9. Huntington & Guerry, Greenville, S. C.: "Estimate questionnaires and forms increase expenses 10 percent and field staff expense increased 50 percent."

10. Electric Constructors, Inc., Pascagoula, Miss.: "Red tape increases overhead from 10 to 20 percent, aggravated by lack of manpower."

11. Paul Heydon: "Six contractors say increased overhead as follows: First, 5 percent; second, 10 percent; third, 5 percent; fourth, 5 percent; fifth, 7 percent; sixth, 3 percent—average, 5.83 percent."

12. National Electrical Contractors, Fort Worth, Tex.: "Contractors here say 15 to 20 percent increase in overhead and 30 percent loss in man-hours."

13. Webb Electric Co., Anderson, S. C.: "Red tape increased overhead and man-hours 48 percent."

14. Jack Moorman, Shreveport, La.: "60 percent office time used on red tape, 15 percent supervisor's time, 15 percent total manpower. Office of Price Administration form 251 is impossible."

15. C. C. C. Cadwallader, Detroit, Mich.: "12 contractors reporting show 12 percent increase in overhead; delays hard to estimate."

16. E. H. Herzberg, Milwaukee, Wis.: "Government red tape caused among contractors the following: One additional stenographer, 50 percent supervisor's time, 50 percent manager's time, 35 percent bookkeeper's time, 25 percent supervisor's time, 33 percent manager's time, overhead 20 percent higher, overhead 5 percent higher, overhead 10 percent higher, 80 percent manager's time."

17. Brocker Engineering Co., Detroit, Mich.: "Red tape causes increase in overhead of 25 percent; productive manpower loss, 50 to 75 percent; causes delay in executing contracts."

18. R. H. Bouligny, Inc., Charlotte, N. C.: "Loss is 5 percent; ties up keymen; time required 5 percent."

19. White Electrical Construction Co., Atlanta, Ga.: "Serious burden—increased overhead 10 percent; can't see what use could be made of information."

20. Enterprise Electrical Co., Philadelphia, Pa.: "Increased overhead 10 percent—no uniform procedure on Office of Price Administration forms, etc.; red tape is awful and hinders war effort."

21. Foshee Electric Co., Forth Worth, Tex.: "Increases overhead 25 to 30 percent. Information requested is useless."

22. Davenport Electric Contract Co., Davenport, Iowa: "Increases overhead 9 percent and we pass it off on the public."

23. Leithner & Weishar, Rock Island, Ill.: "Increased overhead 15 percent—caused us to refuse contracts over $500. Believe 95 percent of questionnaires are unopened by Government."

24. Tennessee Armature Electric Co., Knoxville, Tenn.: "Three contractors in city overhead jumped 30 percent; ours has jumped 45 percent."

25. Southern Electric Service Co., Inc., Charlotte, N. C.: "Increased personnel 7 percent and increased overhead of $1,200 per month."

26. Eugene Ashe Electric Co., Forth Worth, Tex.: "40 percent of total man-hours used on Government forms, etc."

27. Bryant Electric Co., High Point, N. C.: "Increased productive labor cost 6 to 7 percent."

28. Chewning & Wilmer, Richmond, Va.: "Increase in cost is 13 percent."

29. Ross Electric Construction Co., Philadelphia, Pa.: "Increased work 15 to 20 percent. Can't understand need for 20 copies of each form. Complained to the Office of Price Administration, citing drive on scrap paper, when so much was used in forms, etc."

30. Beacon Electrical Engineering & Construction Co., Buffalo, N. Y.: "Our members report increase in cost as follows: 30, 20, 40, 50, 50, 10, 40, 50, 40, and 40 percent. Strenuous objection to Form OPA 251."

31. Shreveport Electrical Contractors Association, Shreveport, La.: "Increase in cost of operation of members are respectively: 34, 38, 37, and 32 percent."

32. National Electrical Contractors Association, Los Angeles, Calif.: "Four-percent increase in overhead, 2½-percent loss of productive manpower, 2.43-percent increase in staff."

33. National Electrical Contractors Association, Atlanta, Ga.: "Increased cost, 20 percent."

34. Empire Electric Co., Fort Worth, Tex.: "Increased total job cost, 5 percent; increased overhead, 50 percent."

35. Robinson Electrical Co., Philadelphia, Pa.: "Increases cost of every job 1 percent and one extra employee."

36. Electrical Employers Association, Cincinnati, Ohio: "Eight contractors report average of 15.8-percent overhead increase, of 43-percent loss in productive manpower, of 25.4-percent increase in field staff."

37. Tri-City Electric Co. of Iowa, Davenport, Iowa: "Increase of 5 to 15 percent of overhead."

38. Robbins Electric Co., Moline, Ill.: "Increase overhead 2 to 5 percent per customer. Object to M. P. R. 251."

39. Richardson-Wayland Electrical Corporation, Roanoke, Va.: "Increased cost from 10 to 15 percent plus confusion due to nonconformity and lack of standardization of forms and answers. Objects to Office of Defense Transportation, Federal Works Agency, and Office of Price Administration red tape and confusion and duplications."

40. Independent Electrical Machinery Co., Kansas City, Mo.: "Increased clerical help, 20 percent; loss of productive manpower, 8 to 10 hours per day; increased cost, 15 percent."

41. Alber Electric Co., Kansas City, Mo.: "Increased overhead, 10 percent; 20-percent loss in productive manpower, 5-percent increase in field staff."

42. Evans Electrical Construction Co.: "Increase in overhead, 25 percent; loss in manpower, 20 percent; increase in staff, 15 percent."

43. Squire Electric Co., Kansas City, Mo.: "Overhead increased 33 percent, increase in field staff of 25 percent."

44. W. T. Foley Electric Co., Kansas City, Mo.: "Overhead increase, 10 percent; loss in manpower, 25 percent; increase in staff, 10 percent."

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT ON PERSONNEL OF THE LAND FORCES

A confidential letter from the Secretary of War, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to the personnel in the land forces under the provisions of law at a specified time; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LAWS OF MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF ST. CROIX, V. I.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of laws passed by the Municipal Council of St. Croix, V. I. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

REGIONAL RESEARCH LABORATORIES

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities of, funds used by, and donations to, the regional research laboratories (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORT OF ATLANTIC STATES MARINE FISHERIES COMMISSION

A letter from the secretary-treasurer of the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the operations of the Commission from its establishment, June 5 to December 31, 1942 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Commerce.

COORDINATION OF FORWARDING AND SERVICING OF WATER-BORNE EXPORT AND IMPORT FOREIGN COMMERCE

A letter from the Administrator of the War Shipping Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, the third report of action taken to provide for the coordination of the forwarding and similar servicing of water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Commerce.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of the Navy (2), Agriculture (6), and Commerce; the General Accounting Office, Civil Service Commission, and The National Archives which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa; to the Committee on Finance:

"Whereas the tragedy of a world conflagration is imposing unprecedented financial demand upon the people of the entire Nation, in the form of greatly increased tax levies; and

"Whereas the Nation's all-out effort for an overwhelming victory over the Axis Powers will place upon our people from time to time in the months ahead new and increased financial burdens to meet the demands of the war program and insure adequate defense of our Nation and the American way of life; and

"Whereas these tremendous financial demands emphasize the need for holding State and local expenditures to the lowest minimum consistent with the public good; and

"Whereas rising living costs have greatly enhanced the problem of needy people receiving old-age assistance and assistance to the blind to subsist on the funds that may be reasonably available at this period; and

"Whereas the principle of individual self-help is a traditionally American one; and

"Whereas the Federal social security laws do not permit the matching of funds or grants to States unless the State program consider every source of income of the recipient; and

"Whereas the present manpower shortage renders it practically impossible for the people to obtain casual labor or to fill jobs of a temporary nature requiring only light work; and

"Whereas many recipients of old-age assistance, and assistance to the blind, are capable of obtaining and performing casual labor or to fill jobs of a temporary nature, and such recipients should be afforded an opportunity to perform such services for the period of the duration of this Nation's conflict with the Axis Powers; and

"Whereas it is deemed reasonable that recipients of old-age assistance or assistance to the blind be allowed to receive from personal earnings a sum not exceeding $240 annually, and this income, when received from any source, be disregarded in determining need in all such cases; and

"Whereas modification and liberalization of Federal social security laws is necessary to permit States to include this provision without loss of Federal grants: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Fiftieth General Assembly of Iowa (the House concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to forthwith take such action as may be appropriate to modify and liberalize the Federal social security laws to permit recipients of old-age assistance and assistance to the blind to receive from personal earnings a sum not exceeding $240 annually for the period of the duration of this Nation's conflict with the Axis Powers, without having the same charged to them or considered in determining need in all such cases; be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state be and he hereby is directed to forward a certified copy of this resolution to the Vice President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Member of the Congress (Senate and House of Representatives) of the United States from the State of Iowa."

Two concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Iowa; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 10

"Whereas Claude R. Wickard is Secretary of Agriculture, and there has been a demand by the United States Government for increased production of food in the war effort; and

"Whereas the progress of increased production is retarded by lack of protein feeds necessary to provide balanced rations for livestock; and

"Whereas, the Commodity Credit Corporation has protein feeds available in this territory, which should be immediately released to aid in meeting the demand for increased production; and

"Whereas, the 1939 Year Book of Agriculture emphasizes the fact that protein feeds to supplement the feed of home-grown grains are necessary in the economical production of pork, beef, and poultry: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commodity Credit Corporation, be requested to immediately release and make available to the farmers of Iowa, protein feeds, especially soy bean meal, to supplement the home-grown grains in connection with the increased production and feeding of pork, beef, poultry, and other livestock necessary in the war efforts, and that the secretary of the senate is hereby authorized and directed to mail a copy of this resolution to Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commodity Credit Corporation; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Senator GUY M. GILLETTE, to Senator GEORGE A. WILSON, and each member from Iowa in the National House of Representatives."

---

"House Concurrent Resolution 12

"Whereas with the increasing demands on the farmers of the United States to meet the food requirements of our fighting men and lend-lease commitments, at the same time assuring the people of the United States of the proper amount of foodstuffs, it is essential for the war effort and the well-being of our people that a study be made of the complicated problems of marketing, transportation, and distribution of farm products; and

"Whereas farm products should be properly graded, and distributed when and where needed, and immediate steps should be taken for a coordination of efforts and the adopting of a comprehensive and workable plan in betterment of the interests of the producing farmer and the consumer; and

"Whereas House Resolution 38 has been introduced in Congress providing for the Committee on Agriculture to make a study and investigation of marketing, transportation, and distribution of farm products, which study and investigation are imperative at this time: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Iowa Legislature urges Congress of the United States to enact House Resolution 38.

"That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, and to the Iowa Members in the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress."

By Mr. MCNARY:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Finance:

"Whereas it is desirable that the increasing burden of taxes be lightened by all means which will not interfere with the obtaining of revenues sufficient to carry on the war effort to its fullest extent; and

"Whereas the payment of income and victory taxes on a cash or pay-as-you-go plan, will not only render such burden easier, but should also result in more complete collection of such taxes; and

"Whereas your memorialists are advised that the House of Representatives of the United States of America, in the Seventy-third Congress assembled, has under consideration certain proposals to accomplish such results: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate jointly concurring therein), That your honorable body consider favorably and enact some pay-as-you-go plan or similar plan known as the Ruml plan, or such other plan and legislation as will in the opinion of your honorable body accomplish the desired result hereinbefore mentioned; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State of the State of Oregon be authorized and he hereby is directed to forward immediately certified copies of this joint memorial to the President of the United States, President of the United States Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Members of the congressional delegation from the State of Oregon."

(The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.)

By Mr. GERRY:

Resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Finance:

"Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States of America H. R. 801, a bill whose purpose it is to provide for rehabilitation of disabled veterans; and

"Whereas there surely can be no hesitancy upon the part of any American citizen to make all provision to anticipate the return of our fighting servicemen who will be the casualties of the holocaust of World War No. 2: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States of America be and they hereby are earnestly requested to use every effort to have passed H. R. 801 to provide for rehabilitation of disabled veterans in such form as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in order that men of our armed forces may overcome the handicap of disability and may be fitted for employment consistent with the degree of disablement; and be it further

"Resolved, That duly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States of America."

(Mr. GREEN presented a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.)

By Mr. BUSHFIELD:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Finance:

"Whereas the Congress of the United States did during the session of the Seventy-sixth Congress increase the Federal gasoline tax one-half cent per gallon, making such tax now a total of 1½ cents per gallon, despite the fact that every State in the Union now imposes a sales tax on gasoline averaging in excess of 4 cents per gallon; and

"Whereas such Federal gasoline tax during the past calendar year of 1942 has taken from the people of the State of South Dakota in excess of $1,875,000, which largely comes from the producers and from agriculture of South Dakota; and

"Whereas such tax at 1½ cents per gallon amounts to a 10 percent retail sales tax on such product, which is a necessity of the residents of this State; and

"Whereas it is the sense of this legislature that it is inequitable and unfair to impose such an enormous sales tax upon a single commodity of this type, which is a necessity to persons engaged in agricultural and producing pursuits; and

"Whereas such tax is a revenue measure peculiarly adapted for the individual States for the purpose of construction and maintenance of adequate highway systems and means of transportation, and administrative machinery is well established in every State in the Union: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States should not increase such Federal gasoline tax or consider any increase in such tax, and should discontinue the same at the earliest possible time, and should refuse to reenact the same upon its expiration, and should thus leave this field of revenue entirely to the individual States for use in construction and maintenance of the various States' highway systems: Be it further

"Resolved, That the Members of the Congress of the United States from the State of South Dakota be, and they are hereby, urged by the legislature of this State to use their best efforts in opposing any suggested increase in the Federal gasoline tax or the reenactment or continuance of said Federal gasoline tax: Be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to each Senator and Representative of the State of South Dakota in the Congress of the United States and to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Represenatives to be by them presented to the proper committee in Congress considering or determining such aforesaid legislation."

By Mr. WHEELER:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Whereas farmers and ranchers of Montana are most anxious to contribute to the winning of the war by producing a maximum of food for our fighting forces, for our civilian population and for starving peoples over the earth; and

"Whereas Montana farmers and ranchers have the crop land and foundation herds of cattle and sheep to produce large quantities of badly needed food; and

"Whereas our Government is urging farmers to not only maintain normal production of grains and feed crops, but to greatly increase the production of livestock, hogs, and poultry, without taking into consideration that much additional help will be needed to carry on such a program; and

"Whereas the large-acreage farming practiced in this State requires the best of farm machinery in sufficient quantities, the securing of which has been difficult and of late impossible to obtain; and

"Whereas draft, enlistment, and war-production work has drained practically every able-bodied, experienced farm boy for military service or war work, even where the fathers are growing in years and infirmity; and

"Whereas experience has proven that floating, unreliable, and inexperienced labor is both inadequate and ruinous to costly and irreplaceable farm machinery; and

"Whereas farmers have contributed proportionately more of their older equipment, as scrap iron, to the war effort than any other class of citizens: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the twenty-eighth legislative session of the State of Montana (senate and house of representatives concurring), That we respectfully urge that a far greater proportion of necessary material be immediately allotted for the manufacture of badly needed farm machinery and repairs, in order that at least normal production of food may be produced for the duration; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge that the War Department be requested to defer experienced farm boys that they may assist in planting and harvesting crops; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be submitted to the officials named in the first paragraph hereof."

A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

"Whereas the War Production Board, the War Labor Board, and the Director of Economic Stabilization have found it necessary to take jurisdiction and control over the production and price of all strategic metals, during the emergency; and

"Whereas, practically all of the copper produced in Montana has a fixed price of 12 cents per pound as compared to a price of 17 cents per pound in many other areas and this price is strongly contended to be not conducive to a fair and equitable profit for labor under war conditions; and

"Whereas, the bulk of the copper ore in Montana is very high in war material content, but at the same time low in the percent of copper in the ore;

"Furthermore, the copper mines in Montana, particularly in the Butte district, are of great depth, and necessitate very extensive equipment for hoisting of ore, pumping water and ventilation, with a marked increase in labor and power costs of operation; and

"Whereas the State of Montana is at the top of the list in furnishing manpower to the armed forces and the citizens of the State in general are in the forerank in the purchase of War bonds and stamps. Management and labor are striving earnestly and hard to produce the strategic metals for our fighting men at the fronts: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Twenty-eighth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the Senate and House of Representatives concurring, hereby respectfully petition the President of the United States, the War Production Board, the War Labor Board and the Director of Economic Stabilization, to review and reconsider the conditions respecting wages, working conditions, and costs of production of copper in Montana, particularly in the Butte district, to the effect that a speedy and just arrangement in the price of copper be made immediately; be it further

"Resolved, That this memorial be entered on the journals of both houses, and that a copy be transmitted to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; the Honorable James F. Byrnes, Director of Economic Stabilization; the War Production Board; and War Labor Board; the Honorable Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor; the Honorable Burton K. Wheeler and the Honorable James E. Murray, United States Senators from Montana; and to the Honorable James F. O'Connor and the Honorable Mike Mansfield, Congressmen from Montana."

RESOLUTION OF GEORGIA STATE SENATE—FAIR PRICE FOR PEANUTS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk for insertion in the RECORD in the usual form a resolution adopted by the Georgia State Senate asking that the dual price system on peanuts be abandoned. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD, under the rule, and referred as requested by the Senator from Georgia.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas the House of Representatives of the Georgia General Assembly has passed a resolution urging that the United States Congress enact legislation which will abolish the bureau price system now in existence relative to the marketing of peanuts and urging that such dual price system be abolished, and urging that the quota system as affects peanuts be abolished for the duration of the war; and

Whereas the situation with the peanut farmers is critical and unless some action is taken immediately there will be a resulting shortage of acres planted in peanuts for the year 1943; and

Whereas it is the desire of the peanut farmers to cooperate in every way with their National Government in the war effort; and

Whereas they desire to comply with the wishes of the Government by planting the 5,500,000 acres requested by the Department of Agriculture of the United States; and

Whereas without some assurance as to the prices to be paid for the 1943 crop the farmers cannot afford to plant any additional acreage in peanuts, due to the fact that they suffered a tremendous loss under the existing system on the 1942 crop of peanuts; and

Whereas there can be no earthly reason or excuse for the maintenance of the now existing system when the peanuts are to replace the oil which has been cut off from the United States as a result of the war; and

Whereas it is absolutely necessary that as a contribution to the war effort these peanuts be planted: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Georgia Senate, That this senate does heartily concur in the resolution passed by the house of representatives, introduced by Mr. Mimms, of Miller, and Mr. Drake, of Seminole, memorializing Congress to speedily take such action as is necessary to guarantee the peanut farmers a fair price for their product; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution shall immediately be transmitted by the Secretary of this senate to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and to Hon. James F. Byrnes, Director of Economic Stabilization, and a copy also be transmitted to each Member of Congress of the State of Georgia and to the Senators from Georgia, and to the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, and to the Secretary of the United States Senate, there to be presented and read.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Basehor, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit liquor sales and to suppress vice in the vicinity of military camps and naval establishments; ordered to lie on the table.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS UNDER THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have in my hand and present a copy of Concurrent Resolution No. 5 adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma. The resolution in the form of a memorial is addressed to the Congress of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that it be appropriately referred and printed in full in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be appropriately referred, and under the rule printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on Finance:

Whereas approximately 80,000 of the citizens of this State, by reason of age and physical infirmity, have qualified under the terms of the Federal Social Security Act, and are enjoying the benefits and needed assistance provided thereunder; and

Whereas a number of such persons are not only still able but desire to engage in various occupational work, as well as farming and the raising of livestock and poultry on a limited scale, and thereby augment the moneys received from said social-security fund and, at the same time, increase the necessary production of agricultural products and foodstuffs necessary to the winning of the war, as well as to permit needed manpower to be used for other purposes; and

Whereas to permit same to be done would not in anywise destroy or interfere with the policy or purpose of the Social Security Act, but would lend encouragement to this class of people to utilize the principles of thrift and industry which they are still capable of exercising in a small contribution to their own welfare and comforts in their declining years, but also to the community, as well as to the all-out war effort of the Nation in winning the war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by concurrent resolution of the State Senate and House of Representatives of the nineteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma—

SECTION 1. That Congress of the United States be memorialized and urged to pass such legislation or amend the present law to the extent that each individual affected by the Federal social-security law be permitted to engage in work and the production of foodstuffs, etc., to an extent not to exceed a net income of $240 per annum, without affecting their assistance under the rules and regulations of the Social Security Board.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Following the incorporation of the resolution, I ask permission to introduce a bill and to have the bill printed in full immediately following the resolution.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 685) relating to old-age assistance payments under the Social Security Act was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title I of the Social Security Act, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 7. The amount of old-age assistance payable under this title to any individual shall not be reduced or diminished in any manner by reason of the fact that the earnings of such individual amount to $240 or less during any calendar year, and no individual who is otherwise qualified to receive old-age assistance under this title shall be denied such assistance by reason of the fact that such individual has earned $240 or less during the period of 12 months immediately preceding the receipt of his claim for such assistance."

RESOLUTION OF OKLAHOMA LEGISLATURE—PHARMACY CORPS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a second memorial from the Legislature of Oklahoma, and I ask that it be likewise appropriately referred and printed in full in the body of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be appropriately referred and, under the rule, printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States House bill 997 and Senate bill 216 to create a Pharmacy Corps in the United States Army; and

Whereas there is a definite need in this war emergency for the capable handling of drugs, medicines, and pharmaceutics which are used in the treatment of diseases of our boys and girls in the armed forces; and

Whereas at the present there is no law providing for the creation of such a Pharmacy Corps: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Nineteenth Oklahoma Legislature (the Senate concurring therein), That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to put forth every effort to see these two bills enacted into law; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the chairmen of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate and House, and to the congressional delegation of Oklahoma.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

S. 617. A bill for the relief of Homer C. Chapman; without amendment (Rept. No. 47).

By Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

S. 630. A bill to prevent certain deductions in determining parity or comparable prices of agricultural commodities, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 50).

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

S. 621. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant to the city of San Diego for street purposes a parcel of land situated in the city of San Diego and State of California; without amendment (Rept. No. 48);

S. 641. A bill to amend section 6 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 relating to the payment of rental allowances to certain officers; without amendment (Rept. No. 52); and

H. R. 1446. A bill authorizing appropriations for the United States Navy for additional ship-repair facilities, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 51).

By Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

S. Res. 23. Resolution authorizing an investigation of commodity prices prevailing in the District of Columbia; with an amendment (Rept. No. 49), and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

S. Res. 88. Resolution to investigate the labor shortage in the Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain States with respect to the war effort; without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

INSPECTION OF JAPANESE RELOCATION CENTERS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 101), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof duly appointed by the chairman of the committee, hereby is authorized to visit, for the purposes of inspection, during the present session of Congress, the Japanese relocation centers in the United States, the expenses incurred in pursuance thereof, not to exceed $3,000, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATION OF TECHNOLOGICAL RESOURCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably with an amendment Senate Resolution 33, and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 33) submitted by Mr. REYNOLDS on January 11, 1943:

The amendment was, in line 3, after the word "investigation", to insert "by a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the provisions of Senate Resolution 303 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to on October 20, 1942, authorizing an investigation by a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs of the technological resources of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ELVA BIRCH DAVIS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 89, and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 89) submitted by Mr. BILBO on February 4, 1943, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Elva Birch Davis, daughter of Robert R. Birch, late an employee of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

E. E. MOECKEL

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 90, and ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 90) submitted by Mr. STEWART on February 4, 1943, was read, considered, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to E. E. Moeckel, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $69.75 as compensation for stenographically reporting hearings held before Members of the Senate on October 9, 1942, relating to the use of rayon instead of cotton in the manufacture of automobile tires, and furnishing a transcript of such hearings.

PRODUCTION OF INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL, SYNTHETIC ALCOHOL, AND SYNTHETIC RUBBER

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 80, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 80), which had been submitted by Mr. GILLETTE on January 21, 1943, was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 224, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to March 5, 1942, and Senate Resolution 318, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to November 30, 1942 (providing for an investigation with respect to industrial alcohol, synthetic alcohol, and synthetic rubber), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 96, and ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 96), which had been submitted by Mr. SMITH on February 8, 1943, was considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

BUSINESS EMPLOYMENT AND SECURITY INSURANCE—OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide every adult citizen in the United States with equal basic Federal insurance, permitting retirement with benefits at age 60, and also covering total disability, from whatever cause, for certain citizens under 60; to give protection to widows with children; to provide an ever-expanding market for goods and services through the payment and distribution of such benefits in ratio to the Nation's steadily increasing ability to produce, the cost of such benefits to be carried by every citizen in proportion to the income privileges he enjoys. We should have had such legislation years ago. Thousands are dead who needed it.

This new 1943 Townsend plan bill, streamlined and amended to fit a nation at war, is similar to the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative CANNON.

In all essential respects the new bill is the same as the last. It contains the enforced spending clause, but its operation would be suspended until 6 months after the war. This was thought best by Dr. Townsend because, as he says, the war boom conditions make unnecessary at present the forced spending of all pensions. The age limit is 60. The bill is limited in its benefits to citizens of the United States. There is a provision for the totally and permanently disabled, and annuities shall be paid in monthly installments not only to all totally and permanently disabled persons between the ages of 18 and 60 years, but also to every widow, divorced, or separated woman who has the care of a child or children under 18 years of age.

The gross tax income has been changed from 2 percent to 3 percent, persons who owe just debts must pay at least 10 percent in monthly installments thereon, and the old provision with respect to refraining from a gainful occupation as a requisite for receiving the pension is also in this bill, while the penalty for violation of the act is a $5,000 fine or 5 years in the penitentiary.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the Senator from North Dakota reading a speech, or is he placing something in the RECORD?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am explaining a bill which I have introduced.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the explanation very lengthy?

Mr. LANGER. The explanation of the bill is brief.

Mr. BARKLEY. How long will it take for the Senator to conclude his statement?

Mr. LANGER. About 30 seconds more.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, in order to prevent the gross income tax from becoming a burden on the lower income groups an exemption of $100 a month on personal income is provided, which means that the 3 percent gross income tax will apply only on a gross income of $100 a month. The tax does not apply to bank deposits, nor to amounts received under life-insurance policies, or accident insurance, nor to churches, fraternal societies, labor unions, civic leagues or hospitals.

The technical title of the new Townsend bill is "The Business Employment and Security Insurance Act."

Mr. President, I am for this proposed legislation. My coat is off and I am fighting for the new Townsend bill.

The bill (S. 706) to provide every adult citizen in the United States with equal basic Federal insurance, permitting retirement with benefits at age 60, and also covering total disability, from whatever cause, for certain citizens under 60; to give protection to widows with children; to provide an ever-expanding market for goods and services through the payment and distribution of such benefits in ratio to the Nation's steadily increasing ability to produce, with the cost of such benefits to be carried by every citizen in proportion to the income privileges he enjoys, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REGULATIONS OF LABOR UNIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BALL

[Mr. BALL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the regulation of labor unions, delivered by him on America's Town Meeting of the Air on February 4, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE DAWN OF AVIATION—ADDRESS BY HON. JOSH LEE

[Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject The Dawn of Aviation, delivered by Hon. Josh Lee at the Aviation Forum Luncheon of the Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce, January 15, 1943, which appears in the Appendix.]

BUREAUCRACY—ADDRESS BY PROF. FREDERICK D. BRAMHALL

[Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of Bureaucracy, delivered by Prof. Frederick D. Bramhall, of the University of California, which appears in the Appendix.]

WHAT WE WILL GET OUT OF THE WAR—ARTICLE BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

[Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by the Vice President, entitled "What We Will Get Out of the War," published in the March issue of the American Magazine, which appears in the Appendix.]

S. 699. A bill to amend Public Law No. 257, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved August 4, 1939, so as to provide pensions to peacetime veterans of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard suffering from arrested tuberculosis contracted while in the service; to the Committee on Pensions.

(Mr. WAGNER introduced Senate bill 700, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. GURNEY:

S. 701. A bill to provide military or naval training for all male citizens who attain the age of 18 years, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KILGORE:

S. 702. A bill to mobilize the scientific and technical resources of the Nation, to establish an Office of Scientific and Technical Mobilization, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 703. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to reopen and readjudicate the eminent domain case of Hugh B. Hutchinson against the United States, No. 34139 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

S. 704. A bill providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of North Dakota; and

S. 705. A bill relating to Sunday work for employees of the Government who are opposed because of religious training or belief to working on Saturday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. LANGER also introduced Senate bill 706, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. VAN NUYS:

S. 707. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional Assistant Attorney General; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 708. A bill to provide labor for essential agricultural production; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SUSPENSION OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ASSESSMENT ON TREASURY BALANCES DERIVED FROM WAR-BOND SALES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for appropriate reference. Introduction of the bill is requested by Mr. Crowley of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and Mr. Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. I ask to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement explanatory of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 700) to amend section 12B and section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act during the continuance of the war and for 6 months after its termination was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The statement presented by Mr. WAGNER in explanation of the bill is as follows:

WARTIME SUSPENSION OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ASSESSMENT ON UNITED STATES TREASURY BALANCES DERIVED FROM WAR BOND SALES

This bill, introduced today, suspends for the duration of the war and for 6 months thereafter the provisions of the law requiring the payment of assessments to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by insured banks on bank balances of the United States Treasury derived from the sale of War bonds, Maintenance with Federal Reserve banks of reserves by National and State member banks of the Federal Reserve System against these deposits is also suspended under the bill.

Approximately 40 percent of all Government securities are held by the banking system and in the December Treasury financing, when $12,000,000,000 of securities were sold, approximately 42 percent, or $5,000,000,000, were sold to the banks, exclusive of the amount sold to the public through the medium of the banks. A large portion of the proceeds derived from the sale of these securities are carried in the banking system in the so-called war-loan accounts to the credit of the Treasury pending disbursement by the Government. The banks have been required to pay the usual assessment to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation of one-twelfth of 1 percent per annum on these balances in the same manner as on all other deposits which they carry, although the Treasury balances, because of the heavy demands of the war, remain in the banks to the credit of the Government for a relatively short time only.

The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, where early consideration is anticipated.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 1648) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. OVERTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the executive and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 65, line 22, section 205, after the words "the United States", strike out the period, substitute a semicolon, and insert the following: "Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit is a citizen of the United States or a person in the service of the United States on the date of this enactment who, being eligible for citizenship, had heretofore filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States."

PRESENTATION OF MEDAL TO THE PRESIDENT IN RECOGNITION OF HIS AFRICAN AIR TRIP

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Treasury is requested to strike a gold medal of appropriate design with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions to be determined by the Secretary, for presentation to President Franklin Delano Roosevelt in recognition of his contribution in inspiring confidence in aviation as a means of travel by his unprecedented flight to the "unconditional surrender" conference with Prime Minister Winston Churchill at Casablanca, North Africa.

SEC. 2. Any expenses necessary to carry out the purpose of this resolution shall be paid by The American Section of the Ligue Internationale des Aviateurs.

LENDING FUNCTIONS OF GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution, the text of which I ask to have printed in the body of the RECORD, together with a brief statement explanatory thereof which I have prepared. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the statement presented by the Senator from Nebraska will be printed in the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8) was referred to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation and study with respect to the various agencies of the Government which provide loans, advances, or extensions of credit and which are in competition, directly or indirectly with themselves or private lending institutions. In connection with such investigation and study the committee is authorized to obtain with respect to each such agency of the Government an outline of its lending activities, the amounts and numbers of loans, advances, and extensions of credit made by it and the purposes for which such loans, advances, and extensions of credit were made, a statement as to the soundness of such loans, advances, and extensions of credit and the extent to which they have been repaid, the costs of administration of its activities, and such other information with respect to the operations of such agency, the necessity for its continuance, and the extent to which its lending functions may be adequately absorbed by private lending institutions, as the committee deems advisable. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of such investigation and study.

Mr. BUTLER. There is substantial agreement among most groups that individual enterprise must be preserved so far as possible during the war and extended wherever possible after the war. This is no longer a partisan issue.

To further this objective the Federal Government has a primary responsibility to eliminate, or at least reduce, all of its functions which can be and should be performed by individual enterprise.

During the distressed thirties, a variety of such functions were instituted by the Federal Government not only to compete with individual enterprise but to actually displace it. The reemployment caused by the war has now made the continuance of many of these functions at least questionable, if not unnecessary and unwise. As a matter of fact, some of them are being liquidated and abolished.

However, it is human nature that the organizations which have been built around these functions will try to find justification for existence. This may lead to a further invasion of individual-enterprise fields. This apparently is happening and raises a new question of the threat to the post-war job resting upon individual enterprise.

One important group of these activities is Federal agencies with power to loan money. The power of extending loans also requires considerable overhead to service the loan. While all of the forty-odd credit agencies now in existence may not be invading and undermining the individual-enterprise field, there is a substantial number which do. Reports from rural sections indicate that some of these agencies are rivals for borrowers and are evidencing a keen competition all their own. With the war demands for both manpower and credit, to say nothing of the war on inflation, it is unthinkable that the Federal Government should by edict restrict credit extended through private channels and then continue or enlarge its own credit facilities.

This is a time when credit should be curtailed, especially when the distress purposes for which it was originally instituted are gone. Similarly, this is a time to liquidate both from the standpoint of the lender as well as the borrower. Therefore, Congress is requested to direct its Joint Committee on the Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures to investigate and report to Congress on Federal Government credit agencies which invade the field of individual enterprise.

As one of its anti-inflation measures, this administration has urged our citizens to pay their debts or reduce them as rapidly as possible. The same logic applies to Government indebtedness. It will no doubt be wise to continue the Federal loan services to certain groups, but I see no reason for creating new agencies, or of continuing many of those now operating. It may be wise to have Government guaranties to replace direct Government loans, similar to the plans followed in some agencies at this time.

ADDITIONAL CLERICAL ASSISTANCE, COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 97), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ during the Seventy-eighth Congress an assistant clerk and an additional clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate, respectively, of $3,600 and $1,800 per annum.

CONTINUANCE OF AUTHORITY TO INVESTIGATE VIOLATION OF THE RIGHTS OF FREE SPEECH AND ASSEMBLY, ETC.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 98), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolved, That the authority conferred under Senate Resolution 266, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, agreed to June 6, 1936, and under Senate Resolution 70, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, agreed to February 19, 1937, and under Senate Resolution 154, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, agreed to August 12, 1937, and under Senate Resolution 266, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, agreed to May 18, 1938, and under Senate Resolution 126, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, agreed to August 4, 1939, and under Senate Resolution 135, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, agreed to June 28, 1941, to investigate the violation of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively is hereby continued during the first session of the Seventy-eighth Congress for the sole purpose of concluding the printing of hearings and reports, and the limit of expenditures is hereby increased by $500.

PROGRAM OF INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC COOPERATION FOR PEACE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 99), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the people of the United Nations will be confronted with tremendous problems of economic rehabilitation and reconstruction after the termination of the present war; and

Whereas the solution of such problems must be predicated upon a sound program of economic union and world cooperation; and

Whereas the formulation of such a program should be undertaken without delay if a lasting peace is to be secured: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that action should be taken immediately with a view to planning and formulating a comprehensive program of international economic cooperation which will be just and equitable to all the nations of the world, and for that purpose and in order to lay the foundations for world economic stability and a lasting peace the President is hereby requested to call such conferences of representatives of the United Nations, and to take such other action, as he deems desirable and necessary.

RELIEF FOR STARVING PEOPLES OF EUROPE

Mr. GILLETTE (for himself and Mr. TAFT) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 100), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the small democratic countries of Belgium, Norway, Poland, the Netherlands, Greece, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and others have been invaded and occupied; and

Whereas these small countries which are allied with us in the cause of democracy resisted to the limit of their strength the onrush of invading forces; and

Whereas the usual economic processes of these small countries have been completely dislocated as a result of being occupied by invading forces; and

Whereas the food supplies of all these nations are dangerously exhausted due to requisition of native food supplies by the Germans, and inability to secure their usual imports through the blockade; and

Whereas no relief can be brought to them unless there be international action through which their native supplies can be protected and imports be made through the blockade; and

Whereas starvation has already begun; and

Whereas a plan for feeding the people of Greece has been in effect for several months in Greece under supervision of the Swedish and Swiss Governments and the International Red Cross; and

Whereas after 6 months' trial this relief has been certified by the State Department as working satisfactorily and without benefit to the Germans; and

Whereas the Governments of Belgium, Norway, Poland, have requested that their people be given relief; and

Whereas there are food surpluses available in the United States and in South America; and

Whereas many of the small invaded countries have money with which to purchase the food needed to keep their people alive and have signified their desire to use funds for that purpose; and

Whereas the Swedish Government has ships not available to the Allies which could be used for transportation; and

Whereas the specter of mass starvation among friendly and noncombatant women and children is a tragedy that the compassionate heart of America wants to avert; and

Whereas Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Norway, Poland, Greece, Yugoslavia, and the Netherlands and others have lived in friendship with the United States during our entire national existence, and have sent us millions of our most useful and helpful American citizens, and now have no means whatever of securing the necessary agreements by which this disaster can be averted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States does express the conviction that immediate steps should be taken to extend the Greek experiment and thereby prevent this impending tragedy of mass starvation heretofore named; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States respectfully urges that the Government of the United States, through the Secretary of State, endeavor as quickly as possible to work out, in cooperation with the British Government, and the Governments of Sweden, Switzerland, and the accredited representatives of the other governments concerned, the setting up of systematic and definite relief for all stricken and hungry countries where the need is now the most acute; this relief to be based on agreements by the belligerents for the protection of the native and imported food supplies, with rigid safeguarding of such relief so that no military advantage whatever may accrue to the civil populations or armed forces of the invading nations.

CONSOLIDATIONS AND MERGERS OF DOMESTIC TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes.

Mr. McFARLAND. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McFARLAND, Mr. HILL, Mr. TUNNELL, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

PURCHASE OF SILVER BY THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, on Tuesday last the House of Representatives adopted an amendment to the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation Act—H. R. 1648—which, in my opinion, was extremely unwise and rather irregular parliamentary procedure. The amendment I have in mind is the one directed against the silver legislation now on the statute books. There was no consideration whatsoever given to the amendment before the House Appropriations Committee. No hearings were had to afford either the proponents or the opponents of the amendment an opportunity to present their case.

In a talk I had yesterday with one of the Treasury officials I found that the Treasury is in very much doubt as to just what the amendment means and what its effect would be. The parliamentary procedure was irregular in that amendments of such character are of necessity legislative, and result in material changes in existing legislation. Such amendments should only be adopted after thorough consideration by the appropriate legislative committees. The adoption of such amendments by the procedure followed cannot be otherwise than unwise.

Mr. President, the February issue of the Mining Congress Journal contains an article entitled "Silver at Work in the War Program." This brief article carries a factual account of the importance of silver in the war program both prior to and since Pearl Harbor, as well as some statistics which, I am informed, have been gathered from authoritative sources, and which give enlightenment on the general subject of the importance of this precious metal both from an industrial as well as a monetary standpoint.

I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SILVER AT WORK IN THE WAR PROGRAM—TREMENDOUS DEMAND FOR THIS METAL AND ITS ALLOYS STEMS FROM THE NEEDS OF VITAL WAR INDUSTRIES. ESTIMATED CONSUMPTION FOR SUCH PURPOSES ALONE IN 1942 TOTALED 90,000,000 OUNCES; IN 1943, 175,000,000 TO 200,000,000 OUNCES WILL BE NEEDED

(By a special correspondent)

The position of silver at the present is unique. From the time money has been used in the form of coins silver has been a standard of values and a base in our monetary system.

Today silver has assumed new responsibilities and is proving indispensable to American industry. This trend commanded attention in 1940 and increased steadily during 1941, when it was discovered how efficiently silver could fill the gap created by the shortage of other metals. During 1941, prior to Pearl Harbor, 10,000,000 ounces of silver were consumed by American industries engaged in defense work. As our defense program expanded, the use of silver increased. Since we entered the war a terrific demand for this precious metal has developed, 90,000,000 ounces being consumed in 1942. That is aside from the 45,000,000 ounces consumed in 1942 in the manufacture of silverware, jewelry, and other civilian articles. It is authoritatively estimated that from 175 to 200 million ounces of silver will be needed during 1943 for war purposes alone. However, the arts in the United States will consume less than 10,000,000 ounces this year.

In some war uses, nothing else will do as a substitute for other metals. Silver is a commodity as inseparable from our present civilization as are iron, aluminum, tin, zinc, lead, and copper. Silver and silver alloys are the most desirable and durable high-temperature soldering and brazing materials used. They are employed extensively in ships, airplanes, tanks, guns, torpedoes, and bombs. Silver wire is superior to copper wire, and no other metal has proved as efficient as silver in bearings used in tank and aircraft motors. The ductility of silver gives a smooth-wearing surface, and silver's high-heat conductivity keeps these bearings cool with a minimum of lubrication. Silver is being used advantageously in war industries today where high-electric and thermal conductivity, tensile strength and ductility are a prime requisite.

There is available 47,000 tons of bullion silver which has been drafted for nonconsumptive uses in war plants. More than 22,000 tons of this Treasury silver has already been shipped from the vaults at West Point.

On July 29, 1942, the War Production Board issued a directive reserving all imported silver for use in war industries. During the past 3 months the Metals Reserve Co. has been buying the surplus imported silver that has come on the market and now has in excess of 5,000,000 ounces on hand for war industrial use. This amount will soon be increased to 10,000,000 ounces. That is made possible because the amount used in the arts has been drastically reduced, as the manufacturers of silverware and jewelry have been steadily converting their plants to war production.

MINES PRODUCED LESS SILVER IN 1942

Silver production of the United States for the calendar year 1942 was 54,123,792 ounces. This is 21 percent less than in 1941.

Silver subsidiary coinage in the United States increased from $76,120,483 in 1941, to $102,054,773 in 1942, an increase of 13.4 percent. In minting United States and foreign coins in 1942 our mints consumed a total of 85,000,000 ounces of silver bullion, or 31,000,000 ounces more than the total domestic production. In 1942 73,952,734 ounces were consumed in United States coinage alone.

At the end of 1933 there were $29,337,523 silver dollars in circulation (33 cents per capita). At the end of 1942, the silver dollars in circulation had increased to $76,279,641 (57 cents per capita). The subsidiary silver coinage in circulation at the end of 1933 was $271,645,516 ($2.15 per capita), whereas in 1942 subsidiary coinage circulation was $574,941,715 ($4.27 per capita). The total silver certificate circulation at the end of 1942 was $1,751,011,834 ($13.01 per capita), which was 88.7 percent of the total silver certificates outstanding, $1,972,869,472. Silver exported from the United States during 1942 was valued at approximately $2,010,000. This figure is composed almost entirely of the value of the foreign coins we shipped abroad, though we did export 1,500,000 ounces of bullion in addition to the coins. The silver imported into the United States for the year 1942 amounted to about 110,000,000 ounces, the principal contributors being Mexico, Canada, and Peru.

In 1934 the greatest silver-buying program ever engaged in by a government was inaugurated. The Silver Purchase Act resulted in the acquisition by the United States Government from June 1934 to December 1942 of approximately 2,055,300,000 ounces of foreign silver and 500,600,000 ounces of domestically mined silver. United States industrial consumption during that period was 571,067,514 ounces, and the world consumption of silver in coinage systems was 902,923,368 ounces.

SEVERAL GOVERNMENTS MELT DOWN SILVER COINS

It is difficult to account for all of the silver stocks held by governments throughout the world because of the practice resorted to by several governments in recent years of melting down and devaluing their silver coins, thereby reducing their fineness. This procedure enabled those countries to increase their coinage circulation without acquiring new silver. It also enabled them to use their surplus silver to meet demands in the various bullion markets where other countries were seeking silver for coinage and industrial use. The practice resorted to by governments of melting down their silver coins and dumping their surplus silver on the bullion markets, thereby depressing the world price, is regarded by many people as lending encouragement toward racketeering on the part of such governments, bullion brokers, and industrialists.

It also had the effect of increasing the monetary value of the silver remaining in the coins. In short, these governments withdrew from the silver coins a part of their intrinsic value, thereby destroying the value of the coin as well as the confidence of the people. Their purpose was to destroy silver as money and to deal with it as they do the base metal, copper, when coined into money. Silver is a precious metal, as is gold, and its rightful place as a medium of exchange as well as domestic currency should be restored and protected.

On March 16, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued a directive which placed a general ceiling on most of the commodities that enter into the economic life of this Nation. Silver was included under this general ceiling. The foreign price of 35⅜ cents an ounce and the domestic price of 71.11 cents an ounce were then made rigid. The pegging of the price of foreign silver at 35⅜ cents an ounce met with the enthusiastic approval of the silversmiths and jewelry manufacturers, as imported silver has been the source of supply for use in their industries.

But the growing demand for silver by war industries became so great that the War Production Board on July 29, 1942, issued an order which denied to these manufacturers the purchase of foreign silver, but permitted them to continue until October 1, 1942, to process the silver stocks then on hand. This period was later extended to November 15, 1942, since which date no foreign silver has been permitted to be consumed in the manufacture of these luxury goods. But these manufacturers can still buy domestically mined silver at 71.11 cents an ounce. By the end of 1942 the Treasury had practically stopped buying newly mined domestic silver. Slightly over 88 percent of the domestic production of 1942 was acquired by the Treasury, leaving the remainder for the civilian goods manufacturers.

FOREIGN SILVER PRICE INCREASED TO 45 CENTS AN OUNCE

In spite of the increased demand for silver in the United States, the price of domestically mined silver has not increased since the act of Congress of July 6, 1939, which established a net price of 71.11 cents an ounce. In reality, the price of domestically mined silver is $1.29 an ounce. The Treasury actually pays 71.11 cents for 55 percent of the ounce, the remaining 45 percent of the ounce being claimed by the Treasury as "free silver." Only the 55 percent portion is monetized; the rest is profit. However, the price of foreign silver was raised on September 1, 1942, from 35⅜ cents to 45 cents an ounce, chiefly because of the desire of the State Department to further the Good Neighbor Policy and to increase silver imports, as well as to extend financial aid to the Government of Mexico. As a result of this increase, the Government of Mexico received 4½ cents of the 9⅝ cents per ounce differential. The melting point of the Mexican peso is 53.7 cents an ounce, which acts as a barrier against a rise beyond that point in the price of Mexican bullion silver.

On September 14, 1942, Senator GREEN, of Rhode Island, introduced a bill in the Senate, presumably intended to make Treasury silver available for use in war industries. This bill, in its original form authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of Treasury silver to war industries, to foreign governments whose defense is of vital importance to the defense of the United States, to any person, corporation, partnership, or Government department, for use in the manufacture of civilian goods not inconsistent with the war effort, and to silverware and jewelry manufacturers while their plants are being converted to war production. It also stated that the average price of all silver sold under this act should not be less than 50 cents per fine troy ounce, and that at all times the ownership and the possession of an amount of silver of a monetary value equal to the face amount of all outstanding silver certificates heretofore or hereafter issued by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be maintained by the Treasury.

On December 7, 1942, Senator MCCARRAN submitted an amendment by way of a substitute for Senator GREEN'S bill (S. 2768). The aims of this proposal paralleled that of the Green bill insofar as releasing Treasury silver for war industries goes, but the methods employed were fair both to the producer and the consumer. It provided that the price for all silver sold under this act should not bring less than 71.11 cents per fine troy ounce, and carried the same stipulation with respect to the protection of the outstanding silver certificates as did the Green bill. It further provided that no Treasury silver shall be sold until all current supplies of imported and domestically mined silver shall have become reduced to an immediately available aggregate stock of 20,000,000 ounces or less, and that any silver leased under this act shall be returned within 1 year after the termination of the war.

It also provided that out of any silver stocks acquired by the various agencies of the Government (other than the Treasury Department) 30,000,000 ounces per annum would be reserved for the exclusive use of and purchase, at not less than the current market price, by domestic manufacturers (1) for the manufacture of silver articles for civilian use, and (2) for the converting of existing plants of such manufacturers to war production.

During 1942 unwarranted propaganda concerning silver has circulated through the mail and was published in several of the outstanding magazines and newspapers in the East. None of these articles had any foundation in fact whatsoever. The 12 Senators that represent the 6 leading silver-producing States of the West were accused of refusing to permit the release of Treasury silver for use in industries engaged in war production.

NEW ORGANIZATION SEEKS TO DEPRESS SILVER PRICE

Investigation has disclosed the fact that within the past 4 months a new organization has been formed in New York City under the name of the Silver Users' Emergency Committee. It is made up of jewelers, silversmiths, and other industrial consumers of silver. This organization is behind the movement to depress the price of silver, and to establish a precedent of making Treasury silver a stock pile for their industrial requirements at 50 cents an ounce. They would like to establish a world price for silver in the United States that would conform to the official price of approximately 50 cents in London and India.

The people of India lack confidence in the pound sterling. The exchange value of the rupee has declined since civil strife developed in India last August, but the price of silver in Bombay rose from 62 to 93 cents an ounce, which high price was reached in November. In spite of the fact that the melting point of the old rupee is approximately 87 cents an ounce the Indian authorities show no signs of apprehension with regard to the dehoarding of the old rupee silver coins of eleven-twelfths fineness, irrespective of their loss of legal tender status beginning in May 1943. In other words, the Indians prefer the old high-silver content rupee coins to the new low-silver content coins regardless of the loss of legal tender status of the higher silver content rupees.

POST-WAR ERA OFFERS EXTENDED USES FOR SILVER

The future holds many and varied opportunities for silver. Silver in industrial uses will assume a position of paramount importance in the post-war period. All of the tests to which it has been subjected have proven its superior qualities and the versatility of the metal.

Governments and industries throughout the world will be competing in the open market for silver soon after the cessation of hostilities. Post-war readjustments will demand a more extensive use of both gold and silver than has ever occurred in the history of the world. Silver will be by far the more useful of the two precious metals because of its demand for monetary circulation and industrial utilization. It will be used to supplant subsidiary paper money of extremely doubtful value. Silver coinage will continue to increase during 1943. As our troops are sent abroad in greater numbers, they will require greater amounts of small denominational coins. Silver and gold will be used concurrently in rehabilitating and stabilizing the currency systems of the impoverished nations and will act as a tonic in revivifying their commerce and restoring their international status. Gold will probably be confined largely to the settlement of international balances and to the function of backing for indirectly redeemable paper money, while silver will circulate both as coin and be held in bullion form for the redemption 100 percent of paper money backed by silver.

Those economists who insist on managed currencies as a basis for conducting world trade are doomed to disappointment and failure. No managed currency system has ever succeeded. The people of the world will demand both gold and silver, for which no satisfactory substitute has been found since time immemorial.

RELINQUISHMENT OF EXTRATERRITORIAL RIGHTS IN CHINA

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report back favorably, without amendment, Executive A, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, a treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of China for the relinquishment of extraterritorial rights in China and the regulation of related matters signed at Washington on January 11, 1943, and a supplementary exchange of notes also concerning matters related to extraterritorial rights signed at the same time and made an integral part of the treaty, and I submit a report (Ex. Rept. No. 2) thereon. The report recommends the ratification of the treaty recently made with China relating to the surrender and abdication by the United States of certain rights.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to receiving the report as in executive session? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of the routine morning business the Senate proceed to the consideration of the ratification of this treaty as in executive session.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I desire to accommodate the Senator from Texas, but I gave notice Monday that at the conclusion of the routine morning business today I should like to discuss lease-lend, and the island bases close to the United States on which we are building military and naval establishments, the arrangement being on a 99-year basis. I assume that the treaty discussion will be brief, and that the treaty will be disposed of with dispatch, because it is pretty generally understood it is not a subject of wide controversy. Am I right in that assumption?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is correct, as he usually is. There will be very brief comment by one or two members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but there will be no extended debate, if the Senator from Texas knows the situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to have the Senator amend his unanimous-consent request, if he will. I should like to proceed at the conclusion of the routine morning business. What I have to say will not possibly extend beyond half an hour, and if the Senator will make his request that the treaty be taken up immediately following the remark of the Senator from Maryland, I shall be very grateful to him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Anything that arouses gratitude on the part of the Senator from Maryland toward the Senator from Texas is always welcome, but I hope the Senator will not insist on his suggestion, for the reason that I know his remarks will be so interesting that they will provoke comments by other Senators, and the debate will probably run on for some time. I really do not think the consideration of the treaty will take over 15 minutes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, most Senators go to lunch around 1 o'clock, and I do not talk for the purpose of hearing my own voice. I therefore should not like to have it happen that when I rose the Senate Chamber would be empty, because I believe some of the observations I shall make will not be secondary in their ramifications and importance to the ratification of the treaty with China. For this reason I should be grateful if the Senator from Texas would give me an opportunity to be heard at the conclusion of the routine morning business, and then have the treaty taken up. I promise I shall not abuse his confidence, if he will reword his request.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is very much embarrassed by the request of the Senator from Maryland. The Senator from Texas is acting in conformity with a conference he has already had with members of the Committee on Foreign Relations on both sides of the aisle. They all are quite insistent that the proposed action on the treaty be had promptly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall accede to the Senator's request, but I ask him to agree that if the debate shall extend beyond 15 minutes he will of his own volition make another request to give me an opportunity to speak. I do not wish to wait until 1:30 o'clock to make a 10-minute speech.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if that comes as a formal request, I shall object to it. I think observance of the right of the able Senator from Texas is secured by the rules which permit him to move an executive session. I see no reason why the able Senator from Maryland should not wait a few minutes, after the conclusion of the routine morning business, to make his speech.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will yield, I have no objection to waiting a few minutes, but I know that when Senators rise, usually in the best of faith, they underestimate their capacity of endurance, and having been a witness of what has happened on many occasions, I do not wish to be a victim of what usually happens.

Mr. McNARY. There is no parliamentary process for parceling out time on the floor of the Senate. I shall object to anything of that kind. I am willing to accede to the request of the able Senator from Texas if we take up the consideration of the treaty immediately following the routine morning business.

Mr. TYDINGS. I object.

DIFFICULTIES ENCOUNTERED BY FARMERS OWING TO LACK OF MANPOWER

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter addressed to me by Hon. R. L. Hanna, of Fargo, N. Dak., together with an advertisement by the United States Employment Service published in the Fargo, N. Dak., Forum of February 2, 1943. I ask that the letter as well as the advertisement may be published in full in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

I may add that the advertisement which appears in this North Dakota newspaper calls for 33,428 men. It says that the starting wage is from $213 to $270 per month. Mr. Hanna farms 2,080 acres of land. He has a large herd of cattle, as well as a large number of hogs and sheep, and he says it is hard for him to keep help on the farm when advertisements of the sort referred to are published in North Dakota newspapers.

There being no objection, the letter and the advertisement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HANNA STOCK FARM,
Fargo, N. Dak., February 3, 1943.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senator,

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: I am enclosing newspaper page torn from the Tuesday evening, February 2, edition of the Fargo Forum. I wish to call to your attention an ad inserted at the bottom of the page by a Portland shipyard concern and sponsored by the United States Employment Service, a Government agency.

Advertisements of this type have been carried in North Dakota papers from time to time announcing enormous wages for workers. The farmers still left on the land are working under great difficulty because of lack of manpower. This is especially true now during the winter on livestock farms, but in the spring, summer, and fall all farms will feel the effect. How is it possible to keep men on the farm of any age when advertisements and radio announcements are continually used to lure the people of North Dakota to other parts of the Nation?

For many years I have owned and operated a farm in North Dakota. This farm comprises 2,080 acres of land. I have a large herd of Aberdeen-Angus beef cattle, a farm flock of 1,000 head of sheep, several hundred head of hogs, poultry, and dairy cattle. As you know, on a farm of this type, where we breed, raise, and feed our own livestock for the market, it takes experienced and competent men. Conditions are now such that it is almost impossible to farm, but we hope we will be able to continue to do our part in helping to produce food.

I note in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that you have taken great interest in our farm problems and I just wanted to call to your attention this angle of it.

With kind wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,

R. L. HANNA.

THE CROSBY FAMILY AND AN F. S. A. LOAN

Mr. LANGER. I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Crosby Family of Eight Made F. S. A. Loan Pay Well," published in the Divide County Farmers Press of February 5, 1943.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CROSBY FAMILY OF EIGHT MADE FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION LOAN PAY WELL—DILIGENT APPLICATION IN ALL-OUT EFFORT PROVES HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL

(Robert Butterfield family: Father, age 38; mother, 29; Darlene, 11; Carrollee, 9; Patricia, 7; Jack, 5; Juanita, 4; Walter, 3.)

An all-out effort can well be illustrated by the activities of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Butterfield and their six young children, who live in the outskirts of Crosby, N. Dak.

These small children, as well as their parents, are enjoying better diets than ever before because the family is producing the greatest part of their own food supply. With a $130 Farm Security Administration Food for Freedom loan made last April, the family purchased 1 cow, 2 pigs, 100 baby chicks, and $7 worth of garden seed.

In 1941 the family had a small garden which produced enough potatoes to last through the winter, but the canned and stored vegetables ran out before Christmas. That year they received surplus commodities.

Besides having an abundant supply of fresh vegetables during the growing season this past summer, the family stored 101 bushels and canned 210 quarts for this winter and spring use. They also produced and used at home 540 gallons of milk, 400 pounds of pork, 5 dozen eggs, and 100 pounds of poultry.

Mrs. Butterfield stated that they expect to increase the production of milk by 160 gallons, pork by 100 pounds, beef by 100 pounds, eggs by 235 dozen, and poultry by 450 pounds, thus assuring an even better diet for the family. She also stated that the cans of food they have purchased this year could be counted on her fingers. Their tomato plants froze last spring and since the family cannot afford to buy all the citrus fruit they need, it has been necessary to buy a few cans of tomatoes.

Although they have to buy some feed for the cow, hogs, and chickens they haul hay in from the country, stake the cow out in summer and manage to get most of the chicken feed by scraping up the grain spilled around the grain bins and elevators.

Mr. Butterfield works away from home on the railroad which leaves the food production enterprise pretty much up to Mrs. Butterfield and the children. Without the help of the children, Mrs. Butterfield says she could not manage so much. The two oldest girls do a lot of housework and run most of the errands, leaving their mother time to do the chores. All but the two youngest children helped to keep the garden free from weeds, but all helped to gather the vegetables and get them in the basement. Jack, age 5, was especially good help, says his mother.

In spite of all the work of producing and preserving this food and taking care of the family, Mrs. Butterfield has found time to knit for the Red Cross. Mr. and Mrs. Butterfield used to buy two $25 War bonds every 3 months, but now they are buying one a month. Darlene and Carrollee, ages 11 and 9, each have purchased $15.50 in War stamps with money they have earned themselves. As soon as they save $3.25 more they are going to turn them in for bonds.

On the first of each month, just as sure as anything, the two oldest girls call at the Farm Security Administration office and make a $5 payment on their loan. Mrs. Butterfield remarked that they have also been able to pay nearly all their old debts with money saved by producing their own food.

Mrs. George P. Homnes, chairman of the county war relief production for the Red Cross, reports Mrs. Butterfield's Red Cross knitting from January 13, 1942, to January 28, 1943, as follows: 1 pair child's socks, 2 pairs children's mittens, 4 small children's sweaters, 5 caps or beanies, 1 pair child's snow pants, 4 pairs men's regulation socks, 5 pairs men's spiral socks, 4 men's sleeveless sweaters, 2 Navy scarfs, 1 cap muffler, 2 long Army helmets, 2 neck-length helmets; total 33 knitted articles.

THE FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Mr. LANGER. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Question of Aiding or Ousting 3,000,000 Farms," published in the Bottineau (N. Dak.) Courant, of February 4, 1943.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUESTION OF AIDING OR OUSTING 3,000,000 FARMS

Behind the fight over the Farm Security Administration is the far more significant question of whether or not the Government should bow to the demand of the farm bloc and help to drive some 3,000,000 small farm families off their farms in order to supply cheap labor for about 200,000 large farmers and their friends in the National Association of Manufacturers. The farm bloc is trying to prevent the masses of farmers from discovering its Simon Legree intentions, for it knows that at the most, only 10 percent of the farms which get 50 percent of the farm income would fall in with such a diabolical scheme.

But with the businessmen in the city, the farm bloc seems to think that it can be more frank. Thus in the January 8 issue of the United States News, a magazine for busy businessmen, the plan is stated in unvarnished form:

"Out of the Nation's total of 6,000,000 farmers, 2,000,000, or about one-third, had incomes in 1940 of less than $400 on the average, and all together the 2,000,000 produced only 3 percent of the Nation's food. Another 1,000,000 farmers in the next higher income group also contributed very little to the country's food supply. Here is the biggest available reservoir of farm labor in the country. It is urged that a shift of part of this supply to farms producing the bulk of the Nation's food supply would result in a net increase in food production."

Only the farm bloc contends that a net increase in food production would result from forcing farmers to serve as farm workers. Such an idea could be supported only by the farm bloc, which has itself strenuously resisted the call for increased production.

While the O'Neal-Smith forces charge the Farm Security Administration with regimenting the farmers and accuse the Government of using the war as a cloak for carrying out social reform, we find that the farm bloc is trying to consign 3,000,000 farmers to the chain gang. Using the war as a cloak and a page from Mein Kampf as their guide, these would-be dictators are themselves plotting to take control of rural America and transform free farmers into wage slaves under their lash.

If the war is to be won, and won quickly, the power of the farm bloc must be broken. This minority group must not be allowed to exercise a veto power over the rest of the Nation. It is reported that five State organizations of the Farm Bureau Federation are planning to break loose from the O'Neal-Smith bureaucracy in disgust with its policies. Such action on the part of these five State Bureaus will strengthen the present progressive coalition of labor forces, the Farmers' Union, and church groups.

To defeat the farm bloc, however, it is essential that the Government formulate a broad, over-all program of practical aid to the family-sized farms so that maximum production may be achieved in 1943. Such a program, including centralized planning such as provided in the Pepper-Tolan bill, would cut the ground out from under the farm bloc, whose policy is one of creating chaos so that it can put the blame on the administration.

Not long ago Secretary Wickard named H. W. Parisius to head up the highly important production division in the Department of Agriculture. In keeping with his instructions, Parisius drafted a thorough-going plan for the reorganization of personnel and expansion of production programs, including aid to the family-sized farms.

It is reported that Secretary Wickard reversed himself on the Parisius plan and refused to act on it, because he is afraid of a kick-back from the farm bloc. Parisius realizes that no appeasement policy can possibly placate the farm bloc, and he was therefore forced to turn in his resignation (January 16).

Instead of trying to appease the farm bloc, Mr. Wickard should take his case to the people. If he comes forward with a broad plan of aid to the farmers, enabling the family-sized group to reach maximum production, he will win the support needed for a successful rout of the farm bloc.—Facts for Farmers.

Mr. LANGER. I further ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter dealing with the Farm Security Administration. It is from Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Staven, of Park River, N. Dak. Mr. Staven is the secretary of the Farmers' Union.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WALSH COUNTY FARMERS UNION,
Park River, N. Dak.

We like to state our stand regarding Farm Security Administration. We feel in times like these with so much food needed and such a shortage of goods, now this could have been avoided to a large extent had plenty of money been allowed through the Farm Security Administration to have set up those millions of farmers who are handicapped for lack of equipment and unable to produce, in other words it would not only have raised the living standards of those people but it would have given the world more food. We see what the Farm Security Administration has done through its limited funds, what couldn't be done had more been allowed?

Then, too, we feel that when industry is borrowing money from the Government at 1½ to 2 percent interest and doesn't have to be mortgaged and made to pay it back if the war should end or if the factory is not a success. We feel farmers should be given equal rights and not have to pay 5 percent interest as stipulated by Wickard in a ruling made a little over a week ago. If his crop fails, according to this ruling, he still is obligated to repay. Is this fair?

How about the synthetic-rubber program? Why is it continually shelved? We hope our Senators and Representatives give bill S. 2600 by GILLETTE all the support in their power to give, and that it will be passed.

Machinery is needed. Not enough has been allowed, and we hope a change is made. Farmers must produce; how can they if they aren't allowed the equipment and repairs needed.

College girls and city women cannot fill the labor bill for the farm. One good hired man is needed, who knows how to operate and care for machinery on most family-sized farms.

Sincerely,

Mr. and Mrs. ELMER STAVEN.

GASOLINE RATIONING

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter received by me under date of February 3, 1943, from G. O. Hanson, of Grand Forks, N. Dak., dealing with the question of rationing.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., February 3, 1943.
HON. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senator,

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: * * * It seems to me, Mr. LANGER, that there is something pretty rotten in this rationing set-up. These fellows at the head of the rationing set-up—both State and Federal—either try to tell anyone who tries to find out something that that person is not patriotic, is helping Hitler, or some other damn nonsense. They do not help a darn bit in getting people to cooperate. I happen to know that if all ration boards are supposed to pass out rations equally, then certainly if a liquor salesman is allowed a C ration, certainly anyone is. Those officials know what I mean, and they know where these C rations are given out and to whom.

I know a salesman right here in Grand Forks, selling a commodity—one of the necessary food, shelter, or clothing items—who went to the local ration office and asked for a supplemental ration to hold out until March 1. He has a B ration and only asked for enough extra to get along. The outside clerk told him he was not eligible. He could not even get a chance to talk to any member of the ration board. This person spent a couple of years in a sanatorium with tuberculosis, and instead of doing like so many thousands have done—ask for relief or a Government job—has had the guts to get out and fight for a living like the rest of us have. You probably know him. His name is ———. He sells clothing direct to the consumer. Al is trying to make an honorable living, and trying to keep his health by doing this type of work which keeps him outside quite a lot. When we see these things happening, how do these officials expect us to take it and like it? When politics is knocked out of this rationing deal and other deals so that each person is given exactly what he is entitled to, then we will cooperate. As long as conditions are as they are though, there will be more people sitting down and saying what they think in black and white.

I had a hardware salesman tell me the other day that men in his line of sales work have had some of their job names changed from hardware salesman to production specialists so that they could be eligible for C or double C rations which give them about their normal amount of gasoline. This particular hardware salesman is still a hardware salesman with a B ration.

What do these officials mean by an "eligible" person? They can evidently make anyone eligible they want to—all depending on what they think.

In the paragraph where Mr. Brown mentions that persons in Devils Lake or Minot are subject to the same provisions as those living in Grand Forks, it certainly is not up to me to mention any names or other facts so that office can determine eligibility. You know what Mr. Krause said about the Minot situation. He blamed the citizens of Minot—chamber of commerce and other businessmen. It seems to me it is about time that these officials try to do something to cure this situation rather than to damn these citizens who, at least, dare to say something. Someday there will be an accounting, and the attitude of these officials will have to be a lot different than it is now if they expect to stay on the job.

It seems to me that the judgment of the average businessman is certainly equal to, or better than, the judgment of a lot of these bureaucratic officials in Washington, Bismarck, or wherever they may be.

I want Congress to take back every bit of power it has unintentionally given to Mr. Roosevelt. He should not have any emergency powers. Thank the Lord I have never voted for that man—not even the first time. How can any intelligent person believe Roosevelt when he has broken every promise he has made?

I will tell you what I think of this whole mess. I believe Roosevelt is quite glad that this country is short of rubber, gasoline, too, meat, sugar, and all of the other necessary things we need. It is one way he can try to regiment the people who don't believe in him and the whole New Deal. We all know he has believed in an economics of scarcity, not one of plenty. Our margins over our consumption demands have been so small that we couldn't possibly have a surplus, and certainly someone must have seen this war coming a long time before we got into it. Roosevelt was too damn busy keeping his New Deal alive to bother with anything so important, or so trifling as to foresee the need to have some rubber, quinine, and other essentials on hand which we couldn't get except from some foreign country.

Certainly, Mr. LANGER, I am not the only one who thinks this way, as I personally know quite a few people who think this way. They are good Americans too, doing a lot more to win this war than Office of Price Administration, War Production Board, or any other alphabet officials who may criticize them.

Now, I would like to mention a few thoughts in regard to this business of drafting manpower. Not as long as this Government allows the 40-hour week to stand, and overtime pay to be paid, and slow-downs in war plants to continue, and twice the manpower on a ship job or any other job to continue should Congress or this Nation ever allow Paul McNutt or any other man to tell a man he has to leave his business and go elsewhere. There is no shortage of manpower, and that is attested to by so many people I personally know who do work in these plants, shipyards, etc. Where there might be a shortage, that can certainly be corrected without disrupting the whole national economy.

* * * * *

A man was home a short time ago from his job in the shipyards at Portland. His work is quite specialized, and he is highly paid. Just the same, he himself admitted that he couldn't possibly earn what he was paid, and there were twice as many men working on a lot of the ships as they could make use of. His brother-in-law told me about it. He wondered who was going to pay the bill for all that mismanagement, but said he would take it as long as he could get it. He said it was a shame the way manpower is being wasted, and then we have the Government tell us they are going to really make it tough. Does that all make sense to you, Mr. LANGER? It doesn't to me.

* * * * *

With best regards, I am,
Very truly yours,

G. O. HANSON.

MAXIMUM PRICES ON PORK AND BEEF PRODUCTS AND BREAD AND BAKERY PRODUCTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The resolution (S. Res. 94) submitted by Mr. REED on the 8th instant was read, as follows:

Whereas the provisions of the act entitled "An act to aid in stabilizing the cost of living," approved October 2, 1942, expressly provide (1) that "no maximum price shall be established or maintained under authority of this act or otherwise for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodity a price therefor" equal to the parity price for such agricultural commodity, (2) that no maximum price shall be maintained for any such processed or manufactured commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of the agricultural commodity the highest price received by them between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, with certain qualifications: Provided, That the President may correct gross inequities in this respect, but that in no event shall a maximum price be established for such a processed or manufactured commodity which will not reflect parity to the producers of the agricultural commodity, and (3) that "in the fixing of maximum prices on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing"; and

Whereas the act known as the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, approved January 30, 1942, as amended October 2, 1942, expressly provides that the price-fixing powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except to prevent circumstances or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act"; and

Whereas the foregoing provisions have not been suspended or modified by any law or lawful action; and

Whereas on October 22, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued Maximum Price Regulation No. 148, Revised, now in effect as amended November 2, 1942, fixing maximum prices for pork products and using as a live-hog base approximately $13.60 per 100 pounds at Chicago, although the price of live hogs at Chicago since the promulgation of said revised regulation for a substantial period of time has been in excess of $15 per 100 pounds, causing a loss to the processors in violation of the provision of the act approved October 2, 1942, that processors shall be allowed a general fair and equitable margin; and

Whereas said Maximum Price Regulation No. 148, Revised, as amended, is in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, because the base of live animal prices used was lower than the highest price received by producers between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, and because there has been no action by the President to permit such a lower base on the ground of any gross inequity; and

Whereas on December 10, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued Maximum Price Regulation No. 169, now in effect as amended December 19, 1942, and January 2, 1943, fixing maximum prices for beef products on a basis which fails to yield to the processors generally fair and equitable margins; and

Whereas on April 28, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued the general maximum price regulation establishing as maximum prices for bread and other bakery products, together with other commodities, the highest price charged by each seller during March 1942 for each such commodity, and said maximum prices for bread and other bakery products have since been maintained at the same levels; and

Whereas said maximum prices for bread and other bakery products were and are in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, because said products are processed and manufactured in whole from wheat and other agricultural commodities and because said maximum prices did not and do not reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodities either parity or the highest prices received by producers for them between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942; and

Whereas contrary to the statement of the Office of Price Administration at the time of issuing the general maximum price regulation that "every producer whose prices are stabilized is assured that his costs, which are based upon the stabilized prices of others, will not rise," the Office of Price Administration did not at that time place any maximum price or control, with minor exceptions, upon any of the costs of manufacturers of bread and other bakery products, and it was not until October 1942 that ceilings were placed upon flour, eggs, dry, evaporated, and condensed milk, certain other ingredients used in such products, and wages, by which time such costs had undergone a substantial increase, amounting to an average increase of one-half cent per pound in the case of bread; and

Whereas the costs of producing bread and other bakery products have continued to increase substantially since October 1942, as a result in part of increases in maximum prices for flour allowed by Maximum Price Regulation No. 296 issued by the Office of Price Administration on January 2, 1943, although no increase in the maximum prices for bread and other bakery products has been allowed; and

Whereas producers of bread and other bakery products, particularly smaller producers, are therefore being denied a generally fair and equitable margin in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, and large numbers of such producers in fact are operating at a loss; and

Whereas the Office of Price Administration, in violation of the provision in the act approved January 30, 1942, that the price fixing powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry," has used such powers to compel such changes in the bread and other bakery products industry (as evidenced by its announcement upon the issuance of Maximum Price Regulation No. 296 that "this increase in flour prices should not necessitate an increase in the present retail bread prices because the higher flour costs, it is estimated, will be completely offset by simultaneously introduced savings in the manufacture, packaging, and distribution costs of bakers"), affected by Food Distribution Order No. 1, issued by the Secretary of Agriculture under direction of the Director of Economic Stabilization after recommendation by the Office of Price Administration, limiting varieties of bread and rolls, prohibiting slicing of bread, limiting the amounts of milk, shortening, and sugar in white bread, prohibiting certain methods of distribution and otherwise changing the practices of the industry for the purpose of maintaining present maximum prices for bread; and

Whereas said Food Distribution Order No. 1, even could it be lawfully resorted to by the Office of Price Administration for the purpose of maintaining present maximum prices for bread, has not resulted in savings which allow producers of bread a generally fair and equitable margin as required by law; and

Whereas the meat processing and bread and other bakery products industries are essential war industries and their continued operation and the foods they supply are essential to the national welfare and the successful prosecution of the war; and

Whereas the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration are threatening extinction of these industries or their concentration in the hands of a few large operators able to withstand the price squeeze imposed, by reason of large financial resources; and

Whereas the action of the Office of Price Administration in maintaining maximum prices for pork and beef products and for bread and other bakery products at present levels in violation of the foregoing provisions of law is defeating the intent of the Congress that producers of agricultural commodities shall receive fair and reasonable prices, due to the inability of processors to pay such prices: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or through a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, is hereby authorized and directed—

(1) to investigate and study the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration, the Office of Economic Stabilization, and any other governmental agency, their officials, employees, agents, and representatives, in respect to the establishment and maintenance of maximum prices for pork and beef products and for bread and other bakery products; and

(2) to report its findings and to recommend further legislation or action by the Congress or the Senate, if any, needed to insure compliance by any or all such agencies, officials, employees, agents, and representatives with the provisions of the aforementioned act approved January 30, 1942, as amended, and the act approved October 2, 1942.

For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, as it deems advisable.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 94 was submitted by me on Monday of this week. Submission of the resolution was made in response to numerous requests received from bakers and small meat packers all over the United States asking for an investigation as to the relationship between the prices of live animals and of the ingredients out of which bread is made and the price ceilings fixed by the Office of Price Administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Discussion of the resolution and the reference of it are likely to take up some time, because it involves the whole question of the rules of the Senate, the proper reference of a resolution, and the responsibility of the Chair in regard thereto. I wonder if the Senator from Kansas would not let that resolution go over until the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] shall have concluded what he has to say, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has brought up the treaty with China and it has been acted upon? The Senator from Kansas will lose none of his rights by so doing.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Maryland will offer any guaranties with respect to the amount of time they will require——

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know that they have to. It does not make any difference. We will stay here until we dispose of these matters. The Senator from Kansas will lose none of his rights by deferring action on the resolution.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to doing so. When I obtain the floor I shall move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the Senator will do so.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have not consented to a change being made in the program. Under the rule the resolution now comes before the Senate. Let it be understood that it comes up against the wishes of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The resolution comes up automatically at the conclusion of the routine morning business. This is the appropriate time for it to come up. If I could obtain some understanding as to how much time the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Maryland will take in connection with the matters which they wish to bring before the Senate I might waive the rule, but I shall not do so until I have such information.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am not endeavoring to interfere with the rules of the Senate. I am simply asking to be recognized and obtain the floor. The Senator from Oregon is not going to outmaneuver me by the plausible way in which he puts his suggestion.

Mr. McNARY. I have the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will have it when the Senator shall have concluded.

Mr. McNARY. We will see about that. Mr. President, I have no desire to enter into a controversy over procedure. My whole theme is that we should go along in an orderly fashion. No Senator who desires to speak has the right to do so merely because he entertains the desire. If the able Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] desires to postpone consideration of his resolution, which now automatically comes before the Senate, I have no objection. I do not want him to waive any rights unless it is perfectly agreeable to him.

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senator from Oregon that I am always glad to accommodate myself and to adjust myself to the desires and convenience of my colleagues. Consideration of the resolution is now in order. I have, however, no disposition to be too technical with respect to application of the rule. I realize at the same time the force and consistency of the position of the Senator from Oregon. He has been taking that position consistently in order to bring the Senate back to consideration during the morning hour of the business which it is supposed to transact in the morning hour. If the Senator from Oregon wants to make objection, and the Chair shall sustain the objection, I shall be very happy to have Senate Resolution 94 considered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, irrespective of the rules of the Senate, which I think should always be obeyed, I am willing to adhere to the wishes of my colleagues so long as they do not interfere with the orderly procedure. If the able Senator from Kansas is willing to postpone consideration of his resolution, that is agreeable to me. However, I do not want him to be forced into that position merely because some Senator wishes to make a speech. If he yields willingly and voluntarily, I shall not insist on the point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator from Kansas desires to delay bringing up his resolution until after the morning business is concluded?

Mr. REED. With the understanding that immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] I may have the floor to discuss Senate Resolution 94.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the morning business been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the request of the Senator from Kansas. The Chair assumed that the Senator from Maryland rose either to object or to reserve the right to object.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the question debatable, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A request for unanimous consent is not debatable.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no motion before the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; there is no motion before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question is whether any Senator objects to the request of the Senator from Kansas that consideration of Senate Resolution 94 be postponed until after the consideration of the Treaty with China and the address of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. TYDINGS).

The VICE PRESIDENT. That particular question is not debatable. Does the Senator from Maryland rise to object?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, what is the request? Let me see if I understand it. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] stated that with the general understanding that consideration of Senate Resolution 94 be taken up immediately after these other matters are out of the way, he would be delighted to forego bringing it up until then. I do not consider that to be a request made formally to the Chair, and I do not believe any fair parliamentary interpretation would so hold.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, one conversant with the rule would know that a resolution coming over from a previous day automatically has precedence over any other proposal before the morning business has been concluded.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the resolution before the Senate, Mr. President?

Mr. McNARY. I have not yielded.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not addressing the distinguished Senator from Oregon; I am addressing the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. It was laid before the Senate before the morning business had been concluded. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the able Senator from Kansas is willing to postpone consideration of the resolution until after the address by the Senator from Maryland and the address by the Senator from Texas. That should end the controversy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, with the understanding that I shall not lose my parliamentary position——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Chair, first, if it is in order for me to proceed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request made by the Senator from Kansas is pending at the moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understood the able leader of the minority to say that the Senator from Kansas was willing to forego his right to the floor. That was the understanding. Therefore, no request is pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The understanding of the Chair is that the Senator from Kansas made a request.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the request debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is not debatable.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it to be acted upon immediately?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? That is the only point.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 94.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a correct statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the resolution is debatable, and I shall now proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

THE LEND-LEASE PROGRAM

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the so-called lend-lease program became a part of our national foreign policy long before we entered the war. In its broader aspects, it has always been a misnomer. In sum it means that the United States, in addition to supplying and utilizing its armed manpower in the air, on the sea, and on the land, and bearing its full share of the killed and wounded on the world's battlefields since Pearl Harbor, has undertaken at the same time to give—not lend, or lease—ships, planes, tanks, guns, shells, trucks, automobiles, clothing, medical supplies and foodstuffs to our allies, and, to some extent, to the people of occupied countries.

The only offset to the tremendous financial burden which lend-lease will place upon the shoulders of the American people is the trickle of things which our allies may make available where our armed forces are fighting on or near their own lands.

Outside this amount of compensation, lend-lease is a one-way street from the United States to our allies. The huge final unpaid debt will not be discharged by the foreign beneficiaries of our lend-lease policy. It will be paid for by the American people.

To date, according to the Lend-Lease Administrator, we have contributed to foreign governments $9,000,000,000 in weapons, supplies, and food. To date they have contributed to our armed forces located on their own soil a considerable amount of goods in return. However, the balance of war trade seems heavily in favor of the United States.

Already there has been appropriated by the United States Congress, directly and indirectly, for lend-lease, $63,000,000,000. It is assumed that in the ensuing months this sum will be used to continue the so-called lend-lease aid to our allies. We have not the money to do this. We are borrowing it. It will be a part of our national debt. It must be discharged by the present and future generations through the medium of very hard and burdensome taxation.

In view of our large contribution directly in fighting men to the battle fronts, and of supplies through the medium of lend-lease, for the Congress of the United States the question poses itself: Without serious hurt to themselves, what can any of the recipient foreign nations now give to the United States of America which will increase our security to the extent to which we have afforded increased security to foreign nations solely through the medium of lend-lease, both before and since our entry into the war?

Let me say that I fully understand and appreciate that lend-lease was not conceived and cannot be administered in any purely nationalistic, narrow, or selfish way.

The United States Government and its people are assuming the debt which lend-lease entails, and are making the sacrifices which lend-lease imposes in order to send supplies of all kinds to various foreign countries, both now and before our entry into the war. This is in the belief that it is being done in such manner as will aid in the defeat of the Axis countries and, wherever possible, evoke consideration of our problems where our allies have opportunity to reciprocate by aiding us in obtaining all the security we can.

I understand that food sent under lend-lease to Britain is sold by the British Government to the people of Britain through the retail outlets of Great Britain. We are told that this method is used, because it is the fairest, most labor-saving, and expeditious way the food can be gotten to the British people. The money so derived is kept in the British Treasury. So, insofar as articles are sold in Britain which we have sent to that country, they serve a double purpose. First, they supply the British people, as in the case of food, with what they must have in order to live, work, and fight; and, second, the money derived from the sale of articles which we have sent to Britain goes into the British Treasury and thus adds to the financial stability of Great Britain. To the extent that money is derived from the sale of the goods we send to Britain, it is just that much taxation which the British people would otherwise have to pay in order to sustain their Government. It is the same as if we sent an equal sum of money or credit to the British Government.

I realize that, regardless of the banking mechanics, there is in the lay mind a wide difference between giving and distributing such things as food to our allies, and permitting our allies, for example, to sell the food to their subjects and retain the money from such sales in their national treasuries. So far as payment to us is concerned, we are no worse off, whether they give the food away or sell it. The British are not paying us for it anyway, whether it is given away to their people or sold by them to their subjects.

But, in effect, the result is the same as if we were to take billions of dollars of United States credit or money and ship it over for use to these foreign countries. As I say, money and goods are synonymous.

Thus, to the extent that the money has gone already from us directly or indirectly into the treasury of any foreign nation, and knowing that many more billions will follow from us before the war is over, is it not pertinent in behalf of and in fairness to our own people, particularly since lend-lease was in effect before we got into the war, to ascertain what they can give us, particularly in exchange, for this money by way of present and future security for the United States of America?

We have built, at our own expense, on land that has been only leased, many bases on foreign soil in the Western Hemisphere. I understand that these bases of ours are built on a 99-year basis and that we have the right to land military and naval planes only at such places. Civilian planes are excluded by the condition of the arrangement.

Considering the extremely heavy balance of war trade in our favor under lend-lease, and considering that we shall in the air, on the sea, and on the land, make equal sacrifices in blood with our allies before the war is over and considering that these islands upon which we have built our bases have little economic and productive value, it appears that the present arrangement is not as fair to the United States as it should be.

Bases on these islands near the United States have no value, from a military standpoint, except as an offense against or a defense of the United States. Bases on these islands are vital to our security right now, and will be more so in the future. In view of all the lend-lease transactions, much of which transpired before we became a formal belligerent ourselves, it is astounding to me that our Government has not long since asked for the trade of these actual bases to us—not the whole islands, but the bases themselves—in fee simple, as being but a token of appreciation for what we have done and are yet to do besides fighting for these foreign countries under the lend-lease arrangement.

Lest I be misunderstood, let me say that it is not my wish to hold the pistol at the heart of any of our allies in their hour of need and compel them to cede lands or give willy-nilly to the United States. However, I think everyone will agree with what Mr. Churchill has so magnificently stated, when he said that lend-lease was the most generous act ever performed by any government in the world's history. I take that remark of Mr. Churchill's at face value. I believe he is a great and sincere man. I am sure that his appreciation, comprehension, and understanding of lend-lease in all its ramifications is deep and wide and genuine. His elegant testimony supports my point of view. It causes me to say that, considering our efforts to bring aid, encouragement, and security to the British Empire, both before and after we got into the war, if the subject of the bases were properly presented to him and the British people, we should have the support of this outstanding statesman and of the British people as well in acquiring for our country and its people the counteraid and the countersecurity which Britain could give us at little or no cost to themselves, and which would make us in the future the strong nation defensively that we may need to be.

Keep in mind, Mr. President, that from Central and South America our supplies of oil, rubber, coffee, and other goods have come in large measure. It is apparent that from air bases located in the West Indies hostile planes could challenge the transportation of these needed supplies to the United States and its people. We know that all too bitterly right now, for this Nation has been subject to the rationing of oil, coffee, rubber, and other things because commerce in such articles has been interrupted by enemy submarines operating in this very West Indian or Caribbean territory.

Think how it could be interrupted from the West Indies in the future by quantities of long-range airplanes which by then will be in the full flower of their existence.

In order to present a comparable problem to the people of Britain and to Mr. Churchill, let us take the case of the Shetland Islands, which lie north of the British Isles. They are British; they are essential to Britain's defense. But if they were owned by some other country, they could have no real value except for offense against Britain. If we owned those islands away over there, essential as they are, and close to the British Empire, I should think that if lend-lease, as it is now being promulgated, were in reverse, they would have an extremely good case to ask us to put the British Isles in the state of defense which the circumstances would abundantly warrant.

Some may say let such questions wait until after the war. To do that would, in my opinion, be to commit a serious mistake, a fatal error. There will be enough post-war problems and enough post-war bickering without the inclusion of this matter, which, so far as nearby foreign-owned bases are concerned, would put us in the role of Uncle Shylock at the peace table if the matter should be postponed. Besides, all we are asking for is in value but a friendly gesture, which would not affect Britain's security per se, but which would greatly affect our own.

Mr. President, these remarks are not made for the purpose of attacking lend-lease. They are made with a full consciousness of the mutuality of our total war effort. I hope they are made, as they are intended to be, without unfairness to any of our allies and without any smallness of conception of the war as it applies to everyone concerned on our side.

I feel very strongly that we are not looking after our own country's security quite as well and as anxiously as all the ramifications which enter into this whole matter deserve under lend-lease. The 99-year arrangement, considering that lend-lease was in the picture before we entered the war, is, even though unintentionally so, a very poor return for the unprecedented assistance which America gave when she reached out across the sea to Britain at the very moment when she stood alone, and without which there might not have been a Britain. Of course, lend-lease was not altogether altruistic. It was selfish on our part to a considerable extent; but interwoven into whatever selfishness there might have been was altruism—our unstinted admiration for the people of a great nation, under a God-sent leader, who were standing there and battling the greatest military machine in the history of the world. No; there was more than money, more than supplies, more than food, more than selfishness, more than fear behind our lend-lease legislation. There was, I know, in no inconsiderable degree, the warp of altruism and true generosity woven into the woof of self-interest.

Our President and people and Mr. Churchill and the British people were not unmindful of the extreme importance to us from a defensive standpoint of these otherwise valueless island bases. The very fact that the British leased them to us for 99 years shows they recognized our great need for them whenever we might be attacked.

Perhaps in the circumstances, as the destroyer-bases transaction was made quickly, it could not have been otherwise at that time than an undertaking merely to let us lease those bases upon which so many millions of dollars have now been spent. But now, in view of all the circumstances, it would seem to me that the President and the State Department might properly suggest that our tenure be made permanent on those portions of the islands where bases have been built or have been started. I am unwilling to believe that overtures made by our Government to Britain would not receive over there the generous and fair consideration which all the myriad of circumstances seem to warrant.

At the same time, in the interest of international good will, it might be well to straighten out the title to some islands in the Pacific which bear some dual relationship to those of the Atlantic, where the titles are in dispute. Some of those islands are claimed by several countries besides our own, even though in many cases discovery of them was made by our citizens in our ships long before they were discovered by representatives of any other country in the world. But notwithstanding this historical fact, other countries have seized them and have held ostensible title to them.

I have had this matter up at some length with the Lend-Lease Administrator. He properly points out that the scope of the permanent acquisition of the bases is not within the scope of his activities. I am, therefore, giving voice to this matter on the floor in the hope that the British people will see that these bases in the West Indies, if not defended adequately by us, could be just as much a threat to our security and to our lines of communication as the Axis forces have been a threat to Britain during the whole length of this war. I feel that the British people, knowing the islands have no economic value of any consequence, will say that all the United States has asked for is the right to have such defense and such security for ourselves as our Government has given to them through lend-lease and other policies, both before as well as after we got into the World War. If these bases are turned over to us, it would be a generous act by the British people. And, looking down the corridor of time, who knows, it might bear rich and blessed dividends both for them and ourselves far beyond the comprehension of any person now living.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does not the Senator think that it would also be wise at this time, while Russia is our ally, to negotiate with the Russian Government for the acquisition of Wrangell Island, which is located in the far north, in the Arctic Ocean, particularly in view of the fact that there is now a disagreement between the Russian Government and the American Government as to the rightful ownership of that property? In directing the question to the Senator, I might remind him that Wrangell is practically the size of Jamaica, which is an island of considerable proportions. By the way, in that connection, as the Senator knows, we have spent millions of dollars in developing bases about 5 or 10 miles from Kingston, the capital of Jamaica.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I, therefore, inquire does not the Senator think that, while we are considering national defense for the Western Hemisphere, and particularly our portion thereof, it would be well for us now, since, as the Senator has said, Russia is participating in the lend-lease arrangement that we have with our other allies, to negotiate with the Russian Government for the rightful acquisition of that property by way of personally ascertaining from the Russian Government what her attitude is toward relinquishing any claim she may have to an island that should belong to us and was discovered by us?

Mr. TYDINGS. In answer to the Senator's question, I should like, first, to say, broadly that I do not believe the United States should ask for the land of any other government, to be used for military or naval purposes, if such acquisition would affect the defensive military ability of the government claiming title to the land in question. In other words, I should not ask that they give us any of their property without consideration of their problem; but wherever the consideration of their problem in its broader aspects is not hurt and our position is strengthened, and since we are dealing with lease-lend under which we may do as much for them as they for us, those matters ought to be considered.

In particular reference to Wrangell Island, if we have by discovery the right of title to it, that circumstance ought to be presented to the Russian Government and they should be asked their reasons for claiming title, and if no good reasons are offered, it seems obvious that an agreement should be reached, in that case, that we might own the island. If, however, the evidence shows that Russia has a title to Wrangell Island, let me say then that I would not want to dwell on that particular subject except in a general way, and that we have no right to ask any of our allies to cede to us land which might weaken their military security at home, because that would be the principal purpose for which we ask for the acquisition of land, namely, to strengthen our military security at home not for offensive but for defensive purposes.

In further answer to the Senator's question, let me say that I do not want to harm any of our allies, I do not want to grab land from any of them; but we already know in this war the tragedy of the Caribbean. It has been a graveyard for ships flying our own flag; it has been the cause of depriving our soldiers and sailors of supplies and munitions and weapons which they otherwise would have had. Yet we had to go to a foreign government in our own back yard and obtain the right to put bases on those islands, in the hope that we could cut down the losses in this vital American lifeline.

The islands are not worth 5 cents from a productive standpoint. The Senator and I have both been over a great many of them, as I happen to know, and they are not islands that contribute great riches to the Britsih Government, nor would they contribute much to us.

I am not asking that all the islands be ceded to us; I am asking only that we may have sufficient bases in our own right on the tip ends here and there of certain strategic islands as will permit the United States to defend itself. I am only suggesting, since our problem is right here at home, that they do for us without hurt to themselves what I believe we have very generously tried to do for them with their problem at home. In other words, I would make secure a two-way street insofar as it affected per se the nations involved.

I hope I have answered the Senator's question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for another question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In view of the fact that we are now cooperating with the Netherlands, the Dutch Government, does not the Senator think it might be well for us to suggest to the Netherlands that that Government consider according us the privilege of constructing bases upon islands of theirs which are in the Caribbean and occupy points equally as important as Bimini, Nassau, Jamaica, and innumerable other islands in the Caribbean. I have in mind for instance Aruba.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is one thing the Senator's question, so far as it is concerned, does not give me a chance to answer, so I am going to suggest to him this problem: These islands are not only essential to our security, but they are essential to the military security of the countries of South America. Obviously, if we were to obtain them, those countries might feel that, to some extent, we had put them in a position where we could coerce them. However, it is well known that, as things generally stand, they would not in most cases be able to build the kind of bases and support the kind of force that is essential in these areas.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall yield when I finish the answer.

Therefore, I do not think that the question ought to be approached from any narrow basis. The reason I have dwelt on the present 99-year leases is that we are already there; we have already built bases; we have spent millions of dollars on a great many of them. Some of them, perhaps, may not be completed, but others, no doubt, are completed. That, however, is an entirely different situation than if we should undertake to ask for something else. We already stand there in good title as lessee rather than fee simple owner. Therefore I would prefer, at this particular time, to confine the scope of my remarks to the question which seems to me to be so crystal clear, that we are not selfish or small or mean in calling attention to the respective situations of the two peoples.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. REYNOLDS addressed the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall yield, but I want to say that I hope Senators will not ask me many more questions, although I should be delighted to answer them. The Senator from Texas was very courteous this morning in trying to adjust the situation, and I do not want to take advantage of his generosity.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely desire to ask one question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I, too, have but one question to ask.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. I yield, then, to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask, does not the Senator think that we ought to continue on the best of terms with our allies and not raise any questions at all that might bring about controversies between us and our allies until after we win the victory? Let us win the victory first. I see great merit in what the Senator says, but let us win the victory without any controversy between us and our allies, and, after we win the victory, we certainly will have the power at the peace table to make a proper peace.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is a great deal to be said for the viewpoint expressed by the Senator from Tennessee. I, myself, have given that matter some consideration, as my remarks indicate. However, I happen to be slightly acquainted with the post-war period which followed World War No. 1, and it so happens that at the peace table there quite often is not the same desire to give and take and to share in a rather equitable way the burdens of the world as there is when the war is going on. If we were not engaged in the lease-lend program before we got into the war as well as now, that might be a proper question, but we owe an obligation to the people of this country who will be called upon to pay back $63,000,000,000, a sum of money equal to $2,000 a family, rich and poor, black and white, high and low, in addition to all the other burdens they are called upon to bear.

In view of that circumstance, coupled with the fact that our boys will spill their blood on the various oceans and battlefields before the war is concluded, I feel that as to any of these countries, while all this money and all these goods and supplies are going forward, we should at least ask for the right to have now the security for our own people which we have given to our allies, not only since we got into the war, but when we were supposedly and formally a neutral Nation.

It is in no mean and small sense, as I stated, that I approach this question. Everyone who has visted these islands knows they have very little commercial value, and such portions as we might acquire would not deprive Britain of 1 penny of income she might derive from them. I am asking for that degree of security for my country which my country has already given abundantly to the countries concerned, not that we shall take advantage of them, but that we may provide for our security now, and make lend-lease a two-way security proposition now, because I am distrustful, to a mild extent, about the fulfillment of many important possibilities in the post-war period.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether my information is correct, that when the President of the United States undertook to trade and did trade 50 of our destroyers to Great Britain for certain privileges, those privileges embodied only our right to acquire property in the islands concerned for the purpose of building air fields.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the planes of Great Britain have the right, under the treaty, to use our bases; and I am not complaining of that.

Mr. REYNOLDS. After we secured the right to acquire land, the American Government, in addition to the 50 destroyers, bought the land itself upon which the air fields are constructed, as I understand. Is that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. We bought it from the private owners who had title to it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Now the Senator seeks for our Government the privilege——

Mr. TYDINGS. Of transferring sovereignty.

Mr. REYNOLDS. He seeks to give us the privilege of buying the property in fee simple?

Mr. TYDINGS. Only of the bases, not the islands, and not the people.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not the islands, because they are an economic liability.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to make a very brief observation. I share the views just expressed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am delighted to know that.

Mr. McNARY. I think now is the accepted time to act. However, I wish to make an inquiry. I was interested in the Senator's statement that we had a leasehold estate for 99 years in portions of the islands, but that we could not use our holdings for civilian purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have heard—and I really want to check the statement—that there is a provision in the treaty whereby the leases can be canceled after reasonable notice.

Mr. TYDINGS. My information is not definite and may not be accurate, but my understanding is that that provision does not extend so far as to give Britain the right to cancel. However, I am not well informed on that phase of the matter.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I for one am very happy to have had the opportunity of listening to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. It has been my pleasure to listen to him on many occasions, and I always find him extremely interesting, and he always provides us with something worth while. I agree with the Senator that unquestionably now is the accepted time and the proper time for us to enter into negotiations with the British Government with a view to acquiring fee-simple title to the properties which the Senator described in his address to the Senate a few moments ago.

I assume that when the Senator mentioned bases in the Caribbean in the form of island bases he likewise had in mind bases which are located on the continent of South America, on properties which belong to our brothers across the seas. I take advantage of the opportunity to make a few observations at this time in order that I may obtain for myself some credit which I think is due me.

A number of years ago I suggested that we acquire properties of the British, the Dutch, and the French in South America, in the Caribbean, and in the North Atlantic. I made those suggestions many years ago because I knew, as we all knew, that the time would come when we would become involved in another World War. I, for one, was interested first in the preservation of the United States of America. Perhaps unfortunately I love my country—perhaps unfortunately I love the United States—better than I love any other country in the world. As a result of my devotion to my country in preference to any other country upon the face of the earth, I felt that it was my duty, as I felt it was the duty of the American people, to look after the interests of the United States before looking after the interests of any other country in the world. I apologize to no one, here or elsewhere, for being more thoroughly interested in the preservation of America than I am interested in the preservation of any other country in the world.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALLGREN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I should prefer to yield later.

As a result of my preferring my country over any other, years ago I suggested on the floor of the Senate that we should interest ourselves in acquiring bases and points of advantage in the ocean and elsewhere for the protection of the northern portion of the Western Hemisphere, known as the United States of America.

Having made those suggestions many years ago, I followed them up from year to year, until in 1940 I introduced two joint resolutions in the Senate authorizing the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with Great Britain and with France for the acquisition of island bases in the Caribbean, for the acquisition of bases on the Continent of South America, and for the acquisition of bases in the northern Atlantic.

I ask that at this point there be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the joint resolutions which I introduced 3 years ago.

There being no objection, the joint resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 221

Joint resolution for the acquisition of British islands in the Caribbean and British Honduras

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations in such manner as he may deem appropriate with the Government of Great Britain for the acquisition by the United States of the islands of the Bermudas; the Bahamas—Jamaica with the Turks, Caicos, and Cayman Islands; Trinidad and Tobago; Barbados; the Leeward Islands—Antigua, St. Kitts, Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat, and Virgin Islands; the Windward Islands—Grenada, The Grenadines, St. Lucia, St. Vincent; together with British Honduras, in part payment for the indebtedness of such Government to the United States.

Senate Joint Resolution 247

Joint resolution for the acquisition of French islands in the Caribbean and the North Atlantic Ocean

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations in such manner as he may deem appropriate with the Republic of France for the acquisition by the United States of the islands of Martinique, Guadeloupe, St. Pierre, and Miquelon, in part payment for the indebtedness of such Government to the United States.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I had in mind at that time that we could best provide for the protection of this country by establishing military fortifications, and by establishing air bases in Dutch Guiana, in French Guiana, and in British Guiana, located on the eastern side of the continent of South America.

I had in mind likewise the establishment of bases in Central America, in British Honduras, near the capital, which is Belize. In addition to that I had in mind the establishment of bases, as has later been done, in the Caribbean, at Jamaica, near Kingston, its capital; in Bermuda, near Hamilton, its capital; and at Nassau and Bimini, just off the coast of Florida, so ably represented by the distinguished junior Senator from Florida, who a moment ago asked me to yield, which I shall be glad to do in a few moments.

Then, Mr. President, proceeding northward, it was my intention at the time of the introduction of those joint resolutions to enter into negotiations with the French Government for the acquisition of bases on the islands of Miquelon and St. Pierre, which are off the North Atlantic coast, not far from a most important air base and shipping base for overseas cargoes on Newfoundland.

Mr. President, I say that now is the time for conferring with our friends across the seas, now is the time for conferring with the British Government and with the Dutch Government, for the permanent acquisition in fee simple, as suggested by the able Senator from Maryland, of these posts, these airfields, so that we may be the outright possessor of those properties, for the protection of the American Continent and for the protection of our brothers to the south of us in Central and South America.

Mr. President, I should like also to take advantage of the opportunity to say that at the time I made those suggestions a great many persons criticized me and others for even suggesting that we should like to have these properties for the benefit and protection and defense of our own country.

I recall, in connection with national defense, which was a subject of grave importance to us prior to the time we became involved in this the Second World War, that, being interested in the defense of my country, I visited Labrador and Newfoundland, and I felt then, as I feel now, that in order to provide the proper protection for the Atlantic seaboard, especially in the North Atlantic, we should certainly make some sort of an arrangement with our brothers across the sea, in addition, for the acquisition of Miquelon and St. Pierre, and perhaps make an arrangement whereby we might have an air base or a sea landing off the coast of Labrador.

Mr. President, in 1938, realizing and recognizing as I did that perhaps sometime in the future we would become involved in another world war, realizing as I did that the day might come when we would be engaged in war with Japan, I visited Alaska, that vast territory which we purchased from Russia for a few million dollars in 1867. I visited that territory all the way from the Arctic southward and through the Aleutian Islands group. When I returned to Washington I spoke on the floor of the Senate advocating and urging that we give immediate attention to the fortification of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands. There in the north was a vast territory. There was a part and portion of the United States of America in the form of a territory which was subject to attack and invasion, as has been evidenced by the fact that the Japanese have made landings and established positions in the Aleutian Islands.

After returning to Washington I received the cooperation of a then United States Senator, Mr. Schwellenbach, now on the Federal bench, who was then representing the State of Washington. He and I endeavored then in this body to warn the American people, and impress upon them that Alaska and the Aleutian Islands should be fortified. Unfortunately, no heed was paid to what we had to say about the matter, and I now say that if our advice had been followed at that time, the Japanese would not be entrenched in the Aleutian Islands and particularly on the Island of Attu.

Mr. President, many people believe with me that in order to defeat Japan we must forego the idea of taking island by island, which no doubt would consume a number of years, and which no doubt would call for the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of American sons of American mothers. I for one am of the opinion that the quickest way and the best way to bring about the defeat of Japan is to bomb heavily her islands, whereon we find established the great commercial centers and the munitions and industrial plants. If today we had Attu in our possession, I feel confident that instead of bombing only Tokyo, as was done by the gallant General Doolittle, the time would not be far distant when, under the direction of our able military leaders, we would be in position to send hundreds of planes over Tokyo, Yokohama, and Kobe, and a great many other industrial centers of Japan.

Mr. President, in considering the building of a band of steel around the continental United States for the protection of our own mainland, for the protection of its 130,000,000 people, even years ago I suggested—at the same time that I made these other suggestions—that we enter into negotiations with our friendly neighbor to the south, Mexico, for the acquisition of the peninsula belonging to Mexico known as Lower California, recognizing then, several years ago, as I do now, that if we ever became involved with any nation to the west of us, that nation, no doubt, would endeavor to make use of a portion of the peninsula of Lower California, which belongs to Mexico, to establish air bases, or to conceal some of its undersea craft, or perhaps some of its other vessels in the vast expanse of water which is found between the Peninsula of Lower California and Mexico.

At the same time, proceeding further, I felt that we should acquire Cocos Island off the coast of Costa Rica, and, going southward, that we should make arrangements with another government in South America for the acquisition of the Galapagos Islands off the coast of Ecuador. I feel that if we had then carried out the suggestions which I made there would not be today the fear which some Americans entertain of an invasion from Asia or from Europe.

Mr. President, we have time to make our preparations for the construction of this band of steel around continental United States for the protection of the American people. I am more thoroughly interested in the United States of America than I am in any other country in the world, but at the same time, in providing for the protection of the United States of America by constructing a band of steel around this portion of the North American Continent, I feel that we would likewise be providing protection for our friendly neighbors to the north—the Canadians; protection to our neighbors just across the Rio Grande—the Mexicans; protection for every country in Central America, and certainly the Panama Canal Zone, and the countries on the coasts of South America, particularly Colombia and Venezuela.

Mr. President, I think that now is the time for us to enter into negotiations with our friendly allies for the acquisition of the title to this property in fee simple.

I wish to refer to one other matter, in conclusion.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall conclude in a moment. Does the Senator wish to ask me a question?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator has made a remark in his speech with reference to the acquisition of these areas on behalf of our country. How long does the Senator think it would take this country and England and other countries vitally interested in these areas to sit down at this particular time and finally arrive at some satisfactory conclusion?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, 2 or 3 days.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is more of an optimist than I thought he was.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very optimistic about that, because I believe that our brothers across the seas, our allies, are deeply appreciative of all the aid we have given them. I know Mr. Churchill is a man of broad vision. I heard the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] say that Mr. Churchill has stated in Parliament, or somewhere else, that he was deeply grateful for the billions of dollars which we had given the Allies; and having met Mr. Churchill here and found him to be a man of great vision, and a fine personality, who appears to me to be deeply appreciative of all we are doing, I am confident that he would not have to sleep over this matter. A man of his big heart and big soul would say "Yes. The United States of America came to our aid when we needed it. You did and are doing everything in the world you possibly can for us. Why should I sleep over this matter? Certainly we will let you have it." I do not think it would take over a day or two to come to agreement.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if the Senator does not feel some concern as to what might be the impression made upon our allies when, according to the press of our country, yesterday a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives made a speech which emphasized that America must begin now to protect herself against her allies, Britain and Russia, and suggested in a most ambitious way that we should immediately safeguard ourselves against any competition we might experience from them or any jeopardy that they might cause to us in the future, and when the newspapers of tomorrow will say that the Senate devoted a considerable part of its session today to a discussion of our acquiring in fee simple some territory which is now territory of the British Empire.

In other words, in spite of the worth and the merits of everything the able Senators have said, I wonder if there are not many more questions that we will, in the final analysis of this problem, have to bring up to our allies and our friends. Perhaps there are some counter proposals they may wish to make to us. I wonder if this is not a matter of such magnitude that probably it will have to be the subject of a sort of world-wide conference anyway, as a part of the readjustment of a broken world, and whether we might not perhaps run the risk of getting into a row among ourselves before we get the enemy whipped, if we go into too much detail about the adjustment of territorial questions while we are engaged in a very serious war which is far from being concluded, as no one knows better than the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to say that I do not apologize to anyone for speaking of what I believe to be in the interest of my country. I believe we have arrived at the time when we who are interested in our country should speak out in behalf of it. If I am to be criticized here or anywhere else at any time for speaking in what I believe to be the interest of the people of America and the defense of our continent, I can "take it." I see no reason why at this time, as suggested by the able Senator from Maryland, we should not mention something which we believe to be in the interest of national defense.

I stated a moment ago that I, among others, had had the great honor and privilege of meeting Hon. Winston Churchill here. I repeat that, in my opinion, if I am any judge of human nature, Mr. Churchill would not have to sleep over the suggestion made by the able Senator from Maryland because that great statesman has said that he is grateful for and appreciative of everything we are doing for his country.

In order that my remarks may not be misconstrued, now or at any other time, let me say that I think that Winston Churchill is one of the greatest men the world has ever known. I know of no man upon the face of the earth for whom I have more profound respect, or greater admiration, than I have for Winston Churchill. He has proved to be a great source of inspiration to every living person upon the face of the earth. Why? Because Winston Churchill—God bless his soul—loves his country better than he loves any other country in the world. For that reason I respect and admire him. For millions of Americans he likewise has been a source of inspiration because he is a great patriot. He will go down in history as one of the greatest men the world has ever known.

Mr. President, I desire to say something further. A moment ago I directed an inquiry in regard to Wrangell Island. Many persons have never heard of Wrangell Island. It is located in the far North. It is about the size of the island of Jamaica. If one were flying from the metropolis of New York directly to Manila, the capital of the Philippines, he would fly over Wrangell Island. We all recognize that the day will come when aviation will take its rightful place in the transportation of the world.

Wrangell Island was discovered by an American. The first flag was planted there about 1850. The United States claims that it owns Wrangell Island by right of discovery. Some day it will be a most important point so far as the interest of the United States is concerned.

Once upon a time there was an American there with about 10 Eskimos. They lived and disappeared. None of them was ever heard from, according to my recollection of the history pertaining to this important point. Later our friends, the Russians, sent some of their citizens to Wrangell Island. It is my understanding that they have a few men there now. I believe that at the present time we should enter into negotiations with our friends, the Russians, with a view of ascertaining who really is the rightful owner of that property. I should hope that such negotiations would develop the fact that the property belongs to us, and that the Russians would be perfectly willing to turn it over to us.

In pursuance of that understanding, I introduced a resolution about 3 years ago, and an identical one approximately 2 years ago, authorizing the State Department to enter into negotiations with the Russian Government with the view of ascertaining who is the rightful owner of that property.

I ask unanimous consent that the resolution to which I refer be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is requested to make a report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date with respect to whether or not the United States has a valid claim to sovereignty over Wrangell Island.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In discussing Wrangell Island the Senator is discussing a very important question, of course, and he is vitally interested in it because, in addition to what the Senator from Maryland has said, he wants this country to negotiate with Russia with respect to Wrangell Island. The Senator is now discussing something which is very important, because it goes back to the question which I asked a moment ago as to how long the Senator thought it would take us to negotiate all these important problems. Once the problems of the Atlantic are brought in we immediately bring in the problems of the Pacific, and we immediately bring in the problem which the Senator is discussing, which is Wrangell Island in the north.

How long does the able Senator from North Carolina think we should be here discussing all those questions? If we take up the problems concerning one island it will be necessary to take up the problems concerning other islands of the Pacific, including Wrangell Island and all the other islands which the Senator thinks ought to belong to us from the standpoint of national defense. It seems to me that it would be utterly futile and useless for this country to start negotiating at this moment for islands which we think we ought to have as a defense to this country in the future, especially in view of the fact that we are now in the midst of a great war, at a time when all our efforts should be directed toward winning the war. It seems to me that we are at the crossroads. Such a proposal would take the time of the Senate, the State Department, the President of the United States, Winston Churchill, and the Government of Great Britain. In addition, the countries of South America are all interested in this problem. It would be necessary to have some sort of a conference if the work were to be done properly, and then it would be necessary to bring the matter before the Senate where it would be debated and discussed. It seems to me that the proposal is ill-timed. It would be impossible to accomplish at this time what should be accomplished.

As the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] said to the Senator from Maryland, what we want to do is to put all our efforts into winning the war, allowing these other problems to come up later.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And win the peace.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. Mr. President, if America is as tough as I think she will be in the coming peace, we will take care of that problem in no uncertain terms when the time comes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois and I are in thorough accord. He says that we ought to give all our time now to winning the war and winning the peace.

Mr. President, half the articles we read in the newspapers of today concern the kind of peace which we are to have after the war. That is a matter to which we should give consideration. If we interest ourselves now in winning the peace after the war why should we not at the same time interest ourselves in the defense of our country after the war? Now is the time to consider the defense of America.

I know of no subject of greater interest to the American people than the subject of providing the proper defenses for the United States immediately after the war has been concluded, and now is the time to consider the defense of the United States so that we shall have no fear of an invasion after the war.

We are concerned now with winning the war and winning the peace. So far as winning the peace is concerned, we here in America can best assure ourselves of peace by providing ourselves with strong defense outposts—a band of steel—such as I have previously suggested over the years and today.

So, as suggested by the Senator from Maryland, let us get those bases now, because if we do not get them now, we never will get them.

Every other nation on earth is looking after its interests, so why should we not now, at this late date, look after the interests and the defense of our country?

RELINQUISHMENT OF EXTRATERRITORIAL RIGHTS IN CHINA

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty, Executive A, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, which was recently made with China.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, Executive A (78th Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of China for the relinquishment of extraterritorial rights in China and the regulation of related matters signed at Washington on January 11, 1943, and a supplementary exchange of notes also concerning matters related to extraterritorial rights which was signed at the same time and which is made an integral part of the treaty, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA FOR THE RELINQUISHMENT OF EXTRATERRITORIAL RIGHTS IN CHINA AND THE REGULATION OF RELATED MATTERS

The United States of America and the Republic of China, desirous of emphasizing the friendly relations which have long prevailed between their two peoples and of manifesting their common desire as equal and sovereign States that the high principles in the regulation of human affairs to which they are committed shall be made broadly effective, have resolved to conclude a treaty for the purpose of adjusting certain matters in the relations of the two countries, and have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America,

Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and

The President of the National Government of the Republic of China,

Dr. Wei Tao-ming, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the Republic of China to the United States of America;

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

All those provisions of treaties or agreements in force between the United States of America and the Republic of China which authorize the Government of the United States of America or its representatives to exercise jurisdiction over nationals of the United States of America in the territory of the Republic of China are hereby abrogated. Nationals of the United States of America in such territory shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Government of the Republic of China in accordance with the principles of international law and practice.

ARTICLE II

The Government of the United States of America considers that the Final Protocol concluded at Peking on September 7, 1901, between the Chinese Government and other governments, including the Government of the United States of America, should be terminated and agrees that the rights accorded to the Government of the United States of America under that Protocol and under agreements supplementary thereto shall cease.

The Government of the United States of America will cooperate with the Government of the Republic of China for the reaching of any necessary agreements with other governments concerned for the transfer to the Government of the Republic of China of the administration and control of the Diplomatic Quarter at Peiping, including the official assets and the official obligations of the Diplomatic Quarter, it being mutually understood that the Government of the Republic of China in taking over administration and control of the Diplomatic Quarter will make provision for the assumption and discharge of the official obligations and liabilities of the Diplomatic Quarter and for the recognition and protection of all legitimate rights therein.

The Government of the Republic of China hereby accord to the Government of the United States of America a continued right to use for official purposes the land which has been allocated to the Government of the United States of America in the Diplomatic Quarter in Peiping, on parts of which are located buildings belonging to the Government of the United States of America.

ARTICLE III

The Government of the United States of America considers that the international settlements at Shanghai and Amoy should revert to the administration and control of the Government of the Republic of China and agrees that the rights accorded to the Government of the United States of America in relation to those settlements shall cease.

The Government of the United States of America will cooperate with the Government of the Republic of China for the reaching of any necessary agreements with other governments concerned for the transfer to the Government of the Republic of China of the administration and control of the international settlements at Shanghai and Amoy, including the official assets and the official obligations of those settlements, it being mutually understood that the Government of the Republic of China in taking over administration and control of those Settlements will make provision for the assumption and discharge of the official obligations and liabilities of those Settlements and for the recognition and protection of all legitimate rights therein.

ARTICLE IV

In order to obviate any questions as to existing rights in respect of or as to existing titles to real property in territory of the Republic of China possessed by nationals (including corporations or associations), or by the Government, of the United States of America, particularly questions which might arise from the abrogation of the provisions of treaties or agreements as stipulated in Article I, it is agreed that such existing rights or titles shall be indefeasible and shall not be questioned upon any ground except upon proof, established through due process of law, of fraud or of fraudulent or other dishonest practices in the acquisition of such rights or titles, it being understood that no right or title shall be rendered invalid by virtue of any subsequent change in the official procedure through which it was acquired. It is also agreed that these rights or titles shall be subject to the laws and regulations of the Republic of China concerning taxation, national defense, and the right of eminent domain, and that no such rights or titles may be alienated to the government or nationals (including corporations or associations) of any third country without the express consent of the Government of the Republic of China.

It is also agreed that if it should be the desire of the Government of the Republic of China to replace, by new deeds of ownership, existing leases in perpetuity or other documentary evidence relating to real property held by nationals, or by the Government, of the United States of America, the replacement shall be made by the Chinese authorities without charges of any sort and the new deeds of ownership shall fully protect the holders of such leases or other documentary evidence and their legal heirs and assigns without diminution of their prior rights and interests, including the right of alienation.

It is further agreed that nationals or the Government of the United States of America shall not be required or asked by the Chinese authorities to make any payments of fees in connection with land transfers for or with relation to any period prior to the effective date of this treaty.

ARTICLE V

The Government of the United States of America having long accorded rights to nationals of the Republic of China within the territory of the United States of America to travel, reside, and carry on trade throughout the whole extent of that territory, the Government of the Republic of China agrees to accord similar rights to nationals of the United States of America within the territory of the Republic of China. Each of the two Governments will endeavor to have accorded in territory under its jurisdiction to nationals of the other country, in regard to all legal proceedings, and to matters relating to the administration of justice, and to the levying of taxes or requirements in connection therewith, treatment not less favorable than that accorded to its own nationals.

ARTICLE VI

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of China mutually agree that the consular officers of each country, duly provided with exequaturs, shall be permitted to reside in such ports, places and cities as may be agreed upon. The consular officers of each country shall have the right to interview, to communicate with, and to advise nationals of their country within their consular districts; they shall be informed immediately whenever nationals of their country are under detention or arrest or in prison or are awaiting trial in their consular districts and they shall, upon notification to the appropriate authorities, be permitted to visit any such nationals; and, in general, the consular officers of each country shall be accorded the rights, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by consular officers under modern international usage.

It is likewise agreed that the nationals of each country, in the territory of the other country, shall have the right at all times to communicate with the consular officers of their country. Communications to their consular officers from nationals of each country who are under detention or arrest or in prison or are awaiting trial in the territory of the other country shall be forwarded to such consular officers by the local authorities.

ARTICLE VII

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of China mutually agree that they will enter into negotiations for the conclusion of a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce, navigation and consular rights, upon the request of either Government or in any case within six months after the cessation of the hostilities in the war against the common enemies in which they are now engaged. The treaty to be thus negotiated will be based upon the principles of international law and practice as reflected in modern international procedures and in the modern treaties which the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of China respectively have in recent years concluded with other governments.

Pending the conclusion of a comprehensive treaty of the character referred to in the preceding paragraph, if any questions affecting the rights in territory of the Republic of China of nationals (including corporations or associations), or of the Government of the United States of America should arise in future and if these questions are not covered by the present treaty, or by the provisions of existing treaties, conventions, or agreements between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of China not abrogated by or inconsistent with this treaty, such questions shall be discussed by representatives of the two Governments and shall be decided in accordance with generally accepted principles of international law and with modern international practice.

ARTICLE VIII

The present treaty shall come into force on the day of the exchange of ratifications.

The present treaty shall be ratified, and the ratification shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

Signed and sealed in the English and Chinese languages, both equally authentic, in duplicate, at Washington, this eleventh day of January, one thousand nine hundred forty-three, corresponding to the eleventh day of the first month of the thirty-second year of the Republic of China.

[SUPPLEMENTARY EXCHANGE OF NOTES]

CHINESE EMBASSY,
Washington, January 11, 1943.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.

EXCELLENCY: Under instruction of my Government, I have the honor to state that in connection with the treaty signed today by the Government of the Republic of China and the Government of the United States of America, in which the Government of the United States of America relinquishes its extraterritorial and related special rights in China, it is the understanding of the Government of the Republic of China that the rights of the Government of the United States of America and of its nationals in regard to the systems of treaty ports and of special courts in the International Settlements at Shanghai and Amoy and in regard to the employment of foreign pilots in the ports of the territory of China are also relinquished. In the light of the abolition of treaty ports as such, it is understood that all coastal ports in the territory of the Republic of China which are normally open to American overseas merchant shipping will remain open to such shipping after the coming into effect of the present treaty and the accompanying exchange of notes.

It is mutually agreed that the merchant vessels of each country shall be permitted freely to come to the ports, places, and waters of the other country which are or may be open to overseas merchant shipping, and that the treatment accorded to such vessels in such ports, places, and waters shall be no less favorable than that accorded to national vessels and shall be as favorable as that accorded to the vessels of any third country.

It is mutually understood that the Government of the United States of America relinquishes the special rights which vessels of the United States of America have been accorded with regard to the coasting trade and inland navigation in the waters of the Republic of China, and that the Government of the Republic of China is prepared to take over any American properties that may have been engaged for those purposes and to pay adequate compensation therefor. Should either country accord the rights of inland navigation or coasting trade to vessels of any third country such rights would similarly be accorded to the vessels of the other country. The coasting trade and inland navigation of each country are excepted from the requirement of national treatment and are to be regulated according to the laws of each country in relation thereto. It is agreed, however, that vessels of either country shall enjoy within the territory of the other country with respect to the coasting trade and inland navigation treatment as favorable as that accorded to the vessels of any third country.

It is mutually understood that the Government of the United States of America relinquishes the special rights which naval vessels of the United States of America have been accorded in the waters of the Republic of China and that the Govenment of the Republic of China and the Government of the United States of America shall extend to each other the mutual courtesy of visits by their warships in accordance with international usage and comity.

It is mutually understood that questions which are not covered by the present treaty and exchange of notes and which may affect the sovereignty of the Republic of China shall be discussed by representatives of the two Governments and shall be decided in accordance with generally accepted principles of international law and with modern international practice.

With reference to Article IV of the treaty, the Government of the Republic of China hereby declares that the restriction on the right of alienation of existing rights or titles to real property referred to in that article will be applied by the Chinese authorities in an equitable manner and that if and when the Chinese Government declines to give assent to a proposed transfer the Chinese Government will, in a spirit of justice and with a view to precluding loss on the part of American nationals whose interests are affected, undertake, if the American party in interest so desires, to take over the right or title in question and to pay adequate compensation therefor.

It is mutually understood that the orders, decrees, judgments, decisions, and other acts of the United States Court for China and of the Consular Courts of the United States of America in China shall be considered as res judicata and shall, when necessary, be enforced by the Chinese authorities. It is further understood that any cases pending before the United States Court for China and the Consular Courts of the United States of America in China at the time of the coming into effect of this treaty shall, if the plaintiff or petitioner so desires, be remitted to the appropriate courts of the Government of the Republic of China which shall proceed as expeditiously as possible with their disposition and in so doing shall insofar as practicable apply the laws of the United States of America.

It is understood that these agreements and understandings if confirmed by Your Excellency's Government shall be considered as forming an integral part of the treaty signed today and shall be considered as effective upon the date of the entrance into force of that treaty.

I shall be much obliged if Your Excellency will confirm the foregoing.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to Your Excellency the assurances of my highest consideration.

"It is understood that these agreements and understandings if confirmed by Your Excellency's Government shall be considered as forming an integral part of the treaty signed today and shall be considered as effective upon the date of the entrance into force of that treaty.

"I shall be much obliged if Your Excellency will confirm the foregoing.

"I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to Your Excellency the assurances of my highest consideration."

I have the honor to confirm that the agreements and understandings which have been reached in connection with the treaty signed today by the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of China are as set forth in the above note from Your Excellency.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to Your Excellency the assurances of my highest consideration.

CORDELL HULL.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original note.

CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in effect the treaty now before the Senate for ratification, as a matter of grace, surrenders and abrogates the extraterritorial rights which we have heretofore enjoyed in China. Under those rights the United States maintained a court in Shanghai. Because of those rights and treaty obligations we maintained naval patrols—gunboats—on the rivers of China, and a marine garrison at Tientsin, and probably at other points in China. Great Britain has also negotiated with China a similar treaty by which Britain gives up and surrenders her extraterritorial rights. Those matters have been subjects of much international interest for a great many years. The United States has on a number of occasions considered the abrogation of extraterritorial rights. They grew cut of a situation beginning about 100 years ago. In 1844 the first treaty obligation was assumed by China with respect to the extraterritorial rights. They were somewhat enlarged in 1901 as a result of the Boxer Rebellion. As an outgrowth of the Boxer Rebellion the negotiation came about which extended the extraterritorial rights.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of Senators to the report of the committee, which has been printed and is available, having been placed on the desks of Senators. In taking this action the United States is performing, I think, nothing more than a real act of justice toward China. The extraterritorial rights which we have enjoyed are extraordinary. They are beyond our rights under international law. They were secured from China because of disturbed and chaotic conditions in that country, because of the fact that China was not a strong military or naval power; and under the tremendous pressure of great interests the obligations were extorted from China.

So the Committee on Foreign Relations, after considering these matters and the history of the development of these extraterritorial rights, by unanimous vote voted to ratify the convention or the treaty, and to restore to China her historic rights in the premises.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, from the minority side of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee I wish to join in urging that the treaty be ratified with whatever added emphasis speed can give to our action. To yield our American extraterritorial rights in China is an act of faith in the sovereignty, the power, and the stability of the Chinese Republic. It is an act of faith in the dependability and the destiny of the new China. It is an act of faith in an utterly brave war ally, which, despite the long years of conflict, and notwithstanding a tragically limited arsenal, has never faltered in its hard-pressed devotion to the fighting freedoms for which we, too, are relentlessly marching to the battle front.

This faith, Mr. President, cannot be too wholeheartedly or too swiftly asserted on the part of the people of the United States. It is the unequivocal sentiment of our common heart. To yield up our American extraterritorial rights in China and thus to trust ourselves to China's character is not only an act of good faith; it is an act of justice; it is simple justice and fair play to recognize the right of the Chinese Republic, when it shall have been triumphantly reestablished, to administer the law within its own sovereign jurisdiction, and for us no longer to claim special immunities for our nationals. Justice, Mr. President, has too long been withheld from this incorrigibly courageous people. This act of justice on our friendly part, though relatively small within itself, cannot be too promptly attested by the Senate as the harbinger of the infinitely larger and more fundamental justice which shall be China's deserved destiny when, through common effort, this war is conclusively ended and unconditionally won.

Mr. President, China is one of the indispensable and nonexpendable members of the United Nations, particularly so far as our own highly critical problems in the Far East are concerned. While subordinating our personal judgments on military strategy to our high command, upon which we must depend for all of victory, some of us have been and are deeply anxious for greater immediate attention, if humanly possible, to the battle against Japan in the far Pacific. As a matter of enlightened self-interest we should not want to be guilty of "too little and too late" in that tender zone of danger where our primary American responsibilities are particularly obvious and particularly acute.

I hope there is no doubt of China's confidence in our relentless determination to end Japanese militarism for all time. I hope that this may become increasingly obvious to both China and Japan in the near future. At the moment the Senate has a significant opportunity to make a small payment on this ultimate account. The pending treaty is a symbol of the new day. The symbol cannot shine too brightly; it cannot flash too soon.

Therefore, Mr. President, I join in supporting the unusual procedure which brings the pending treaty to immediate, and to what I hope may be, unanimous ratification.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, in ratifying this treaty, the Senate will consummate a most important act. In today's turmoil we have grown accustomed to great moves, great decisions, great deeds, great victories, in breathtaking numbers, almost treading upon the heels of one another in their whirling speed. We pick up our daily newspaper knowing that we may read of a nation invaded, a fleet sent to the bottom of the ocean, an army vanquished, a continent suddenly occupied.

Yet this simple act of affirmation, done in the quiet of this Chamber, will outlive in the memory of men many of the spectacular deeds whose echoes reverberate and almost deafen our ears from day to day. Like the humble fusillade at Concord which rightly—and for the same reason—became known as "the shot heard 'round the world," this treaty will live far into the unknown future, for both are expressions of the belief in the inherent right of any people to establish and maintain a nation in equality with other nations.

Our forefathers pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor in support of the proposition that all men are created equal. But they did more than that. They waged a war to establish forever the right of a free people to a free and independent nation. Today we hold out the hand of friendship to another free people, and endorse and underscore on their behalf that right for which we fought so many years ago to establish for ourselves.

It is not enough to say that relinquishing our alleged extraterritorial rights is an act of justice. It is more than an attempt to end a wrong and harmful relationship. It is supremely a twofold act. First, it is a recognition of the freedom and unity which China has achieved under the leadership and the principles of Sun Yat-sen, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, and the Kuomintang. It has been well said that the equality of China which we are discussing is something that belongs to China. In an address celebrating the signing of this treaty a noted American asserted:

> It is not a generous gift from America and Britain. By abolishing the unjust and unequal system of extraterritoriality, America and Britain, like Russia, which in 1919 made a declaration of policy relinquishing its extraterritoriality privileges in China, are giving legal recognition to the fact that liberty belongs to the Chinese people, that the Chinese people are capable of discharging all the responsibilities of that liberty, and that under the political organization of the Kuomintang the Chinese people have liberated themselves.

Second, we are putting into practice the principles for which we are fighting this war. The treaty is in a sense independent of the war; but in a far deeper sense it is part of the very warp and woof of the war—a step among the many steps toward the liberation of man which this Nation is taking, and will take, today chiefly with fire and steel and shells and blood, tomorrow with the strong hands of protection and aid and guaranties of peace and justice. In taking this step today, in ratifying this treaty, we advance our cause immeasurably.

Under the rain of devastating fire from which the Filipinos suffered last year, and under the lash of the present Japanese occupants of the Philippines, the great people of the Philippine Islands stand firm in their knowledge that their independence, promised by the United States, will surely come to pass. The people of the Far East, the people of the whole world, know that our 40-year history in the Philippines is an eternal symbol of our foreign policy, our beliefs about liberty, and our complete opposition to imperialism. This treaty with China becomes another symbol of the aims and the beliefs of the American people.

I know it must be in the minds of many that the Senate is considering this treaty on the eve of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. I shall not quote him now, but I submit that almost every one of his memorable phrases throughout his career would be appropriate in connection with what we are doing today in this act of recognition of the rights which China has achieved. Mr. President, the people of the United States believe today in what Lincoln believed. This treaty is the essence of what he believed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that brief remarks made by me at a meeting in commemoration of the ending of extraterritoriality in China, a meeting given in honor of Madame Soong, be made a part of my remarks and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, Madame Soong, Mr. Vice President, and ladies and gentlemen, I am so moved by this occasion that it is going to be hard for me to speak. The consummation of this struggle I hardly expected to see occur after one great disappointment after another, but it has happened.

On August 29, 1843, that which later was called extraterritoriality was imposed upon China by treaty arrangement. The idea was not wholly bad, and the imposition of the idea was not bad at all, because we had had experience with what the text writers called extraterritoriality ever since the days of the Roman Empire, and as we learned in textbook fashion about extraterritoriality, the idea in and of itself was not bad at all. It was when extraterritoriality grew up to be extraterritoriality in China that the idea became bad, and it was, of course, the things which fell in the wake of extraterritoriality which were the bad things, and not the practice in and of itself.

The Chinese, of course, could not have been loath to letting foreigners operate under their own law in their own land because they did not recognize foreign law. The Chinese did not come into the sisterhood of nations even as a treaty making power in the fullness of what that meant until after the Boxer treaties. So that in the economy of time, we have not been backward, and China has not been backward in occupying the place she now occupies.

Her experience with extraterritoriality in the eighth and ninth centuries with the Arabians, for example, is not a bad experience. The foreigners that imposed it upon China had found that it worked well in the western part of Asia and around the Mediterranean countries and Africa, and it wasn't imposed with any degree of meanness at all. That, I think, we ought to say. We ought to know the whole history if we are going to appreciate the new position which China occupies now, being entirely freed from the unequal ban which seemed to be hers.

And now, as the Vice President has said, that she has taken a position in the sisterhood of nations and is now spoken of in wartime as one of the big four of the great Allies, each of those two places is a place which China merits and to which China will contribute her full share. No thoughtful person would ever in any way deprecate the worth of this world of Chinese culture and Chinese contributions to the welfare of man in the world.

The great problem in China is still before her. She, coming through over 30 years of a revolutionary period of adjustment, will have to struggle harder than any other country in order that she may adjust herself properly. Her struggle today is so hard and so uncertain, even for those of us who are looking from the outside in, that we wonder even about a great event like that which we are celebrating today being able to contribute much to the misery which she is now going through. But it will be a spiritual tribute and, after all, the things of the spirit are definitely and decidedly worth while. I congratulate our country, I congratulate England, on saving the point that to do that which they can do today and not wait until tomorrow is the height of genius in international relations. That we have done it causes us to feel greater hope for tomorrow.

If we can also now go forth and realize that that which we have done we have done because it is the right thing to do and not because it was the expedient thing to do—if we can make those two changes in that which we have done in our attitude, we will go forward far toward bringing that type of unity which must come to the great four and to the United Nations before we can achieve success.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, ever since the dawn of the so-called modern age, China has been beleaguered and encroached upon from all sides. This vast land, rich in the resources of nature and certain luxuries unique with the Orient, has seen her resources diminished and her people exploited by almost every other nation in the world. Weakened by internal strife, lacking in unified leadership and dynamic nationalism, this historic land of some four hundred or more million souls found herself utterly unable to resist the recurring demands for this or that concession—demands which came with equal vigor from all quarters of the globe. Great Britain, the United States, France, Italy, Japan, and many other nations all took from China the right to govern vital sections of her own land, and brought these sections under a new system of law and order nebulous and unknown to the Chinese people.

Japan, not content with diplomatic concessions, has by ruthless force and unbridled aggression, laid waste vast portions of this land and brought millions of Chinese people under the galling yoke of slavery.

These incursions by diplomacy and conquests by force continued unabated until this renowned land, once the crucible of civilization and mortal attainment, became known only as a weak, defenseless power—a fountain of wealth yet unexploited.

For more than 10 years now, China has been locked in mortal combat with the little men of Nippon; for 10 years this land, whom few respected, and whom none assisted, has fought the continuing battle for civilization. The lives China has given, the privations she has endured, and the unquestioned valor she has displayed in this unequal struggle have contributed inestimably to the final victory which must inevitably come to the United Nations.

When that victory is won, Americans must never forget the valiant struggle of these stoic people. It is not for us to turn our backs upon this harried nation. It is rather for us to abide with China, to free her of all the impositions which have been wrought upon her in the past. It is for us to drive every last vestige of Japanese influence from the continent of Asia. It is for us to see to it that all extraterritorial rights, and all other diplomatic concessions which do not recognize the sovereignty of the Chinese Republic, are forever abandoned.

When the Senate ratifies this treaty and its attendant notes, we shall mark the way; we shall serve notice upon the world that the United States harbors no dreams of conquest; that we have voluntarily withdrawn from those so-called agreements which, in effect, denied the sovereignty of China.

But this treaty does not bring our obligations to an end. We must see to it that a free and sovereign China emerges from this war—a China governed by the Chinese, in and for the interests of China, and in accordance with a system of law and justice which the Chinese people themselves must devise and administer.

Out of this war a new China must emerge, a China that is capable of preserving, in cooperation with the United Nations, a period of progressive growth and enduring peace in all the vast reaches of the far Pacific, and on the far-flung continent of Asia as well.

I shall vote for the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank Senators for their courtesy and consideration in respect to this matter. The ratification of this treaty is the fulfillment of a national duty we owe to China. It is no more than according to her the respect and dignity of a sovereign nation; and the people of the United States, I am sure, will heartily approve the action of the Senate in surrendering back to China the elements of her nationality and the fundamental attributes of her sovereignty. So I ask that the treaty be ratified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive A, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, a treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of China for the relinquishment of extraterritorial rights in China and the regulation of related matters signed at Washington on January 11, 1943, and a supplementary exchange of notes also concerning matters related to extraterritorial rights which was signed at the same time and which is made an integral part of the treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty, together with supplementary exchange of notes, is ratified.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with the ratification of the treaty, I wish to advise the Senate that on next Thursday we hope to have Madame Chiang Kai-shek as a guest of the Senate of the United States, at which time she will probably deliver an address. The hour has not as yet been fixed, but it will be some time early after the convening of the Senate, and I hope that all Senators will be present at the time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, did I correctly understand the Chair to state that the treaty was unanimously ratified by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the treaty was ratified.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that no Senator voted against the ratification of the treaty?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No Senator voted against the ratification of the treaty so far as the Chair heard.

ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF MAXIMUM PRICES ON PORK AND BEEF PRODUCTS AND BREAD AND OTHER BAKERY PRODUCTS

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Missouri proceeds, the Chair desires to state that, the morning hour having expired, under the precedents, Senate Resolution 94, submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection, I wish to say that the Senator from Kansas and I entered into an informal agreement by which the resolution was to go over until next Monday.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think, in all fairness to the Senator from Kansas, the resolution should go over under the rule and not lose any of its parliamentary advantage and status.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood that the Senator from Kansas had agreed that the resolution go over until next Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no knowledge of any such agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, under the rule, the resolution would go to the calendar, but I agreed with the Senator from Kansas that it might go over and preserve its status.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas, and which came over under the rule this morning, now go over under the rule without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE RUML PLAN

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for about a minute and a half?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I gave out a statement to the newspapers which I desire to have go into the RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the floor. If the Senator from Alabama will wait for a few moments, what I have in mind will only take about a minute and a half.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have received a great many communications, especially from my State, regarding my attitude on what is known as the Ruml plan, and I have a statement relative thereto which I wish to make to the Senate.

So much has been said about the cancelation of the 1942 individual income taxes under the popular slogan "pay as you go" proposal that I feel it is my duty to say that in my judgment changing our tax plan during a war, and canceling a whole year's taxes when we need them more than we ever did in our history, does not make sense to me.

If there was ever a time when we ought not to cancel a whole year's or a part of a year's taxes, it is now. These taxes are to support our boys in the armed forces all over the world. These taxes are to prevent inflation. These taxes are to preserve the safety of this Republic in the greatest crisis it ever confronted.

Our taxpayers made more money in 1942 than they ever before made in our history, or than was ever made in the history of any country. They are in a better position today to pay 1942 taxes than they will ever be in again to pay any taxes. Most of the incomes have been made out of Government work, directly or indirectly, and the taxpayers should be glad to divide these incomes with their Government in this crisis. Because of the necessities of the war, if there ever was a time when we ought not to cancel a whole year's, or part of a year's, taxes it is now.

More than three-fourths of all the individual income taxpayers for 1942 are new income taxpayers, who have not paid income taxes heretofore. To cancel these taxes would destroy the morale of this enormous number of new taxpayers. It would in like manner destroy the morale of the old-line individual income taxpayers. We should not swap tax horses in the middle of the stream. We should not cancel taxes, with the necessity facing us of clothing and feeding our boys in the armed forces all over the world.

It is impossible to pay taxes monthly for 1943, because no taxpayer will know how much money he is going to earn during the year unless he is a salaried man and receives no promotions or reductions.

"Pay as you go" is a popular slogan, and it should be adopted by preserving the 1942 tax, but letting the taxpayer pay it in monthly installments every month in 1943. The American people made in 1942 the greatest incomes they ever received. They know exactly what they owe. They should be allowed to pay in any reasonable installments they desire, but they should pay on the 1942 basis. The present system has been fully tried out during a period of more than a quarter of a century, and has been found effective.

As I look at the Ruml plan, it appears to be the beginning of a strike by income-tax payers against our Government. I do not believe in strikes of any kind against our Government. There are times when strikes are proper, but that is not true of strikes against our Government.

INVESTIGATION OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish at this time to make a brief statement concerning the investigation directed by the Senate to be made into the military establishments in continental United States and in the Territory of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands:

Pursuant to resolutions adopted by the United States Senate on July 23 and October 9, 1942, the Special Committee to Investigate Military Establishments has just completed an inspection of the Ninth Service Command, which comprises the States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, and Washington, a territory covering 863,926 square miles, and 28½ percent of the entire area of the continental United States.

The objective of the Ninth Service Command is to induct, train, equip, and ship troops, with the necessary equipment, to Australia, the South Pacific islands, Alaska, and the Canal Zone.

I am happy to report to the Senate that the fathers and mothers of this country can be assured that military and naval forces are doing a magnificent job in the first three objectives in the Ninth Service and Alaska Commands. They can be assured that the boys are being well cared for. The morale is excellent. They are being trained by able leaders. They are the best fed, the best clothed, and, with few exceptions, the best housed, and, on the whole, the healthiest soldiers who have served in any army in the history of this country.

The special committee found housing conditions, in a few places, that did not measure up to the proper standard. We have noted these exceptions in our report. Some were immediately corrected; others have been corrected since we inspected the area, and we are assured that proper steps are being taken in the remainder of the cases. The really serious situations affecting the campaign in the Pacific theater of operations deal with subjects other than these troops.

The Ninth Service Command includes the States I have already enumerated. The Western Defense Command includes the same area in the continental United States, and Alaska. Alaska was visited by the special committee in August 1942, and a report, including recommendations, was submitted to the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. President, I am sure our people would be heartened if they could see, in the Aleutians and in Alaska, young Americans working, as they were at the time we visited them, from 4 o'clock in the morning until about 10 o'clock at night, in the muskeg and tundra, asking nothing save a package of cigarettes, a bar of candy, and a letter from home. They are doing their job in a magnificent way, one which deserves to be matched by the patriotic people in the homeland.

MONOPOLISTIC TENDENCIES OF THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD—AID FOR SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, there has been much interest this morning in the Senate in various matters, and I have been at some pains to yield to some of my colleagues because I thought it was in the public interest to do so, particularly in reference to the unanimous ratification of the treaty with China.

I shall take the present opportunity to tell the Senate about the largest business monopoly in the history of the world, which has been created in Washington under the very eyes of the Congress. In my opinion, it threatens to impair or destroy many of the social, economic, and political gains made by the everyday citizen and businessman through constructive legislative enactments during the past decade.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am sure that the Senator really has something to say which Senators should hear. Will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Green | Pepper |
| Andrews | Guffey | Radcliffe |
| Austin | Gurney | Reed |
| Bailey | Hayden | Reynolds |
| Ball | Hill | Robertson |
| Bankhead | Johnson, Colo. | Russell |
| Barkley | Kilgore | Scrugham |
| Bilbo | La Follette | Smith |
| Bridges | Langer | Stewart |
| Buck | Lucas | Thomas, Idaho |
| Bushfield | McClellan | Thomas, Okla. |
| Butler | McFarland | Thomas, Utah |
| Byrd | McKellar | Truman |
| Capper | McNary | Tunnell |
| Caraway | Maloney | Tydings |
| Chandler | Maybank | Vandenberg |
| Clark, Mo. | Mead | Van Nuys |
| Connally | Millikin | Wagner |
| Danaher | Moore | Wallgren |
| Davis | Murdock | Walsh |
| Downey | Murray | Wheeler |
| Ferguson | Nye | Wherry |
| George | O'Daniel | Wiley |
| Gerry | O'Mahoney | Willis |
| Gillette | Overton | |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I shall continue from the point where I left off when the absence of a quorum was suggested.

Public Law 603 was unanimously enacted by Congress so as to mobilize aggressively the productive capacity of smaller business concerns in order successfully to carry out the war program. Previous to its enactment, several efforts had been made so that small business might obtain its rightful share of war contracts. By "small business," I mean primarily those businesses which employ from 5 to 500 men, and whose capital investment is from $10,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. Robert Mahorney headed the first attempt with very limited success. He was followed by Floyd Odlum. Both of these men tried honestly and conscientiously to help small business. Both failed because they had no procurement powers and little or no cooperation from the armed services and the War Production Board.

Government statistics show that at the beginning of the war program there were about 175,000 firms in the United States employing millions of people, who, between them, produced about 70 percent of the Nation's manufacturing.

The remaining 30 percent was produced by 100 or more major corporations, commonly termed "blue chips of Wall Street." This peacetime-production balance was sound and provided a firm foundation for the social, economic, and political life of our democracy.

Let us see what has happened to this foundation upon which this country has grown and prospered. Big business has sifted into our bureaucratic agencies, such as the War and Navy Departments and the War Production Board. It has placed thousands of its representatives in key positions in Washington, so that today the purchasing power of our Government is funneled into the big corporations.

In 2 short years the peacetime-production balance of America has been put in reverse. Today 100 corporations enjoy 70 percent of the war and essential civilian contracts, while the 175,000 smaller companies have been reduced from their former 70-percent position to a mere 30 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator have a list of the corporations which have received 70 percent of all the war contracts?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; I have the list. It was given to me confidentially, but I notice that two or three of those who are on that list have been placing full-page advertisements in the newspapers, publishing the figures in more detail than those which I have.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want any confidential information to be revealed, but I think it would be interesting, not only to the Senate, but to the whole country, to have a list of the large corporations which have received 70 percent of all the war contracts which have been given out under the jurisdiction of the War Production Board, the War Department, the Navy Department, or any other department which has anything to do with the letting of contracts.

Mr. TRUMAN. The distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] some 3 or 4 months, perhaps 6 months ago—I do not remember the exact date—placed in the RECORD a list of the 100 companies. Their positions since then have changed somewhat, but the present list is practically the same as that which the Senator from Wyoming placed in the RECORD. I will say that the companies now at the head of the list are the same as those which were at the head of the list at that time.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, then, the information is not confidential.

Mr. TRUMAN. It was given to me confidentially, and that is the reason I have not made it a part of this speech for the RECORD. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader, that there have been about $85,000,000,000 worth of war contracts signed, and about $60,000,000,000 worth of those contracts have gone to the first 100 companies.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that in January 1942, when we were discussing the price control bill, before its passage by the Senate, I put into the RECORD the list to which the Senator from Missouri has referred, of 100 companies which up to that time had been awarded considerably more than 70 percent of all the war contracts that had been let up to that time. It is only fair to say, however, that the percentage of the contracts awarded to the 30th of June 1942, to 100 companies, is somewhat less than it was at the beginning. Senators who were here at the time when the report of the Temporary National Economic Committee was submitted to the Senate will recall that that report also contained statistics indicating not only the concentration of war contracts in terms of companies, but the concentration in terms of geography. Following that the War Department and the Navy Department did make an attempt to award contracts — subcontracts at least — to others than the huge companies.

Only a few days ago, when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] were making a report from the Truman committee on the subject of steel, I pointed out that General Motors Corporation had received the largest amount of contracts. As I recall the figures at this time, General Motors had received about four billion eight hundred million dollars' worth of contracts.

Mr. TRUMAN. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming that according to the confidential report which I have, the figure is very much larger than that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The list which I had was as of June 30, 1942. At the present time the figure is probably much greater.

I was about to say that it was stated to me by one subcontractor under General Motors that probably fifteen or twenty thousand smaller corporations had subcontracts from General Motors. I have not had an opportunity to check that figure.

Mr. TRUMAN. I believe that is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. However, I have checked this information: The Defense Plant Corporation has awarded loans for the construction of facilities and 31 facility plants for General Motors have been built with R. F. C. funds.

Mr. TRUMAN. I was about to say to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming that in order to accomplish the 70-percent reverse about which I was speaking, more than $10,000,000,000 of Government money has been available to these 100 companies for new plant facilities and new machine tools.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. With respect to machine tools, I think it is only fair to say that the Defense Plant Corporation has made arrangements with some of the companies for the machine tools to be farmed out, loaned out, and made available to many smaller corporations.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is true.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. While I am interrupting the distinguished Senator from Missouri, allow me to refer to something which he has said with respect to Mr. Mahorney and Mr. Odlum, the first two who were called in to try to do something for small business. Both those men had plans for the distribution of contracts, and they were eliminated from the picture in order to prevent them from accomplishing the object which they had in mind.

Mr. TRUMAN. I believe that is what is happening now.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. Odlum had prepared and presented what seemed to me at the time to be a very complete and efficient method for guaranteeing that small businesses of the country should be given their proper share of war contracts However, that was not the road which was followed. The War Production Board followed another road, and now we find our whole industrial structure to be stemming out of the 100 companies which on June 30, 1942, had over $39,000,000,000 of the $55,400,000,000 which had been awarded in contracts up to that time.

Mr. TRUMAN. At the present time the figure is $60,000,000,000 out of $85,000,000,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. With respect to the confidential nature of this information I wish to say that these figures were collected by the statistical branch of the W. P. B. Mr. Stacy May is the head of that branch. The figures are available to the War Production Board. I am sure they are available to the committees of Congress. I had no difficulty in obtaining them, and I assume that if it were desired to make them a matter of public record in the Senate there would be no objection to it. I personally feel that it should be done because they are most illuminating. They point to the tremendous problem which Congress will have to face some day, and in my judgment the sooner it does so the better.

Mr. TRUMAN. I believe the Senator is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The question which I wish to ask bears directly on that point. I should like to know if the able Senator cannot obtain a release from the confidential nature of his information and put it in the RECORD? I think it is exceedingly essential that we should know just how and to whom the contracts are let. It would be very enlightening information. I think every Member of the Senate should have the information, and I am wondering if the Senator cannot obtain a release and put this very desirable information in the RECORD. If that is not done, some of the committees—of one of which I happen to be a member—will be obliged to ask for it and will be obliged to tell the W. P. B. that it is not secret information. I hope the Senator can obtain a release from the confidential nature of the information.

Mr. TRUMAN. I shall be very glad to follow the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. I will say that, as acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee may subpena the figures at any time he desires to do so. I shall try to obtain an order from the War Production Board releasing the information to the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. On what theory were the figures held to be public property last January, but not at the present time?

Mr. TRUMAN. I do not know. I cannot answer the question. However, the figures were handed to me, and I was told that they were confidential.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it a fair question to ask the Senator who advised him not to give the information to the public?

Mr. TRUMAN. I was not told. I was told not to give the figures out. However, the figures were furnished to the counsel of the special committee of which I am chairman, and they were furnished to him confidentially. I believe we will be able to have the figures released.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of what the distinguished Senator from Missouri has said, and what has occurred in the past, it seems to me that the time is ripe for us to know the exact amounts which the corporations to which reference has been made are obtaining in the way of contracts.

Mr. TRUMAN. I have the exact amounts.

More than $10,000,000,000 of Government money have been made available for new plant facilities and new machine tools. The availability of such plant facilities and machine tools to the big corporations after the war will enable them to continue, and even to increase their 70-percent stranglehold on the country's industry.

For nearly 2 years I, as well as other Members of Congress, have realized this tendency and have fought it. The Smaller War Plants Corporation was set up by the Congress to aid the small businessman.

The sound plans, patient actions, and persistence of Mr. Lou Holland, as Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, and also as Deputy Chairman of the War Production Board in charge of the Smaller War Plants Division, have laid a foundation from which I hoped that a great deal might be accomplished for the small businessman. This foundation includes the revision of the procurement policy of Government agencies. Most governmental purchases have always been made through the larger manufacturers of this country. Through the coordination established by Holland, means now exist whereby the facilities of the smaller manufacturer are now utilized and will be further utilized, which is in accord with the wishes of Congress.

I have known Lou Holland for many years; and a finer, more honest and sincere man never came out of the Middle West or any other part of this country. He came to Washington at the request of Mr. Nelson, of the War Production Board, and I did not know he was coming until I was asked whether he was all right.

Mr. President, at this point I request that three letters concerning the ability and standing of Mr. Holland be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF KANSAS CITY—LOU E. HOLLAND

The board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City at a meeting held December 13 adopted the following declaration:

"For the first time in the history of the chamber of commerce or its predecessor, the commercial club, a man was called to serve as president for 2 years. That man was Lou E. Holland. This necessitated changing the bylaws toward the end of his first year in order that he might be continued in office to enable him to put his ideas and plans for a great forward movement for Kansas City into operation.

"At the first meeting of the board of directors a year ago, at which he was reelected, the board for the first time went outside of its own membership for a president, guaranteeing him their enthusiastic support as a condition of his acceptance of the office.

"Mr. Holland's leadership has established a new standard for Kansas City by uniting all business interests in a way to insure a greatly increased budget for a period of 5 years. During this period, it is planned to so direct the chamber's work, particularly along industrial lines, so that new industries will be brought here in greater number, and those already here will be assisted in ways to make them more successful.

"For all of this Kansas City should be and is indebteded to Lou E. Holland for a new brand of citizenship, he having taken all the separated and indefinite ideas and ambitions of the community and welded them into one great forward movement for not only Kansas City but for the territory it serves. Under his generalship there has been presented to Kansas City a new order of things for its civic and industrial development."

LOU HOLLAND, Esq.,
President, Associated Advertising Clubs, New York.

DEAR MR. HOLLAND: I cannot permit your retirement from the position of president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World without an expression of admiration for your accomplishments while holding that position. Your powers of organization, your invariable courtesy and never-failing ability to deal with complex matters achieved for the Associated Advertising Clubs the successful issue of numerous plans designed for their honor and success.

With best wishes,
Sincerely yours,

LOUIS WILEY.

LONDON, July 7, 1925.

LOU E. HOLLAND, ESQ.

In the House of Lords of Advertising there is no system of patronage whereby a man of the mental and moral caliber of Lou E. Holland can receive due recognition. Yet this man, the strength and sweetness of whose character is a byword among his friends, gives of his best in the interests of public service.

Lou E. Holland is no more American than I (who was born in Scotland). His qualities are universal and he belongs to the whole world.

He is the possessor of a unique and wonderful personality which immediately recalls to the mind of one who meets him the great figures of the past. To the American he recalls Lincoln; to the Frenchman, Napoleon; to the Englishman, Drake; and to the Scot, Burns. Like all great men he has a touch of the merchant adventurer, missionary, statesman, seer, and poet, and the quality of his appeal is universal.

We in Britain know him to be the embodiment of all the qualities which public men should possess. It is not too much to say that his influence permeates far beyond the limits of his own profession; great as his value is to advertising and advertising men, it does not stop there but reacts on all who come in contact with the rare and refreshing qualities of his mind.

Britain will never forget the great international advertising convention held in London in 1924—its great leader will always be inseparably associated with the memory.

W. L. CRAWFORD.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. Holland has had a great deal of experience. He is a small businessman, and he sees the situation from the small businessman's point of view. He came to Washington and found that he had no procurement powers whatever. He then made an attempt to obtain cooperation of the Army, the Navy, and the Maritime Commission. He secured that cooperation, and was just at the point of making this a very successful venture when along came the thing which usually happens to men who try to make small business successful, and out he went.

I have another document which I shall place in the RECORD at the conclusion of my address.

Mr. Holland tackled his job in a realistic, actual, and honest manner. His results reflect credit on him, on the purchasing agencies, and on Congress.

The President signed Public Law 603 on June 11, 1942. Mr. Holland was not appointed until July 11. Two months elapsed before the War Production Board issued a general administrative order setting up the Smaller War Plants organization and giving Mr. Holland authority to function. During that interval, he worked with borrowed help and in makeshift quarters. No satisfactory explanation has yet been given to anyone for the unnecessary delay in issuing this administrative order. Despite these handicaps, Mr. Holland made progress through almost daily meetings with officials of the Army, Navy, Maritime Commission, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the Treasury. Mr. Holland believed that in order to carry out the wishes of Congress, it was necessary for him to work out with the procurement officers the policies, plans, and procedures whereby procurements could be allocated to the Smaller War Plants Division for distribution to distressed small business. Through his patient efforts he obtained cooperation and help from the procurement agencies. In fact, he succeeded in obtaining more cooperation from them than he did from the War Production Board, although with unfailing loyalty to his superiors he has never complained about the lack of cooperation within the War Production Board.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to read into the RECORD paragraph (d) of section 4 of Public Law 603 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, which provides that the Corporation—and I am speaking of the Smaller War Plants Corporation of which Lou Holland was Chairman—shall have the power—to select, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary for the transaction of the business of the Corporation; to define their authority and duties, require bonds of them, and fix the penalties thereof; and to prescribe, amend, and repeal, by its board of directors, bylaws, rules, and regulations governing the manner in which its general business may be conducted and the powers granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed.

There is the language of the Congress with respect to the powers of the Smaller War Plants Corporation; and it is my understanding that the War Production Board has bypassed that Corporation ever since the time when it came into existence.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. The War Production Board has really treated it as more or less of a stepchild, something which was to be played with, rather than giving it the power to do what Congress intended. Does the Senator agree that I am correct in that respect?

Mr. TRUMAN. The Senator is absolutely correct. The War Production Board ignored the Corporation completely until it was on the verge of success in spite of all the handicaps, and now the War Production Board has broken it up.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TRUMAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. STEWART. I have listened with interest to the contribution made by the Senator from Illinois. It seems to me that to quote from the statute which sets out the power of the Smaller War Plants Corporation shows that the Smaller War Plants Corporation has, as a matter of fact, rather comprehensive power; but the act also provides, as I recall, that the Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, who has been the Senator's friend, Mr. Holland, and who I think is a very fine gentleman, by the way, is also the Vice Chairman of the War Production Board; that is, he is second to Mr. Nelson. As I recall, when the act was passed it was insisted by several of those in the War Production Board that such provision be made—that is, that the chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation also be vice chairman of the War Production Board.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. STEWART. As I see the situation, it has worked itself around to a point where a man who serves as chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation and vice chairman of the War Production Board is practically in the position of serving two masters; because I say with frankness and with rather serious feeling about the matter that certain interests are being served in the War Production Board by men who are there that have deliberately undertaken to sabotage and wreck the Smaller War Plants Corporation and to destroy every single effort which that organization has tried to make and which the committee of which I have been a member has tried to make.

Mr. TRUMAN. And they are doing it very successfully.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; they are doing it very successfully.

I have my finger on some matters relative to this situation, and in the next few days I expect to make some statements on the floor about it. The Smaller War Plants Corporation has been able to allot only about $200,000,000 worth of contracts to the smaller business concerns, as we classify the smaller business concerns throughout the entire United States.

Mr. TRUMAN. For the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, let me say that I have the complete report of all the activities of the Smaller War Plants Corporation from its inception until the first day of February.

Mr. STEWART. In that event let me ask the Senator whether the figures I have stated are correct.

Mr. TRUMAN. No; they are too small. The amount is about $846,000,000.

Mr. STEWART. At any rate, less than a billion dollars. Of course, that is a lot of money; but when we take into consideration the fact that General Motors itself already has been given practically $5,000,000,000 in contracts—more than five times as much as has been received by all the smaller business concerns throughout the entire country—we must see what is happening to the small businesses. In short, they are going to hell; that is all there is to it. I am afraid it is now too late to help them, but certainly we should make every effort to do so.

Mr. TRUMAN. The Senator is extremely conservative in his figures.

Mr. STEWART. I think so, too.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the law as enacted by Congress the Smaller War Plants Corporation was made an integral part of the War Production Board.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not so certain that that was not a mistake.

Mr. TRUMAN. It is perfectly apparent that it was a mistake.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would have been better for Congress to have set up the Smaller War Plants Corporation as an independent organization; but, because of the desire of the War Production Board not to have separation of jurisdiction or division of authority with respect to the letting of contracts, Congress yielded to importunities to make it a part of the War Production Board set-up. The members of the board of directors of the Corporation were to be appointed by the Chairman of the War Production Board. They were appointed by the Chairman of the War Production Board, and they took office more than 6 months ago—approximately on the 1st of July, I think.

Mr. TRUMAN. On the 11th of July, as I recall.

Mr. BARKLEY. The 11th of July. They have been in office now nearly 8 months.

Does the junior Senator from Missouri know whether the members of the War Production Board or any member of the War Production Board, including the Chairman, has ever permitted the board of directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation to come into the office of the War Production Board and sit down and across a table discuss the problems of small business or the problems of the board of directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation? Can the Senator tell us whether they have ever been allowed to sit down and across the table discuss their problems so that they might receive some encouragement and help from the War Production Board itself?

Mr. TRUMAN. I know positively that they have never had that privilege.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know one member of the Board of Directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation who tried for 2 months to secure an interview with the Chairman of the War Production Board in order to lay before him some of the problems which faced them. He never was able to get before him, but finally was able to talk to one of his subordinates, who told him that he might as well go home; that he ought to go back to his residence that they did not need him there anyway; that if they should need him, they would send for him; and that probably his family would be glad to see him come home. That is the way the members of the Board of Directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation have been treated in their effort really to carry out the intention of Congress in doing something for small business in this country.

So far as I am concerned, I want to say to the Senator from Missouri, and to the Senate, and to everyone else concerned, that I have held my tongue in my cheek as long as I am going to hold it there about this situation.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank the Senator for his statement. It pleases me immensely.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not talking about my tongue hanging out, it is just out of my cheek. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I am glad to hear the Senator from Kentucky make such a frank statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say in that connection that it is my opinion that a majority of the members of the Board of Directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation have from the beginning desired to carry out the intention of Congress.

Mr. TRUMAN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. They have desired to carry out the intention of Congress in helping to aid small business, not simply by lending money, which is only one part of their function, but by giving contracts to small business, which is what they were authorized to do by the law which Congress enacted. From the beginning the Smaller War Plants Corporation have desired to carry out the intention of Congress; but in my judgment they have been handicapped, hobbled, and restrained and have not been permitted to carry out the will of Congress in giving aid to small business.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Kentucky if he thinks that an amendment to the act which would entirely release the Smaller War Plants Corporation from the War Production Board would be the answer to the problem—legislation which would entirely divorce the Smaller War Plants Corporation from the War Production Board.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would be a very long step toward solving the problem, because I have no doubt whatever in my own mind that the reason why the Smaller War Plants Corporation has not functioned as Congress intended that it should function is because it has not been allowed to do so by the Board of Directors of the War Production Board, under whom the directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation are supposed to serve.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like to interrogate the Senator from Missouri once more. Does the Senator have access in the report he mentioned to figures which indicate the number of small business concerns which have gone entirely out of business within the last 12 or 15 months?

Mr. TRUMAN. No; I do not have such figures. They are now being compiled, and will be available in a week or so.

Mr. STEWART. I have been attempting for weeks to obtain such figures, because I am anxious to make a speech on the subject, to tell of the inequities and some of the practices in connection with small business concerns throughout the country. It is my opinion that certain groups within the War Production Board—I say this by way of repetition—have undertaken absolutely to develop a complete monopoly which would have for its purpose and effect the complete destruction of small business from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I simply want to make one observation in line with what the able majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], has said about the Smaller War Plants Corporation. Congress set up under the act five different things which the Smaller War Plants Corporation could do. It is my understanding that the Corporation has been thwarted by the War Production Board on four of them. The only thing it has been permitted to do has been to make loans. Am I correct about that?

Mr. TRUMAN. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. It is my understanding that that is true.

Mr. TRUMAN. The Smaller War Plants Corporation has no procurement powers whatever.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am quite sure that the Senator has a misconception about that matter. I think the Smaller War Plants Corporation has been given rather full and complete authority by the act itself.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not talking about the act. I am talking about how it has been thwarted by the War Production Board in failing to carry out the intent of Congress.

Mr. STEWART. The Smaller War Plants Corporation itself has a right to make contracts with the Government and more or less, so to speak, to sublet the contracts to the smaller businesses. As a matter of practice, the War Production Board has not permitted that to be done, where it could prevent it; and I think that one of the main difficulties has been the lack of assertion of authority on the part of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. It has had authority which it has not used.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, let me make a statement at this point in my own time. The procurement and the making of contracts is all in the hands of the war agencies; that is, the War Department appropriations are made directly to the War Department, and no one can spend that money except the War Department. The same thing is true as to the Navy Department and as to the Maritime Commission. Unless they, out of the goodness of their hearts, see fit to let the contracts out to small business, and unless they are satisfied, they can ruin any small businessman in the country by means of their inspectors. That is the reason why Mr. Holland has spent most of his time trying to get the complete cooperation of those agencies. He got the cooperation, but now they are beginning to upset the apple cart.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator has just said what I desired to make inquiry about, namely, that the War Production Board has the control of procurement for the United States Government. That is not true. The Army and Navy and the Maritime Commission make their own procurement under their own contracts. In my own time I desire to speak about that matter, but at this time I wish to make the point perfectly clear. Unless the Smaller War Plants Corporation obtains the cooperation of those who have to do with procurement, they are stymied in seeking to help small business.

Mr. TRUMAN. And if they make contracts and do not have the money to pay under the contracts, small businesses are as badly off, if not worse off, than if they did not have the contracts.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to make one further observation. I wish to join the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Tennessee in what they have said about divorcing the Smaller War Plants Corporation from the War Production Board. I think in the beginning of the Small Business Committee, and when the Senate was originally thinking about the organization of this corporation, it was felt by the Senate and the committee functioning that that was the way it should be handled.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from Illinois that I do not think that would do a particle of good unless the appropriations which are made by the Congress are made in such a way that the War Department and the Navy Department and the procurement agencies are forced to follow out the intent of the Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. I was coming to that. I agree with the Senator, because the appropriation provided last year does not do what the Senators say should be done in order to carry out the functions of the corporation set up as a separate entity.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know whether or not we could accomplish any more for small business by separating the Corporation or divorcing it from the War Production Board; I am not sure; I do not know; but certainly little business at the present time, as the result of what the War Production Board is attempting to do to the Smaller War Plants Corporation, is getting the little end of nothing whittled down to a fine point.

Mr. TRUMAN. And we were just on the point of seeing a way out. I think that is one of the reasons for changing the present situation.

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is perhaps the real reason. In other words, small business was getting to the point where it looked like, through the President's board, some relief was going to be afforded some day.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Now they depose the chairman and, as I understand it, are ready to depose the other members of the Board, who have done an honest job in attempting to aid small business. The members of the Board of the Smaller War Plants Corporation were certainly small businessmen from different sections of the country; the members of the Board were selected because of their familiarity with the little businessman. The big businessmen are now attempting to squeeze them all out, and, as I understand, a man by the name of Colonel Johnson, a real big businessman, is about ready to take their place.

Mr. TRUMAN. I will tell all about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Some of the functions of the Smaller War Plants Corporation are set out on page 4 of the pamphlet which contains the law. The provision reads as follows:

> In any case in which the Chairman of the War Production Board certifies to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Director of the Procurement Division of the Treasury, or to any other officer of the Government having procurement powers, that the Smaller War Plants Corporation is competent to perform any specific Government procurement contract to be let by any such officer, it shall be the duty of such officer to let such procurement contract to such Corporation upon such terms and conditions as may be specified by the Chairman of the War Production Board. Such subcontracts may be let upon such terms and conditions as the Corporation may deem appropriate in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed under section 201 of the First War Powers Act, 1941.

Under that provision it is the duty of the Chairman of the War Production Board to certify to any of the departments that have anything to do with procurement that the Smaller War Plants Corporation is competent to carry out a contract or a subcontract. Does the Senator know whether any such certification has ever been made, and, if so, to what extent the Smaller War Plants Corporation has ever been certified by the Chairman of the War Production Board as being competent to carry out any contract or subcontract for materials or procurement or anything of that sort?

Mr. TRUMAN. I have a complete report on the subject, and I do not think any such certification has ever been made. I will make a complete report.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to anticipate what the Senator may have to say in his remarks, but the whole situation, the whole set-up, the whole performance in the War Production Board since the creation of the Smaller War Plants Corporation has been of such a character as to create considerable confusion in the mind not only in the Senate but of the Corporation itself as to what it can do and what it cannot do in order to carry out the intent of Congress.

Mr. TRUMAN. I think that is correct. If I may speak for a few moments I think I will cover some of the points in which the able leader of the majority is interested. As I started to say a while ago, Mr. Holland asserts that the War Production Board failed to give him control of the necessary field organization until January 7, 1943, when an administrative order was finally issued giving him authority to appoint men in the regional and district offices of the War Production Board. Prior to this time Mr. Holland had no field organization directly responsible to him. During all this time he continued his difficult and laborious work under many other handicaps. Despite this Mr. Holland made substantial accomplishments, especially during the last several months.

At no time did Mr. Nelson ever criticize Mr. Holland's administration or his activities. On the contrary Mr. Nelson, again and again, has complimented Mr. Holland on the progress being made in the face of enormous difficulties. Mr. Nelson told five members of the special committee, of which I am chairman, that he assumed full responsibility for the delay in getting the Smaller War Plants Division under way.

I am not making this statement as a report from my special committee; I am making it as the junior Senator from Missouri because I think one of the ablest constituents I have has been very badly mistreated in this set-up.

It is to Mr. Nelson's credit that he has always been quick to assume personally the responsibility for the derelictions of those by whom he is surrounded, many of whom he inherited from the old Office of Production Management, which made such a poor record. The responsibility for the delay in vesting in the Smaller War Plants Division the necessary powers and authority to act belongs on those within the War Production Board who were not desirous of seeing it made a success and who took every possible occasion to delay and hamstring the Division.

But the powers were slowly obtained and progress was being made. During last month, January 1943, $60,200,000 of prime contracts were placed with 447 distressed concerns, and $21,900,000 of subcontracts were placed with 948 small companies. These and other accomplishments are set forth in the report of Mr. Holland. I told the Senate I would make Mr. Holland's report—a chronological memorandum of the W. P. B. procedure—a part of the RECORD when I got through my remarks. I now ask unanimous consent that a copy of it be placed in the RECORD at this point, and also a memorandum dated February 2, 1943.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SMALLER WAR PLANTS DIVISION,
February 11, 1943.

To Donald M. Nelson, Chairman, War Production Board.

From Lou E. Holland, Deputy Chairman, War Production Board.

REPORT ON THE ACTIVITIES OF SMALLER WAR PLANTS DIVISION AND SMALLER WAR PLANTS CORPORATION DURING THE LAST 60 DAYS

It is with a good deal of pleasure that I submit this report of our activities during the last 60 days. The agreements and understandings which we perfected with the armed services and other Government procurement agencies as a result of long and arduous negotiations are now proving their worth. Contract placements during the past 60 days and especially during the past few weeks clearly indicate that these negotiations have provided a firm foundation for an increasing volume of business which is rapidly being built.

The operations of both the Division and the Corporation have gathered momentum.

Many vexatious problems with which these organizations were confronted during their formative days have been cleared away. And many fields which were not originally open to us we have now entered with confidence.

1. PRIME CONTRACTS TAKEN BY THE SMALLER WAR PLANTS CORPORATION

The Smaller War Plants Corporation, acting pursuant to the provisions of section 4 (f) of the act approved June 11, 1942 (Public Law 603, 77th Cong.), has taken its first prime contract. It is with the Federal Public Housing Authority for metal and wood furniture for dormitory apartments, single house dwellings, multifamily dwellings, infirmaries, nurseries, and cafeterias, valued at $20,000,000. At the present time Grand Rapids, Mich., is one of the more distressed cities in the country and has a large bank of unemployed, many of whom own their own homes and are now out of work as a consequence of the necessary curtailment of civilian furniture production and cancelation of other war contracts in that area. This prime contract was taken by the Corporation to insure our ability to take care of the need of Grand Rapids for contracts on a wholesale basis as an experimental project designed to relieve community distress occasioned by the war.

The subcontracts for the production of the items called for by this prime contract have not yet been awarded. Our next bimonthly report will include the names of the subcontractors and the amounts involved.

2. FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO SMALL CONCERNS

The Smaller War Plants Corporation by February 6, 1943, had received 230 applications for financial assistance totaling $22,458,523.57. Loans made through December 5, 1942, by the Smaller War Plants Corporation were reported to the Congress, as required by section 5 of the Smaller War Plants Act, Public Law 603, Seventy-seventh Congress, in the report of December 11, 1942. During the period December 6, 1942, through February 6, 1943, both dates inclusive, agreements to make the following 38 loans, totaling $2,568,770, have been entered into by the Corporation:

Together with the 12 loans totaling $605,500, reported in the third bimonthly report, the Smaller War Plants Corporation to date has approved a total of 50 loans for an aggregate of $3,174,270. Four other applications for loans totaling $497,000 have been approved subject to conditions which have not been complied with by the applicant. The names of the concerns and the amounts of these loans will be included in a subsequent report.

In addition to making loans, the Corporation is empowered "to purchase or lease such land, to purchase, lease, build, or expand such plants, and to purchase or produce such equipment, facilities, machinery, materials, or supplies as may be needed to enable the Corporation to provide small business concerns with such land, plants, equipment, facilities, machinery, materials, or supplies as such concerns may require to engage in the production of such articles, equipment, supplies, or materials," and "to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of to any small business concern any such land, plants, equipment, facilities, machinery, materials, or supplies."

To February 6, 1943, the Corporation has approved the purchase of $559,780.50 worth of equipment and facilities for lease to 14 concerns. The concerns involved and the amounts of equipment to be leased to them follow:

To enable the Smaller War Plants Corporation to provide small business concerns with equipment, facilities, machinery, material, supplies, rights, and services required to engage in war production, the Corporation has let a contract to the Pedersen Arms Corporation, Springfield, Mass., for the development and production of drawings and specifications for the fixtures, tools, and gages needed for the manufacture by small business concerns of a rifle. This contract is let at cost, without payment of a fee, and cost is estimated at approximately $100,000.

3. CONTRACTS ARRANGED BY THE SMALLER WAR PLANTS DIVISION

Although the War Production Board Smaller War Plants Division has no procurement powers, it does recommend small business concerns and assist them in their negotiations to obtain contracts from Government procurement agencies. To February 5, 1943, 1,191 firms recommended by the Division had received prime contracts totaling $195,400,000.

The overwhelming portion of these contracts have been consummated in the last 60 days, although in some cases the Division has been actively engaged for several months in the negotiations leading to them. The number of small business concerns obtaining contracts through our direct efforts in the last 60 days has increased more than fourfold, and the dollar volume more than sixfold over what we were able to previously report.

Of the contracts arranged by the Division to date, 84 percent are with the various supply services of the Army. More than half the dollar volume of the Army contracts are with the Ordnance Department. Both the Quartermaster Corps and the Air Corps are, however, the source of considerable additional volumes. The Navy bureaus, all of which are represented, account for 11 percent and other procurement agencies, principally Treasury Procurement, for 5 percent of the total dollar volume.

As a result of the Division's activities all of the wooden cargo truck bodies scheduled for 1943 are being produced in plants operated by small business concerns. During 1942 most of these bodies were produced by chassis builders. Late in the year educational orders were obtained by the Division for 37 concerns. The 1943 orders were placed with 28 of the 37 participating in the educational orders. The importance of this shift goes beyond the fact that small concerns have been given business which they can handle. It has also operated to change the locality of the work from overcrowded production centers to areas distressed through lack of employment.

The Division also was instrumental in the placing of contracts for 262 barges with 9 concerns located along the Mississippi River, the Gulf and the Atlantic coasts. An additional 25 barges have been reserved for a production group made up of small boatbuilding yards located in Florida.

The contracts arranged by the Division include a wide variety of items, including textiles, medicines, hardware, small tools, ordnance, aircraft and ship parts, and packaging.

During the past 60 days the placement of more than $75,000,000 in subcontracts has been reported to our Washington office.

4. INCREASED OPERATIONS THROUGH FIELD OFFICES

On February 1, 1943, operations were started on a program worked out jointly with the Services of Supply of the United States Army for decentralizing our prime contract placement activities. Previously, distressed firms capable of handling specific procurements have been recommended by the Washington office of the Division to the Washington office of the procurement services. Under the new program, recommendations of small distressed firms will be made by our regional offices directly to the field offices of the various divisions of the Services of Supply.

After the Division obtains a specific procurement from one of the services of supply, it is allocated among the 12 War Production Board regions according to the available capacity and needs of the distressed plants in the various regions. It is then up to the Deputy Regional Directors for Smaller War Plants to obtain, through their district offices, information on the capacities and needs of distressed plants located in their region and to recommend such of these distressed plants as are capable of producing the procurement item in question directly to the procurement services' field offices through a Division liaison man stationed there.

Although this plan has been in operation for only a few days, there has already been allocated, from among the procurements which have arisen during this short interval, to the various War Production Board regions procurements totaling $14,400,000.

5. ACTIVITIES OF THE PROCUREMENT AGENCIES

Pursuant to section 2 (7) of the Small Business Act (Public Law 603, Seventy-seventh Congress), I have requested the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Maritime Commissioner to provide each month a tabulation of the contracts let by their respective agencies, classified by the size of concern to which the contract is let. The size of the concern is to be measured by the number of employees.

While these tabulations are being prepared by the Navy Department and the Maritime Commission results are not yet available. Such tabulations have been obtained from the seven supply services of the Services of Supply and the Air Corps.

During the months of November and December 1942 seven supply services of the Services of Supply awarded 61,507 contracts for a total value of $3,543,447,000. Of this total 43,065 contracts for $846,177,000 were awarded to firms employing fewer than 500 employees. This means that during these 2 months 24.9 percent of the dollar volume of price contracts let by these seven supply services went to concerns employing fewer than 500 employees.

Since the major procurement of the Air Corps are complete planes, it appears that small concerns can best participate in aircraft production through subcontracting. Only a small fraction of the total Air Corps procurement is suitable for production in plants operated by smaller business concerns on a prime contract basis. During November and December 1942 a total of 1,314 contracts amounting to $76,789,000 were awarded to concerns employing fewer than 500 employees. For the 2 months this represented only 2.5 percent of the total dollar volume of contracts awarded by the Air Corps. It is significant, however, that the share of the total dollar volume of contracts going to firms employing fewer than 100 employees increased by 175.0 percent from November to December.

6. DIVISION REPRESENTATION ON POLICY BOARDS

On January 13, 1943, General Administrative Order No. 2-68 was amended to include among the membership of the Procurement Policy Board a member appointed by the deputy chairman on Smaller War Plants. This board is concerned primarily with the policy problems which simultaneously involve more than one procurement agency and continuously reviews the performance of the respective agencies in carrying out policy determinations. The principal policy determinations regarding procurement are embodied in directive No. 2, amended. This directive issued by the chairman of the War Production Board establishes the order of importance of the criteria which must be considered in the placement of contracts by all Government procurement agencies.

One of the activities of the War Production Board Procurement Policy Division was to establish by Division Administrative Order 509-4, dated January 11, 1943, a Critical Labor Area Appeals Board. Two representatives of the Smaller War Plants Division are included on this Board. Its function is to advise the Director of Procurement Policy with respect to request that he authorize the placement of war-procurement contracts with particular firms or in particular localities located in areas which have been certified by the War Manpower Commission to be areas of acute labor shortages. The absence of such an appeals board would mean that plants located in critical labor areas, as defined by the War Manpower Commission, would be precluded from obtaining contracts except in the special situations where comparable productive facilities were not elsewhere obtainable.

On invitation the Smaller War Plants Division appointed a representative to sit on the Controlled Materials Board. This Board reviews and advises in the development of revisions of the controlled materials plan, and in the developments and procedures for effectuating the plan. It is not necessary to elaborate on the importance of materials to small concerns holding war contracts.

7. SPECIAL PROGRAMS

In several cases small concerns can best participate in war production through subcontracting and this has required the establishment of procedures in organizational units for handling these subcontracting activities on a Nation-wide rather than a district or regional basis.

We have established, in cooperation with the Navy, a shipbuilding unit located in Boston. It is the duty of this unit to assist in selecting from the requirements of the shipyards working on the Government shipbuilding program items suitable for subcontracting in the various War Production Board regions. Small concerns can effectively participate in the production of the many components of a ship although they are not in a position to undertake the construction of a complete ship.

About the same situation obtains in the Air Corps although in this case much Government-furnished equipment can be undertaken by small concerns on a prime contracting basis. Consequently, we have established a branch of our Washington office at Wright Field. This branch is in constant contact with the Army Air Corps procurement officers and works with them both in selecting items suitable for production by small concerns either on a prime or subcontracting basis.

The Navy Department has examined its list of requirements for the coming months and selected a list of items which they believe suitable for production by small concerns. The Smaller War Plants Division has transmitted this list to its field offices and is obtaining information on the availability of facilities for the production of these items, which are valued at approximately $67,000,000.

8. SMALL PLANTS IN CRITICAL LABOR AREAS

As a result of my appearance before the War Manpower Commission and repeated negotiations with procurement officials, smaller concerns located in critical labor areas are now systematically allowed to receive war contracts when (1) their current number of employees is 100 or less, and (2) when the circumstances surrounding the award are such that the Smaller War Plants Division certifies the concern for the contract.

9. DISTRESSED CONCERNS

In a recent series of news releases we asked all distressed concerns to provide us with simple, basic information regarding their present business condition and their ability to produce war or essential civilian products. The responses have been numerous. We are now organizing this information with a view to directing the attention of officers of the Government having procurement powers to the productive capacity and needs of plants operated by smaller concerns as directed in section 2 (2) of the act approved June 11, 1942 (Public Law 603, 77th Cong.). Of necessity the availability of this information is restricted to officers of the Government directly concerned with the placement of contracts.

FEBRUARY 2, 1943.

Subject: Examination of files of the War Production Board relating to the Smaller War Plants Division and Corporation.

Files of the following divisions of the War Production Board have been examined by committee investigators:

1. Smaller War Plants Division.
2. Smaller War Plants Corporation.
3. Office of Assistant to the Chairman (Mr. Sidney J. Weinberg).
4. Files of the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the War Production Board (Donald M. Nelson, William L. Batt).
5. Program Vice Chairman (Ferdinand Eberstadt).
6. Files of Director General for Operations (Ernest Kanzler and Curtis Calder).
7. Files of Deputy Director General for Operations in charge of field offices (Wade T. Childress).
8. Planning committee (Robert R. Nathan, Chairman).

The files of the Smaller War Plants Corporation and Smaller War Plants Division of the War Production Board disclosed the following:

On June 11, 1942; Public Law 603 was enacted. This law created the Smaller War Plants Corporation, the principal purposes of which were to accept prime contracts and subcontract them among small business, and negotiate loans with small business firms and plants throughout the country, thereby bringing such organizations into war production and production for essential civilian needs; and created a deputy chairman of the War Production Board to head up a Smaller War Plants Division in that agency.

On July 10, 1942, Mr. Lou Holland was selected by the Chairman of the War Production Board to become Deputy Chairman of the War Production Board on Smaller War Plants. Mr. Holland was also selected as a director of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The first meeting of the Smaller War Plants Corporation was held on July 16, at which time Mr. Holland was elected Chairman of the Corporation by the board of directors. Mr. William S. Shipley was elected Vice Chairman of the Corporation, the other members of which were Mr. S. Abbott Smith, Mr. Albert M. Carter, and Mr. James T. Howington. At the first meeting of the board of directors the general organization was discussed and preliminary plans were made for formulating policies.

On July 28, at Mr. Holland's request, Mr. Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, called a meeting attended by the following representatives of Government departments:

War: Robert P. Patterson, Under Secretary; Brig. Gen. William Harrison, Director of Procurement.

Navy: James G. Forrestal, Under Secretary; Admiral Robinson; Capt. W. A. Buck; Frank B. Folson.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Jesse Jones and John Snyder.

United States Maritime Commission: Col. W. Rockwell and Charles E. Walsh, Jr.

At this meeting Mr. Holland stated the objectives of the Smaller War Plants Division and the Smaller War Plants Corporation. He stressed the fact that the law did not give him any procurement powers and that the success of the smaller-plants program would have to depend upon the complete cooperation of the procuring agencies of the Government.

The offer of fullest cooperation was extended by the officials from each of the agencies present at the meeting and each agency designated certain officials to work with Mr. Holland in developing an over-all plan of operation. Daily meetings were held for a period of approximately 1½ months during which each agency presented suggested plans and discussed the most appropriate methods by which the program could be carried forward.

In order to supplement the views of the representatives of the American agencies, Mr. Holland requested that an official of the British Government having the most knowledge of the small business problems in England be brought to the United States and asked to participate in the meetings being held for the purpose of formulating the program. Mr. Holland was of the opinion that such an official could make a real contribution in developing the program. Mr. A. Hedley Williams arrived from England in time to attend the major portion of the meetings during this period.

Coincident with the meetings held with representatives of the procuring agencies, Mr. Holland sought to have the established procedure of the War Production Board regarding the creation of a new division carried out. This procedure requires that the chairman must issue an order creating such a division and outlining its duties and functions. Nine drafts of such an order were prepared for submission to the Chairman of the War Production Board before one was finally approved on September 8, 1942. This was identified as Administrative Order 2–51. The draft which was finally approved, however, was criticized by Mr. Holland, who thought it was inadequate to accomplish the mandates of Congress contained in Public Law 603 creating the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The points upon which Mr. Holland disagreed with other officials of the War Production Board in the original draft were:

1. Control of Smaller War Plants Division field offices.

2. The existing Facilities Branch of the War Production Board.

3. Maintenance of personnel of the Contract Distribution Branch and the Bureau of Finance.

In connection with the control of field offices Mr. Holland took the position that unless his field men reported directly to him the projected program could not succeed. He was overruled by the Administrative Order 2–51.

It appears, however, that Mr. Holland's contention was sound as on January 7, 1943, the Chairman of the War Production Board signed an order amending 2–51, by which amendment control of field activities and personnel were placed directly under the Deputy Chairman in charge of the Smaller War Plants Division.

The duties and functions of the Facilities Branch of the War Production Board were and are now identical with those outlined in Public Law No. 603. This has resulted in a duplication of work by that branch and the Smaller War Plants Division which has not yet been remedied. On August 13, 1942, Mr. Holland wrote to Mr. Nelson and asked for a decision regarding who should have control of the Facilities Branch. No reply was received.

The original draft of Administrative Order 2–51 provided that the entire personnel of the Contract Distribution Branch and the Bureau of Finance should be taken over by the Smaller War Plants Division. This was finally changed in the last draft to provide that only the duties and functions of the above-mentioned offices would be taken over by the Smaller War Plants Division. The objection to incorporating the personnel of these offices in the Smaller War Plants Division was twofold, namely, the lack of qualifications on the part of a large number of these people and the feeling that because of previous unsatisfactory relationships with procuring agencies their approach to the procurement offices would upset the cordial relations in the process of development at that time by the deputy chairman of the Smaller War Plants Division.

After the duties and functions of the Smaller War Plants Division had been set forth in Administrative Order No. 2–51 on September 8, 1942, daily conferences with representatives of the various branches of the Government interested in procurement were continued and on September 24, 1942, formal agreements were reached with the War Department and the Maritime Commission outlining the manner in which these departments would cooperate with the Smaller War Plants Division in spreading contracts among the smaller companies of the country. A similar agreement was reached with the Navy Department on October 27, 1942. The Navy had objected to certain language in the agreements entered into by the other agencies. These agreements were used by the departments mentioned as the basis for directives which were issued to their procurement officers all over the country, and it was not until such directives had been issued that any aggressive steps could be taken to channel Government contracts to small business.

In Administrative Order No. 2–51, it was provided that the Deputy Chairman of the War Production Board in charge of the Smaller War Plants Division would be a member of the committee on concentration of production. The Smaller War Plants Division also endeavored to obtain representation on the Procurement Policy Board of the War Production Board, but it was not until January 11, 1943, that such representation was granted. A similar effort has been made to obtain representation on the Controlled Materials Board. While these efforts started in August 1942, no adequate representation has been obtained as yet.

In his biweekly report dated January 12, 1943, to the Chairman of the War Production Board, Mr. Holland, Deputy Chairman, said that two of the major impediments to the successful operation of the Smaller War Plants Division at the end of the year have now been removed. He was referring to the General Administrative Order No. 2–75, of January 7, which gave the Smaller War Plants Division control over their field offices and to the Division Administrative Order No. 509–4, dated January 11, which gave the Smaller War Plants Division representation on the critical labor areas appeals board. He also pointed out that the next important step to be taken would be to provide the Smaller War Plants Division a definite place in the formulation of policies governing the Controlled Materials Board.

On January 19, 1943, the Chairman of the War Production Board announced at his press conference that Col. R. W. Johnson had been appointed Vice Chairman of the War Production Board in charge of Smaller War Plants Division. At the time he praised the work that had been done by Mr. Holland and stated his hope that he would remain as Colonel Johnson's assistant.

Mr. TRUMAN. An announcement was made through the White House on January 19 that a Col. Robert Wood Johnson had been appointed to the position of Vice Chairman of the War Production Board and Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. Mr. Sidney Weinberg, of the Wall Street banking firm of Goldman Sachs & Co., acting as personnel adviser for the War Production Board, had been seeking this appointment for Colonel Johnson last June. Colonel Johnson may be a fine gentleman for all I know, although I distinctly was not impressed by the reports concerning Colonel Johnson which I found had been made to Sidney Weinberg by his own investigators.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the able Senator is not informed, is he, as to whether or not the President personally wanted to approve the appointment or in reality to appoint Colonel Johnson to this position some time ago, but Colonel Johnson was not disposed even to accept it; so that the initiative in this matter came as much from the President as it did from Mr. Weinberg?

Mr. TRUMAN. The Senator is much more in the confidence of those who know about that than I am. My files show the whole proceeding.

But whether Johnson is or is not qualified, I can see no reason for replacing Holland who has been successful in obtaining the cooperation of the procurement agencies, which is vitally necessary for the success of any program in the interest of small business, just when he has been granted the power to achieve the job that Congress wants done.

Moreover, Mr. Johnson is one of those businessmen who, although never a Regular Army officer, has been made a colonel in the Ordnance Corps, and as such is subject to orders from the Service of Supply of the Army, the most important procurement agency with which he will have to deal.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. TRUMAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand that Johnson is still in the Army and under Army orders?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes; he is still wearing an Army uniform and still subject to the orders of the Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. LUCAS. And, as a colonel in the Army, he is now accepting the job of vice president of the War Production Board?

Mr. TRUMAN. He is signing all his mail "Colonel, Ordnance, Vice Chairman, War Production Board."

Mr. LUCAS. How could that be? How a man could serve in such a dual capacity I cannot understand.

Mr. TRUMAN. Neither can I.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. TRUMAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. It is my advice that Colonel Johnson stated this morning that he was on assignment to this job while he holds his present commission as a colonel in the Army, having been for a number of years, some 10 or 12 years, a Reserve officer in the Army; and he has been back in the service in uniform for about a year. I understand no longer than this morning he stated, in response to inquiry, that, while he still is assigned to this position and retains his status as an Army officer, if he finds it conflicts with the performance of his duties in the way he thinks proper, he is prepared to resign his commission in the service.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator from Illinois may be pardoned a further observation, I think Colonel Johnson ought to resign now because I cannot see how——

Mr. TRUMAN. Will the Senator allow me to elaborate on that point?

Mr. LUCAS. Very well.

Mr. TRUMAN. I want to yield to all Senators, but I desire to make a point in connection with this vital matter, and then I desire the Senator from Illinois to continue his remarks because they will fit in with what I have to say.

I do not object to businessmen being retained in the Army and Navy to handle procurement because we all know that procurement is a business function and not a military function at all, and that only businessmen can handle the job of placing orders and obtaining factory production. But I do object to such men parading in uniform. I believe that uniforms should be reserved for the purpose for which they were adopted; namely, to distinguish the combatants on the field of battle.

There is no more reason for putting an officer's uniform on a businessman ordering trucks for subsequent Army use than there is for putting a soldier's uniform on the mechanics in the factory producing the trucks. These so-called officers are not interested in military or naval careers and, of course, expect to take their jobs back after the war. Some of them still draw pay or other emoluments from the big companies from which they came.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not take any issue whatsoever with the distinguished Senator from Missouri, but he is certainly misjudging a very patriotic man when he levels criticism at Bob Johnson.

Mr. TRUMAN. I do not know Mr. Johnson personally, I will say to the Senator. I never saw him more than once.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will permit me to make a brief statement now, I shall comment at length a little later. Colonel Johnson was a reserve officer, but in active business. He was invited to come to Washington to take a responsible assignment. He came a little over a year ago. He was detached from the office here and sent to New York, to the New York Ordnance Office, to clean up and to clear up a situation there which had grown somewhat unsatisfactory from the standpoint of the Army.

I happen to know that he was not an applicant, and had no desire on earth to be assigned to the work of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. He came here, having gone definitely into the Army, and having been in service some months, he was detached for this particular service, and is here performing it. Mr. Johnson is a citizen of New Jersey. He is not a resident of my State.

Mr. TRUMAN. I understand he is a potential candidate for the Republican nomination for governor in New Jersey.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; Mr. Johnson is a Democrat. If all the Senator's information is as incorrect as that, then he is very badly informed.

Mr. TRUMAN. I understand he is a liberal Republican, that he is a New Deal Republican.

Mr. GEORGE. He is not a resident of my State, as I have said, but he is the managing head of Johnson & Johnson, the makers of Red Cross surgical and hospital supplies.

I undertake to say that Mr. Johnson is a very liberal-minded man. I have known him for a long time. He is not always agreed with me with respect to policies. He is definitely supporting the liberal government in New Jersey, and he is not a candidate for any office. I am quite sure he would never become a candidate while he wore the uniform of the American Army.

Mr. President, I do not know what information may have come to the committee, but whatever record leaps to light, Bob Johnson never will be ashamed. There is not a more honorable man in any vocation or calling in these United States.

Mr. TRUMAN. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that I am making no attack on the character or ability of Colonel Johnson. I am attacking the system which has placed Colonel Johnson in what I think is a very embarrassing position.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not see that he is placed in an embarrassing position, and that is what I wanted to say. He is in the Army.

Mr. TRUMAN. He has no business in this job, if he is going to stay in the Army. That is my opinion, and that has been the thing I have been fighting ever since I have been chairman of the special committee. I think this is a civilian program. Production and procurement is entirely a civilian program.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be true, Mr. President. Congress created the program. But an officer in the Army, and with special fitness for a particular job, who goes where he is assigned in response to an assignment, in my opinion should not be criticized because of that fact. I cannot quite appreciate such a ground of criticism. If there is anyone in this country who can do a job in this position, I will not say Colonel Johnson is the only one, but I will say that he is one of those men who can do the job. That is why he is in the position, not from his choice, not from his desire.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I understand the criticism of my colleague, it is not directed at Colonel Johnson personally.

Mr. TRUMAN. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is no reflection on Colonel Johnson's capacity as a private businessman or as an Army officer. As I understand my colleague's criticism, it is directed to the fact that it has been an acknowledged policy of the United States Army to put the small businessman out of commission, that it has been the acknowledged policy of the War Department to let their contracts to a few big contractors, that the policy of the W. P. B., as announced, as enacted by Congress in setting up the agency of which Mr. Holland was the head, was to counteract that policy and undertake to preserve small business.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If I understand my colleague's position correctly, it is that no Army officer, no matter how honorable, can possibly act under the War Department and carry out the purposes of the small business agency which Congress thought it was setting up.

Mr. TRUMAN. How can he place an order for a piece of ordnance, if the major general who is the Chief of Ordnance tells him to put it somewhere else? He has not a chance to do anything except what he is ordered to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know Colonel Johnson——

Mr. TRUMAN. Nor do I. He came to see me once, and asked me not to make this speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know Mr. Holland; so far as I recall, I never saw him; but I have heard some things which disturbed me a little about Colonel Johnson's attitude toward small business, and I hope the rumors are not well founded, if he is to be the head of the Smaller War Plants Corporation.

As I understand, Colonel Johnson inherited Johnson & Johnson, or a large part of it, which is the largest concern in the world manufacturing surgical appliances and surgical supplies of various kinds. I understand he was in charge of the New York area for some six months in the distribution of contracts; that the Chief of the Quartermaster Department, General Somervell, had sent over to New York recommendations concerning the awarding of contracts to small corporations, under the Act of Congress and in the pursuance of the policy which was supposed to be the purpose of Congress in the enactment of the law, but that Colonel Johnson diverted those contracts from small corporations to large corporations within that area. I do not know whether those rumors are correct. I do not wish in any way to charge Colonel Johnson with any such diversion of the instructions of what I suppose would be regarded as his superior Army officer, but if that has been his attitude, it would disturb me considerably.

Mr. TRUMAN. I cannot verify what the Senator has said. I never have heard of that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator give me any information about it?

Mr. TRUMAN. I cannot answer the Senator, because I have no information on the subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me ask the Senator another question. I am also informed—and I do not know whether the information is correct—that even today a conference has been in progress looking toward the elimination of all the members of the board of directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation and the substitution of Army officers and dollar-a-year men for them on the board to conduct the affairs of the Smaller War Plants Corporation.

Mr. TRUMAN. I am reliably informed that the Senator is correct in that surmise, that it is intended to fill the directorate with dollar-a-year men, and that the chief assistants of Colonel Johnson will be Army and Navy men, I am informed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a statement?

Mr. TRUMAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In response to what the able senior Senator from Kentucky just said by way of inquiry, I may say that the chairman of the Small Business Committee, the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], being obliged to be absent from the Senate today, asked me, as a member of the committee, to attend to this matter when it came up, and to express some of the views he personally entertains, and state some of the knowledge he has gained as chairman of the Small Business Committee.

I may say that it is my information from that source that Colonel Johnson, instead of diverting directions for procurement to larger business enterprises, increased the number of subcontractors in the New York office, and worked out a tying of the New York Ordnance Office with the Smaller War Plants Corporation in a way to elicit the commendation of the Small Business Committee of the Senate.

I can attest that the Senator from Montana, and I know other members of the committee, feel very favorably toward Colonel Johnson, although they have no disparagement whatever to offer against Mr. Holland. It is their advice from other sources, as it is my advice from them, that the President several months ago asked Colonel Johnson if he would not take this job, and that he declined it, but later on he did agree to accept it, so that Colonel Johnson is not in any sense a seeker after the place.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I should like to say, if I may, that I do not think the President ought to be brought into this matter at all. I think this is a conspiracy on the part of the War Production Board to break up the Smaller War Plants Corporation, and I think it was engineered in Sidney Weinberg's office, because he wanted Colonel Johnson put in there in the first place. I do not think the President did anything but follow the advice of the persons upon whom he relied when this appointment was made.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does not the Senator know from his own files that that is the fact?

Mr. TRUMAN. That is the fact.

Mr. LUCAS. When back last June Weinberg wrote Johnson to that effect?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Apparently the President did not know anything at all about it at that time.

Mr. TRUMAN. I do not think he did.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator yield for one further observation?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Discussion occurred a moment ago as to the intent of the new organization to place Army officers alongside Colonel Johnson as members of this Board.

Mr. TRUMAN. No; not as members of the Board. As I understand, they expect to put dollar-a-year men in as members of the Board, but Colonel Johnson's assistants will be men in uniform from the Army and the Navy. They will be under his direction. They will not be members of the Board.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I agree completely with both Senators from Missouri with respect to the dual capacity in which Johnson is operating, as vice president of the War Production Board and head of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. Colonel Johnson cannot serve two masters and he should resign from one place or the other. He should not accept both positions.

With respect to small business, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, if he knows, what the capital stock is, for instance, of Johnson & Johnson?

Mr. TRUMAN. I cannot answer the question. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has left the Senate Chamber. I thought perhaps he might be able to answer. I can get that information, however, and place it in the RECORD.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to read into the RECORD what Congress intended when it passed the legislation setting up this Corporation:

> The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of five directors, deemed to be familiar with the problems of small business, to be appointed by the Chairman of the War Production Board. The board of directors shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among the members of the board.

It is my understanding that Holland was selected by the members of the board originally appointed by Mr. Nelson, and I am wondering if the present board has had anything to do with the selection of Johnson as the new chairman to succeed Holland.

Mr. TRUMAN. No; not a thing in the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will my colleague yield again?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is a fact, is it not, that the only criticism of Mr. Holland that has come from any source whatever is simply on the ground that he thought Congress actually meant what it said, and in carrying out the intent of the Congress in essence he was actually trying to help small business.

Mr. TRUMAN. I think that is true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There has been no criticism of lack of zeal on his part. As I understand, there is nothing in anything he has done that could be properly criticized, except that he actually thought Congress meant what it said.

Mr. TRUMAN. I think that is true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that he actually was trying to help the small businessman. My colleague is familiar with the fact, of course, as I am in my own State at least, that under the policy of the War Department the so-called prime contracts have in many cases been made with big concerns which are not at all engaged in the business involved, but which have in turn sublet the contracts. For example, a concern engaged in making steel casings may have received a prime contract, and then let out subcontracts for wood cabinet work. That is an extreme example; but that has been the policy of the War Department. I cannot to save my life understand how an Army officer, who is necessarily subject to that policy of the War Department, can oppose the policy of the War Department, and protect small business.

Mr. TRUMAN. I agree thoroughly with my colleague, and I want to thank him most sincerely for his addition to the record.

I wish to continue further and say that if we are going to continue the policy of appointing uniformed men for these jobs, there is no use in our making any effort to try to keep the procurement and production program in the hands of the civilian set-up of the Government.

Mr. President, even if we are to continue that practice, as the Army men urge, there is no justification whatever for allowing these businessmen to retain their Army uniform and rank when they are administrating a civilian agency of the Government, in which they are charged with the duty of acting independently and sometimes in opposition to the Army and Navy. If that kind of thing is going to be permitted, we will gradually be placing all functions in this country under the military, contrary to the principles of the Constitution.

For the above reasons I do not believe that an Army officer should be placed in charge of the Smaller War Plants program to do the job that a civilian is now performing in a successful manner. I believe that this contemplated change will disrupt the present progress and retard the participation of small business in the war program. Also I believe that the contacts between small business and the Navy and the Maritime Commission should not be assigned to an Army officer.

The War Production Board has altogether too many persons whose business apparently is to pull down men like Holland who have the guts to do a job. In examining various files in regard to the Holland situation, I was surprised and disgusted at the smallness of some supposedly "big men."

Mr. Charles Wilson, who, in my opinion, has done a fine job to date, is being made the same sort of a victim as Mr. Holland, and unless the Chairman of the War Production Board is willing to back up his good men and eliminate the utterly selfish conspirators with whom he has permitted himself to be surrounded, the country's entire war effort will suffer.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. BOREN, Mr. BECKWORTH, Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey, and Mr. BROWN of Ohio were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

UNITED NATIONS POST-WAR PEACE CHARTER

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I am aware that a number of Senators desire to address the Senate on the subject matter which has been under consideration. I have sought recognition to discuss an entirely different subject matter, but in order that Senators may have an opportunity of discussing the matter which has just been discussed, at a time when the subject matter is clear in their minds, I shall ask unanimous consent that a short address which I intended to make may be printed in the RECORD as having been delivered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, much as I regret to do so, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Objection is heard.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was going to remark in that connection, that I recall that last fall a very unhappy situation resulted from such action. What the Senator has requested to have done is not in accordance with the procedure of the Senate, and much as I admire the great Senator from Iowa, I shall have to object in his case and in every other similar case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, of course, I appreciate the reason for the position taken by the very able minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he does not understand that there will be any objection to the statement being printed in the RECORD as a statement, if the Senator from Iowa desires to have that done.

Mr. McNARY. It may be printed as a statement, but not as having been delivered. That is what I objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Oregon would not object if the Senator from Iowa should ask to have the statement printed in type which would indicate that it was merely a statement, and not a speech delivered on the floor.

Mr. GILLETTE. With that understanding of the rule, and the further thought that my only purpose was to show some courtesy to those who desired to discuss the matter previously under consideration, I prefer to proceed with my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, a week ago today I introduced in the Senate a Senate resolution which in some respects may be unique in legislative history. The resolution is known as Senate Resolution 91. At the time of the introduction I purposely refrained from discussion of the proposal on the floor, because of the unusual features which seemed to pertain in the wording of the resolution. In brief, the resolution expresses the approval by the United States Senate of the cardinal principles and purposes of the joint declaration made on the 14th of August 1941 by President Roosevelt of the United States and Prime Minister Churchill of Great Britain and popularly known as the Atlantic Charter.

There is, of course, nothing unique or unusual in this declaration of approval, but the resolution further provides that the Senate advises and urges the President of the United States to take early action to negotiate, formulate, and make a joint treaty agreement with each and all of the United Nations subscribing to a joint declaration dated January 1, 1942, and it further urges and advises that such formal treaty enunciate and stress certain enumerated cardinal basic and fundamental principles as the basis for the policies and goals of the United Nations in the joint war enterprise in which they and we are now engaged.

Two main questions immediately present themselves in connection with this resolution. First, is it essential or even advisable at this time for the United Nations to take such action as proposed? Second, if it is advisable, is the adoption of such a resolution as the one proposed the proper method or channel of approach to the contemplated action? I shall discuss these two questions in reverse order to the one in which I have just stated them.

Is the proposed resolution a constitutional and proper course to initiate the desired action for the attainment of the desired goal?

There is widespread belief and conclusion throughout our Nation that the conduct of our international relations and affairs is assigned by the provisions of the Federal Constitution to the executive department of the Nation. This general belief is understandable, and the conclusion has much of justification in the sequence of acts and policies that have almost universally been followed and almost universally acquiesced in for over a century of our history. Recently, however, there have been heard, both in and out of the Congress, rumblings of question, mutterings of interrogation, as to where the Federal Constitution has actually placed the exercise of power and responsibility in the field of international relations, and it is certainly advisable that in the welter of action and opinion which will surely be incident to the readjustments of the world's political, financial, industrial, commercial, and rehabilitation economy after this war's close, there should be no fog of dispute, no haze of indecision, no mist of contention in these essential matters so far as our Nation is concerned.

The more I reread and ponder that most remarkable document, the Constitution of the United States, the more I am impressed with the superlative and almost inspired wisdom of the constitutional fathers. In the Constitutional Convention they pondered long and they debated long; but the words and sentences of the final document were unbelievably brief and concise when one considers the magnitude and scope of this great organic document. Every word was chosen with meticulous care. Each such choice had a purpose and a coordinated relationship with every other word and sentence throughout the document. Not a word was used for the purpose of embellishment or rhetorical adornment. Not a word was wasted, and not an opportunity left for misconstruction.

If it had been the purpose or desire of the framers of the Constitution to place the handling of our foreign relations entirely in the executive department, how easily this could have been clearly stated in one brief sentence similar in form to these which appear in the Constitution: "The Executive power shall be vested in the President of the United States." "He shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States." "He shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States." But, Mr. President, one may search the Federal Constitution from Preamble to the last added amendment, and no such authority to conduct the foreign affairs of the Nation was given to the executive department. I am fully aware that many able writers have said that such grant of power in expressed terms was unnecessary, and that such power is inherent in a sovereign administrator. But our Constitution contains no grant of power to any governmental agency wherein that delegated authority could be construed as inherent or subject to constructional enlargement; and to make assurance doubly sure they added the Tenth Amendment to obviate any question whatever as to the residuary of inherent power and authority.

Let us quickly review the constitutional provisions which deal with international relationships. Section 8 of article I gives to the Congress the following powers: To regulate commerce with foreign nations; to establish uniform rules of naturalization; to regulate the value of foreign coin; to declare war; to grant letters of marque and reprisal; and to make rules concerning captures on land and water. Section 9 of article I especially provides that no State shall enter into any agreement or compact with a foreign power, with certain limitations, without—and mark this well—the consent of Congress.

Now let us turn to the judicial branch of the Government. Article VI provides that the Constitution, the laws adopted under it, and all treaties shall be the supreme law of the land, while section 2 of article III confers on the judiciary original jurisdiction of cases arising under treaties and all cases affecting Ambassadors, Ministers, and consuls. The same section confers jurisdiction on the judicial authority in cases between a State and citizens of another State and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign states, citizens, or subjects.

The only provision in the Constitution which confers Executive authority with reference to the conduct of foreign affairs other than as Commander in Chief of the military forces in time of war is found in section 2 of article II:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court—

And so forth.

It will be well worth our while to analyze carefully the language under which these authorities were delegated and conferred on the executive department. First, with reference to the selection of Ambassadors, Ministers, and so forth, where was the authority to initiate these selections placed? In the President of the United States, and in him alone. There were four steps to be taken before an Ambassador, Minister, or consul could enter upon his official duties. First, he was to be nominated. No right or vestige of right can possibly be construed to be vested in the Senate or in any other agency of the Nation other than the President himself, to initiate action for the selection of these foreign ministers. The President shall nominate; that is the genesis of the action, and it is more than probable that this exclusive right to take initial action was placed in the President in order to remove that primary step as far as possible from the field of partisan or sectional contention. By no possible construction or misconstruction could the Senate initiate or nominate a man for one of these appointments. Even though the President should send up a hundred names and ask the Senate to consider the nomination, and each of those names should be rejected by the Senate, further initial action must still come from the authority where it was placed by the Constitution itself. It is understandable that with the right of the President to take the first step, a basis would thereby be laid for asking the Senate to advise and consent as to the name proposed, and if approved the appointment and qualification by oath would follow as the third and fourth steps requisite to these official selections.

In the treaty authority which was conferred by the same paragraph, however, no such provision was made for initial action by the President on which the advice and consent of the Senate could be based. Neither was there prohibition of the right of the Executive to take preliminary action. But the carefully chosen language states that the President shall have the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties. There is no preliminary step provided on which the advice and consent of the Senate can be predicated. To hold, therefore, that the Senate has no power to initiate action preliminary to the making of a treaty is to negate the clear purport of this constitutional provision. How could it be possible for the Senate to advise preliminary to the making of a treaty if it should be concluded that each initial action must come from the executive department? It seems to me beyond cavil that to deny to the Senate the right to initiate the negotiation of a treaty agreement in the way of advice to the Chief Executive is clear and unmistakable; and no plausible platitudes, no lulling lullabies of construction, and no soporific sophistries can relieve the United States Senate of such power and authority and consequent responsibility if such action is indicated. After this initial step, the power is clearly given to the President to take the next necessary steps to negotiate and bring into being the international agreements which become effective on final signature and Senate consent.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to refer very briefly to the advisability of taking such action as is contemplated in the resolution which I have introduced.

When our great President and the Prime Minister of Great Britain and Northern Ireland met on the 14th day of last August and announced to the world a categorical list of eight common principles in the national policies of their respective countries, and when the joint declarants made public statements in their respective countries and to their respective legislative authorities, each supporter of the philosophy that the peace and happiness of the world could be best conserved through the agency of representative democracies freely chosen felt a depth of joy and confidence in the triumph of our cause which could have come with equal potency in no other way. When on the 1st day of January 1943 the nations which are joined in this terrific war effort against the Axis Nations and their satellites, each and all approved the principles of the Atlantic Charter by signing an abbreviated statement of its principles and made specific pledges for joint war effort, there was renewed confidence in the success of our arms and the consummation of our purposes.

But, Mr. President, there continually come to our ears reports of mutterings and discontent in that the so-called Atlantic Charter has no legal, national, or international substance, and that it is binding on no one. Many of the great peoples of the Orient are seriously disturbed when agents of Japan call their attention—and, Mr. President, they do call their attention day after day—to the argument that the Atlantic Charter may not apply to the Pacific area, and that it is not a Pacific charter. They find themselves beset with doubts when these same Axis agents contend that the charter is simply an expression of opinion of two men who have never seen fit to submit it to their respective countries for action and approval. These same agents are assiduous indeed in directing attention to the high mortality rate of recent history in well-conceived and well-intended international peace plans and charters. They point with evil purpose to the graves of the Nine-Power Treaty, the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact, the League of Nations Covenants, and the lofty idealism of ex-President Wilson's 14 points of policy, and they ask our allies how much confidence they can place in enunciated opinions which have received no endorsement or authoritative approval of the nations for whom these refined and sublimated formulas for happiness were designed.

The resolution which I have introduced has a dual purpose: First, to set at rest, and if possible eliminate, the doubts of all nations associated with us in the honesty, integrity, and genuineness of purpose in the Atlantic Charter principles; second, to assure their confidence that those principles apply with equal force anywhere in the world; third, to give them added assurance that these policies and principles have the endorsement of all the United Nations and that they have been given legal substance through legislative action provided in the constitutions of the respective adherents.

I had intended, Mr. President, to discuss this particular purport of the resolution more at length, but my attention was called to an article which appeared in the February 8 issue of the Washington Star over the by-line of Dorothy Thompson. Miss Thompson discusses the resolution which I have introduced; and she so clearly, concisely, and completely points out certain values in the purpose of the resolution, that instead of longer detaining the Senate by a discussion at this time, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Dorothy Thompson be printed at this place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GILLETTE RESOLUTION REPRESENTS STEP TOWARD CLEAR POLICY FOR UNITED STATES AND FIGHTING ALLIES

(By Dorothy Thompson)

A short time ago in this column, I pointed out that one of the most distressing features in this war was the American uncertainty, the doubt in many minds whether, when the war was over, the United States would be counted on to participate in the reconstruction of the world. Over the heads of all our allies hovers the recollection of the last war, when President Wilson's peace was repudiated by Congress. So far, the Atlantic Charter is merely a personal declaration of President Roosevelt.

Now, Senator GILLETTE of Iowa has introduced in the Senate a resolution which would remedy this state of affairs. His resolution would instruct the President to make a joint treaty agreement with each and all of the United Nations, this treaty to embody the basic principles of the Atlantic Charter.

ASSURES CHOICE IN RULE

These are, first, that the signatories seek no aggrandizement, territorial or otherwise; second, that they respect and will approve the right of all people under proper opportunity to choose the form of government under which they will live, and will countenance the restoration of sovereign rights and self-government to those who have been deprived of it by force; third, that they will collaborate in formulating a just peace embodying formulae for post-war collaboration to maintain peace and security throughout the world; fourth, that they will recognize the necessity for just and equitable collaboration for all signatories to obtain for all nations economic advancement, improved labor standards, social security, and access on fair and equal terms by all peoples to the raw materials and international channels of the world.

The Senator suggests that such a treaty might be entitled "the United Nations post-war peace charter."

Since the present Congress probably will have to deal with the peace, and since as the whole world knows, it is by no means a "Roosevelt Congress," such a resolution would assure the world of what America as a whole is fighting for, and commit us now to collaboration for the future. At once the American uncertainty would be removed and the way be opened for a clear policy on the part of all the other fighting nations.

WOULD STABILIZE UNITED STATES

It would give the United States a foreign policy—not merely the State Department and the President. And the lack of a clear American foreign policy has been one of the most most disturbing factors in the world for the past generation.

The creation of such a treaty would have numerous consequences, all of them desirable.

First, it would remove the issue of foreign policy from the next elections. It would permit the American people to choose their representatives without fearing that changes might upset the whole world situation. It would remove the temptation to the opposition to use foreign policy as an issue merely for the sake of opposition and for wholly internal reasons.

Secondly, it would make clear to the world that our expediencies during the war are really just expediencies and no modification of fundamental war aims.

TO REASSURE BRITAIN, RUSSIA

Third, it would reassure Britain that she can base her own policy on permanent collaboration with the United States and must not, therefore, be hedging bets.

Fourth, it would reassure Russia that she must not make her own policy in anticipation of a possible reactionary reconstruction of Europe which would try to isolate her from collaboration. A permanent reconciliation between Russia and the western world would be implied.

It would mean that the eastern European powers would have to find their place in such a world, not as the outposts of an inimical western world against Russia, a situation which would be catastrophic for them and catastrophic for future peace, but would be in the favorable position of being a bridge between the western world and Russia, mutually guaranteed.

As far as Russia herself is concerned, it would mean that she would have to adopt a good-neighbor policy toward them. That this is not only possible but has been the traditional Russian policy is illustrated by her relations for more than 20 years with the small state of Turkey.

DEFINITE ON CHINA

Fifth, China would know that the policy of equality between nations, regardless of their racial construction, is assured, and that the western nations are not going to advocate one thing for Europe and another for the Far East. For the same reason it would assuage the frictions in India.

Sixth, it would be a powerful weapon in our political warfare against the Axis, a weapon which has been lacking up to now.

The demand for unconditional surrender would be accomplished by the certainty of existence and the hope for later equality. It would break down the loyalty of the Axis satellites, who are all looking for a way of escape. And to a country like Italy, where the propaganda that "one man and one alone is responsible" has served only to strengthen Mussolini, it would put matters into a large and intelligible perspective.

And last, but not least, it would increase and restore the prestige of the United States Senate. It would prove that our democratic institutions and our party system are capable of producing political unity where political unity is essential.

THERE MUST BE CENTRALIZED PROCUREMENT TO GIVE SMALL BUSINESS A CHANCE TO PRODUCE FOR WAR

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, with practically all of the principles expressed by the able junior Senator from Missouri I am in hearty accord. Only with respect to the conclusion which might lead to the assumption that it was an error to entrust the job of the chairmanship of the Smaller War Plants Corporation to Colonel Johnson, if the able Senator intended so to intimate—and I am glad to have his assurance that he did not intend to make such intimation—would I have any difference of opinion.

As I said, Mr. President, I am authorized to say by the chairman——

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the distinguished junior Senator from Florida yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. I had no personal acquaintance with Colonel Johnson. My objection to Colonel Johnson was the fact that he is absolutely under the control of the Ordnance Department of the United States Army, and I do not think he can do the job successfully under those conditions.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for making it clear that it was a question of policy as to whether or not a man in uniform, upon active assignment, should hold any position of that character, and not Colonel Johnson personally which caused the able Senator concern.

I have been examining the President's order of January 16, 1942, in order to ascertain what powers were vested in the War Production Board by the President. I think it is well for the Senate to have constantly in mind what the President intended in setting up the position of Chairman of the War Production Board.

There are two matters to which I propose to address myself, Mr. President: First, that the system which has been in effect in respect to Federal procurement inevitably leads to the result which the able junior Senator from Missouri and other Senators have pointed out, that little business does not get an appreciable share of our total war production; second, to suggest that as to the matter of the appointment of the Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation or the members of its board of directors, the Chairman of the War Production Board is vested by statute with authority to make such appointments. For reasons which seemed satisfactory to himself, he appointed Colonel Johnson. All of us—including our able friend the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]—agree that Colonel Johnson as an individual is a very able gentleman to have in that place.

Mr. President, what I started to say was that upon examination of the President's order of January 16, 1942, as to the duties of the War Production Board, I find, among other things, the following:

First:

The Chairman of the War Production Board, with the advice and assistance of the members of the Board, shall—

(a) Exercise general direction over the war procurement and production program.

(b) Determine the policies, plans, procedures, and methods of the several Federal departments, establishments, and agencies in respect to war procurement and production, including purchasing, contracting, specifications, and construction; and including conversion, requisitioning, plant expansion, and the financing thereof; and issue such directives in respect thereto as he may deem necessary or appropriate.

Again:

(e) Report from time to time to the President on the progress of war procurement and production; and perform such other duties as the President may direct.

Again:

3. Federal departments, establishments, and agencies shall comply with the policies, plans, methods, and procedures in respect to war procurement and production as determined by the Chairman; and shall furnish to the Chairman such information relating to war procurement and production as he may deem necessary for the performance of his duties.

Mr. President, it is very clear that in the original order establishing the Chairman of the War Production Board the President did intend to centralize the procurement and production policies of the Government, but it must be admitted that Mr. Nelson did not exercise those powers conferred upon him by the President, and did not centralize the procurement and production program of the United States for war purposes, but, as I ventured to state here the other day, the Chairman delegated those powers, for reasons which he deemed adequate, to the armed services, to Lend-Lease, to the Maritime Commission, and to other agencies of the Government, with the result that there never was and there is not yet a single procurement and production policy and authority of the United States Government.

Mr. President, when we have procurement for the Army vested in what is relatively, as far as practice has worked out, an independent procurement agency; when we have procurement for the Navy relatively disconnected from procurement for the Army or from any other Federal agency; and when we have the same situation existing with respect to other arms of the Government carrying on the war, of course, we do not have a coordinated plan and policy and program which will make it possible for any part of the Government effectively to deal with such a challenge as is presented by small business to the Government.

So, Mr. President, the only way, I venture to say, that small business can possibly hope to have a fair share in war production and in the carrying on of the business necessitated by the war is for there to be a coordinated procurement and production policy of the United States Government.

As I said, Donald Nelson first delegated his procurement powers to the procurement agencies. Mr. President, since that time he has had the fight of his life in endeavoring to get back the powers over procurement for any phase of production which he originally did not assume or which he delegated to the armed services or the other procurement agencies of the Government.

Just to indicate the problem with which he has had to contend, let me say that I am informed that a little while ago, after he attempted to reassert the powers which I venture to believe from the Executive order the President intended him to exercise from the beginning, he appointed, as we all know, Mr. Charles Wilson as vice chairman of the War Production Board, an exceptionally able, capable, and qualified man, a man whose company—the General Electric Co.—has one of the best production records, so I am informed, of any corporation in the country. Mr. Nelson, I believe, seeing his mistake in letting those powers get away from him, in letting all the several agencies go in their several directions without close coordination of policy and program, put in Mr. Wilson as vice chairman of the Board, gave him—as I understand—general jurisdiction over production, and gave him specific jurisdiction over airplane production and radar because there were bottlenecks in the production of those two categories of implements needed for the war.

Mr. President, it is not gossip or rumor, but it is a fact, attested on the front pages of nearly every Washington paper, that Mr. Wilson has had an extremely difficult task to get the other agencies of Government to cooperate with him in the performance of duties with which Mr. Nelson vested him and which are essential to a coordinated procurement and production program of the Government. I think even we laymen who are not skilled in the technique of production can understand what I am informed has been attributed to Mr. Nelson as a statement, namely, that three things are essential to an adequate procurement and production program: One is control over critical materials in a single head; another is procurement control in a single head; and the third is the power to schedule, in order that the several component parts of end products shall be brought together in the right place, at the right time, and in the right quantity and proportion.

Mr. President, let me tell a story which I believe to be reliable, and to be subject to confirmation. Mr. Wilson got into the picture; and as there was a shortage of steel products necessary to produce larger quantities of war materials, he began to investigate from his over-all position and perspective what was the bottleneck in increased steel production. I understand that he discovered that a point at which production might be increased—a bottleneck, if you please—was in blast-furnace production. He had in consultation an expert who had designed blast furnaces for the principal steel companies of the Nation, and it was his recommendation that if production in blast furnaces could be increased, production in end products could be enlarged.

Then what happened? My information is that within 2 days after that advisor and counsellor informed Mr. Wilson and Mr. Nelson that steel production could be increased by increasing the production of blast furnaces, that advisor received telegrams, letters, and other communications from the steel companies of the Nation telling him they hired him to design steel plants, not to tell them how to run them.

Mr. President, that looks dangerously like obstruction of the war effort.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it not the Senator's understanding that the War Production Board last year issued an order curtailing the construction of any additional blast-furnace facilities or any steel-production facilities which would not be completed by the 30th of June 1943, and that that policy has not been changed, although it still remains true that the production of steel is the chief obstacle to our producing the increased quantities of the commodities and materials that are overwhelmingly needed to carry on the war?

Mr. PEPPER. I understand what the able Senator suggests to be true; yes.

Mr. President, I realize that there is room for an honest difference of opinion as to whether it is better in advancing the war effort to take a given quality of steel or raw material for the production of steel and put it into implements of war or into steel fabrication facilities. I say I admit there could be an honest difference of opinion about that question, but what I am talking about now is the capacity to increase the quantity of raw materials out of which steel is to be made in the processing facilities we already possess.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the able Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have been following the Senator with much interest. As I understood, he said that Mr. Nelson was trying to break the bottleneck in steel which appeared to him to be caused by the lack of blast furnaces in the steel industry, and he wanted to have more blast furnaces in the steel industry so that that difficulty would be eliminated. Then, I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say that the War Production Board had issued an order forbidding an increase in the number of blast furnaces, in other words, "freezing" the bottleneck where it was, and, as Mr. Nelson is the head of the W. P. B., I have rather become confused as to whether or not the Senator's position is fully stated or whether the position of the Senator from Wyoming does not lay the blame at Mr. Nelson's door. I think we ought to have that cleared up so that we may better follow the argument of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. As usual, the Senator from Maryland contributes valuably to any discussion in which he takes a part. It did seem a little inconsistent that I should have made my first statement, and then should have answered "yes" to the question. This is the basis upon which I answered "Yes"; I think Mr. Nelson cannot and probably does not desire to shirk his just share of the responsibility for the bottlenecks which have developed in this program, and what I give him credit for is his recent, determined, and courageous effort to correct some of the earlier mistakes which I think perhaps he would admit having made; and this is one of them. If I, being a layman and not particularly informed about the matter, may express an opinion, I think Mr. Nelson, not being a steel man and not being a production man—we all know that Mr. Nelson has been engaged in handling commodities and not in making them—naturally relied upon his steel advisers who, in substance, were merely the iron and steel institute brought here to Washington.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has completely cleared up the matter. Mr. Nelson, when he got the report of the blast furnace experts evidently put the question up to the steel people.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the steel people told him whatever the reason may have been, that it was not practicable; and Mr. Nelson, not being a steel man, accepted, in good faith, that advice which turned out later not to have been wise advice.

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no reflection on Mr. Nelson, because, obviously, anybody would have had to go to the people who run the business to find out the ins and outs of it. Am I correct?

Mr. PEPPER. That is substantially correct except that I am inclined to think that the facts are that Mr. Nelson perhaps time and time again in consultation with the steel section perhaps made inquiry and consulted with a view to increasing the steel output, but I think they did just what the able Senator suggested, namely, they advised him against an effort to increase the number of blast furnaces.

Later on, when Mr. Charles Wilson, the head of the General Electric Corporation, himself a production man of long and great experience who knows something about the technique of production, came down here and was put in charge of production he started ferreting out these bottlenecks, and it was then, as I understand it, chronologically, that he was a party to, if not responsible for, the last investigation by the expert I have in mind who recommended that by increasing the blast furnace facilities production could be increased, but, even before he actually acted upon the suggestion, when the steel companies heard about it they vigorously rebuked and reprimanded this expert whom they had previously hired to design their furnaces, telling him that they hired him to design their facilities and not to tell them how to run them.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Another word should be added to clear the apparent confusion. The reason the War Production Board issued the order forbidding the construction of any new facilities which could not be completed by the end of June 30, 1943, was that steel is necessary in order to build these extensive facilities; in other words, great quantities of steel are needed in the building of blast furnaces. Therefore, the War Production Board came to the conclusion that it was better for the immediate equipment of the Army and Navy to devote the steel which was necessary for the expansion of the blast furnaces to the manufacture of tanks and ships and other elements.

The explanation of the curious instance which the Senator from Colorado has just described, which I now hear for the first time, namely, that the blast furnace expert was reprimanded by the large steel companies for having recommended the expansion of the blast furnaces, is that the large companies have not wanted to allow the manufacture of iron and steel to get away from the blast furnace method.

For more than a year the contention has been made here upon the floor and elsewhere that by the so-called direct process of applying heat to iron ore, great quantities of iron can be made from the undeveloped iron deposits of this country; but if those direct processes were adopted they would tend to compete with the blast furnaces because they would make it possible for an iron reduction plant to be built at the mouth of every iron mine in the country. The big steel companies, desiring to retain control over the steel business when the war is over, have not wanted to see this competitive enterprise, this local enterprise, come into the field under the sponsorship of Government contracts. That, Mr. President, has been the explanation which was given to me for this serious conflict of action by the War Production Board. Personally, I do not believe that any blame attaches to Mr. Nelson about it. I think it only fair to say that there has been a tremendous increase in production. I noticed in the newspapers this morning that Mr. William L. Batt was quoted while addressing a group last night as having said that a larger proportion of the natural resources of the United States are being currently used than is the case in any other country with the possible exception of Germany; but it is not enough.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida allow me to make a brief observation before he takes up the thread of his argument?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like the RECORD to show that I am not informed on this question; I might not have been a member of any committees which have been considering it. I rose simply to get information, and I hope no remark I made, by inference or otherwise, may be construed as reflecting on Mr. Nelson, Mr. Wilson, the steel people, or the architect. I am only sitting here listening to this recital, and I do not want the RECORD to appear in such shape that any unfavorable inference might be drawn by any of the parties to this controversy, for I have not heard the evidence.

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad the Senator mentioned that subject, because I, too, want to make it clear that I arose with no purpose whatever to disparage anybody who has had anything to do with any phase of this program. The point to which I was bringing my remarks was that we have got to have a coordinated production program; we have got to have someone in charge of it able to synchronize and harmonize all aspects of it; and for this production program it is necessary to have a man who knows the technique of production. Lawyers, doctors, bankers, businessmen who have not had experience of that sort, I venture to suggest, are not as well fitted as a man who is essentially a production man to do this production job.

Mr. President, the second point to which I desired to call the attention of the Senate is that I am informed that escort vessels, which are now so essential to the convoy program, to get the implements of war to the men abroad and to our allies, have been held up due to the fact that for months a controversy raged within the Navy over what type of propulsion machinery was to be employed in the escort vessels, whether steam or something else, and it was only after the War Production Board, through Mr. Wilson, and with Mr. Nelson's backing, and perhaps with the backing of others, finally took the best technical advice available and gave an order, "We will build ships using this type of engine," that they got the escort vessel construction program under way. That is a matter subject to confirmation, too.

Again, think of an escort program being held up while technicians in a certain department argue as to whether one type of engine was better than another. What Mr. Wilson did, if I understand correctly, when he was vested with production responsibility and authority, was to say, "Now, gentlemen, let us get on with building escort vessels. Let us take one type. Let the matter be settled, and let us get those things into production." That, again, shows emphatically and dramatically the necessity of having some authority over all these various agencies who can reconcile such conflicts, resolve a doubt, make a decision, and go ahead with the execution of the program.

I started to say, Mr. President, that Mr. Nelson must share a large part of the responsibility, in my opinion, for the conditions the able junior Senator from Missouri has described; namely, that the small business of this country has not been given an appreciable share in war production. Mr. Nelson himself did not have control over production or procurement.

This order the President issued to Mr. Nelson I think very clearly intended not that he should actually sign the contracts for procurement but that he should lay down the policy, develop the program, prescribe the principles, and issue the directives which should cover the procurement policies of the procurement agencies.

As the able junior Senator from Missouri pointed out, Congress has a measure of responsibility in this matter too, because our appropriations, as the Senator stated, vest the money for procurement in the procurement agencies themselves, not in the War Production Board, and not in any other authority. So the power over procurement he has is not as clear an authority, no doubt, as the Chairman of the War Production Board would like to have. It is executive in character, and not legislative.

At the same time I will state, and I think Mr. Nelson deserves the compliment of it being said, that when Mr. Nelson discovered that he had let these powers get away from him, and that with the best of intentions the armed services having charge of procurement were going in different directions far too much, he tried to reestablish himself as the one to carry out the order that was literally given to him by the President when he was appointed, and I think ever since that time Mr. Nelson has been working in that direction, and I think it is a regrettable fact that Mr. Nelson and Mr. Wilson have been receiving a great deal of very serious, capable, and determined opposition from the services. Again, I do not discredit their motives or disparage their convictions that they should have this power. It is a matter of judgment.

I am not an expert; I can only venture an opinion as a layman, but when we find that agencies are competing in the open market for the same facilities or the same raw materials; when we find that the procurement program is scattered in all different directions and not coordinated; that the Army has one, the Navy has one, the Maritime Commission has one, Lend-Lease has one, and other agencies have their own separate procurement programs, we may expect, of necessity, such a condition as confronts the small business of this country today.

One of the impelling reasons which influenced those of us who introduced the war mobilization bill, which was the subject of discussion here recently, was the desire for coordination of these powers in some head or committee outside the person of our great President, so that he or they could coordinate the procurement programs and make harmonious the policies of the several procurement agencies of the Government. In other words, instead of all these agencies having procurement programs, the Government of the United States would have one program.

If there is a single authority for war production and the complaint is made that the facilities of small business are not fully employed, an agency which has the whole procurement power of the Federal Government has the power to correct the situation. If it does not, there is no question of who has the responsibility for the fault and failure.

I was coming to the conclusion of saying that if this appointment of Colonel Johnson actually led to the Army taking over the policy of the Smaller War Plants Corporation and directing that organization as the procurement program and policy of the War Department, I should be as strenuous in my opposition to it as is the junior Senator from Missouri. We have been working together on this subject of trying to get civilians in charge of this program as far as possible, but I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that a capable man is disqualified just because he happens to be in uniform and to be an officer in the Army.

Remember, Colonel Johnson was detached and assigned to this duty as Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. He is not acting under any brigadier general or major general or lieutenant general, or even under any general. So far as I know, General Marshall has no power to give directives to Colonel Johnson about the running of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, any more than the Secretary of the Navy has authority to give directives to Dr. Calver, who is assigned to us here in the Congress. He could revoke his assignment, perhaps, but in this case the assignment was made by the President, as I understand the record, so I assume it would take the President to reassign Colonel Johnson anywhere else.

It is admitted on all sides that Colonel Johnson is personally qualified to fill this post, and no finer tribute could have been paid any man than was paid Colonel Johnson by the able senior Senator from Georgia a few minutes ago.

As a matter of fact, Colonel Johnson has long been recognized as one of the able management specialists of this country. I think that is why he was given this job. He went to New York and took a badly disorganized ordnance office, and, instead of increasing the percentage big business was given, he increased the volume little business received, by making the prime contractors break down their contracts to subcontractors and, as I have stated, tying in the Smaller War Plants Corporation with the Ordnance Office of the Army at New York.

As a matter of fact, Colonel Johnson came and testified before the Senate Small Business Committee. I was not a member of the committee at the time, although I attended some of the sessions, but I know how, for example, the chairman, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], for whom I am largely speaking here today, although I myself am a member of the Small Business Committee, was impressed by the help Colonel Johnson gave to small business while he was performing his duties in the Ordnance Office in New York.

Therefore, Mr. President, while I thoroughly agree with the general principle that there should be someone in charge of this whole program who would coordinate it all, and that normally such a person, for example, the head of the War Production Board, or the Chairman of the Board of War Mobilization, if our bill were passed, should be a civilian, substantially the same thing is achieved, even though it be an Army man, if he is detached from routine service and entrusted to do this job.

I do not think the Senate would wish to reverse the decision of the Chairman of the War Production Board on an assignment that was made of this officer by the President to these duties, and we would not wish to come to a premature conclusion that it was not for the purpose of bettering conditions for small business that this assignment was made. I think Colonel Johnson and the Chairman of the War Production Board are entitled to a fair trial and the fair exercise of their discretion as to what man might better do the job. Then, if Colonel Johnson fails in the performance of his duties, if the fears of the able Senator from Missouri are corroborated and confirmed, that will be the time for the Senate to take action which will give prompt and effective redress.

I am sure that there has not been a word said by his superiors, or certainly any of us who have confidence in Colonel Johnson, which would in any sense of the word cast any reflection upon the ability or the excellence of the record of Mr. Lou E. Holland, of whom I personally entertain a very high opinion.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. I merely wanted to ask the distinguished Senator from Florida whether he is in sympathy with what I believe to be reliable information which I have, that Colonel Johnson wants to appoint dollar-a-year men as directors of this corporation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, not only do I not sympathize with that, but as a member of the Small Business Committee, if that is Colonel Johnson's policy, to the limit of my ability I shall oppose it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not as well informed on some of these subjects as some of the Senators who have discussed them and who have heard the testimony, but I do not think it is wise to say, unless we are to have a national policy, that men should be excluded who otherwise are patriotic and have great and outstanding ability merely because they want to serve the Government for a dollar a year. It seems to me the thing to do is to get the man, and if he is a dollar-a-year man, all well and good, or if he has to have a salary, all well and good, but unless we are to have a national policy of paying everyone—and there is a good deal to be said for that—we must consider the policy now controlling. By that remark I do not want it understood that we should make it possible, where men have selfish motives, that they could come in and sabotage for their own selfish purposes.

But I mean in the large, if a man is able, willing, and competent, and patriotic, and wants to serve for a dollar a year, I do not think he ought to be abused because of that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator was just saying a moment ago that he had great regard for the ability and the patriotism of Mr. Lou Holland, who has just been superseded by Mr. Johnson, largely, as I understand, because of his zeal for carrying out the policy of Congress—the preservation of small business. Does not that statement of the Senator from Florida seem to a very large extent to be in line with the old rhyme:

Perhaps it was right to dissemble your love,
But—why did you kick me downstairs?

If Mr. Holland was doing a good job, why did they supersede him with Mr. Johnson or anyone else?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the able Senator from Missouri is perfectly right in making that query. Here is the answer I offered a while ago, and I think it was a reasonable one. Under the statute which the Congress passed, the Chairman of the War Production Board was given the responsibility and the duty to make this appointment. The Chairman of the War Production Board has made the appointment pursuant to the order of Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He appointed Mr. Holland, did he not?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And then he fired Mr. Holland?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Florida, while defending the appointment of Mr. Johnson, said that Mr. Holland had made good. Why did the Chairman of the Board fire Mr. Holland except for his zeal in carrying out the wishes of Congress in helping small business?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it is a characteristic American principle that no man shall be condemned before he is heard. I think all of us commend the action of our sister body recently when its Members receded from a previous decision condemning a person, because he had not been given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When was Mr. Holland heard, if the Senator from Florida will permit me to ask him? He was fired without being given a hearing.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the statute does not limit the Chairman of the War Production Board in changing men who hold these positions. Mr. Donald Nelson did not appoint these men for a term. They were not confirmed by the Senate. They were removable at the pleasure of the Chairman of the War Production Board.

Mr. President, if the able Senator wishes to indulge the presumption that Mr. Nelson acted out of spite, or pettiness, or improper motives, then, of course, that would be a reflection upon Mr. Nelson, which I believe able Senators would not care to make. I am assuming, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that Mr. Nelson acted in good faith; that he acted upon good cause in his opinion. We vested him with the discretion, and if it is an honest decision that he made, unless we propose to constitute ourselves into a body of appeals on administrative decisions which are made, and powers of discretion which are exercised, he is entitled to a presumption of good faith, although there may be an error of judgment in the exercise of that power.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Gladly.

Mr. TRUMAN. I wanted to say to the Senator from Florida that Mr. Nelson acted, I think, on the advice of, what I termed in my statement, conspirators in whom he had placed too much confidence. I think those gentlemen are there for the purpose of representing big business, and have no other purpose, and when Mr. Holland was on the point of achieving success, they succeeded in upsetting the whole apple cart and taking a new start, and no matter what Mr. Johnson may do, if he is honestly going to try to help little business, and if he reaches a point where he is about to make a success of it, they will do exactly the same thing to him.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the evidence, after a reasonable opportunity for confirmation, should disclose even the suggestion of what the able Senator from Missouri has said—and he is chairman of a special defense investigating committee and may keep a careful eye on the conduct of this agency—then Mr. Donald Nelson not only needs to be impeached by Congress, as far as that is possible, but to be driven with discredit out of the high office he holds. That, Mr. President, it seems to me would be an inevitable judgment upon such wrongdoing.

If he has conspired against the small business of this country, which is the heart of America, he is an enemy to the majority of the people of this country, or he is a wholly misguided man. I am not prepared to convict the Chairman of the War Production Board of that charge until he has had a fair hearing.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have asked the Senator to yield in order that I might put in the RECORD the specific list to which reference was made earlier in the day, but I do not wish to interfere with the Senator in the statement he is now making.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator from Wyoming wish to make some remarks in connection with inserting the list in the RECORD?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to make some comment about it; yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I am just about to conclude my remarks.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will yield to me for that purpose before he concludes, very well.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. President, I may offer my own explanation as to why there is a great disparity in the quantity of war production which has been given to big business compared to that given little business. That is, that the procurement agencies of this Government have not gone out looking for facilities in small business. They have not gone out with an eye to trying to harness its potentials. They were looking for an existing company which had a good record and a large personnel, and a large capacity, to which they could give a contract, and essentially regard themselves as done when they gave the contract. I will agree with my able friend and say this, that the armed services are not qualified, generally speaking, to be the procurement agencies and instrumentalities of the Government, when, in war, the total facilities of the Nation must be put into a single vast production program.

I say that that job should go to a production man. The reason the big companies were given these large contracts was because it was a lot easier to do that than it was to go out and nurse little business up into productivity, by seeing that it got contracts that it could perform, seeing that it got machine tools necessary to the performance of a contract, seeing that it got critical material, seeing that it got manpower, seeing that it got priorities, and seeing that it got the other essential components of war production.

I do not want to exclude from that catalog skilled engineering advice and counsel which would be necessary in manufacturing war instruments of nice precision.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think the Senator from Florida should add to his list the fact that it is also much easier for the big concerns to maintain high-priced representatives in Washington, and that the big concerns are much better entertainers than the small ones.

Mr. PEPPER. I thoroughly agree with every word that the able senior Senator from Missouri has spoken. The poor little fellows come looking, and they do not know where to go, they do not know what they can do, they do not have the essential elements of production, and, as the able Senator has said, they are in substance stepchildren in the Government program and policy. But they will never be fully utilized until some one man is in charge of the war production program of the United States of America and an industrialist who knows how to produce puts them to work in an effective way.

Mr. President, I differ with my able friend, the junior Senator from Missouri, only in my surmise that for all practical purposes this man Colonel Johnson is an industrialist, although he has been for 15 years a Reserve officer, and he has had on a uniform for a year; he is much more an outstanding, capable management and industrial specialist than is a West Point officer who has not had industrial experience in his career.

Just this last subject, Mr. President, and I am done. I apologize for the time already consumed. The last thing is this. In this morning's Washington Post there is an editorial headed "Row in the W. P. B." That editorial comments upon what has been in the newspapers for the last 2 or 3 days, an advertised dispute in the War Production Board between two exceptionally able men, Mr. Charles E. Wilson and Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt. Those two men are two as able men as I have ever met in my life, and I have had the good fortune to meet and converse with both of them. They have both had a rich industrial and business background. They are both men of strength. They are men who fought their way up in the world from humble circumstances and adversity to positions of security and competence. The country needs the services of those two men, Mr. President. I hope Mr. Donald Nelson will so organize the W. P. B. that he personally will be the boss, with the strength and courage to be the boss personally of his agency, and will see to it that everybody whose duty it is to obey his directives do obey his directives, and then that he will put in charge of an appropriate sphere in his organization Mr. Charles Wilson, who will be responsible for all production and scheduling in this country and for the procurement policy of the Government for war, and that a place of equal power and responsibility will also be preserved for Mr. Ferdinand Eberstadt, who has been one of the strong men of that organization in the control of critical materials and priorities.

In other words, so that those two men may be a team pulling dynamically together for war production, and their duties and spheres so divided that they will be a part of the same team pulling together forward, instead of diverging elements pulling in opposite directions.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may make a comment upon what he has just said?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I will yield in a moment. Mr. President, Mr. Donald Nelson is facing a crisis, in my opinion. He has to solve the small-business problem. He has to solve problems of his own organization. He has to exercise the full power and responsibility his President gave him. The discussion of this afternoon will attest that the Congress of this country is looking primarily to Mr. Donald Nelson to see that he mobilizes and uses the Nation's economic strength to win the war of production, but at the same time that he does not break the Nation's backbone—small business.

CONCENTRATION OF ECONOMIC POWER

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the discussion which has taken place this afternoon would not be complete if it were not called to the attention of the Senate, and to those who read the RECORD, that the conclusions in respect to the problem of war production of big business and little business cannot be drawn in black and white. It cannot be said that one group is altogether wrong and that another group is altogether right. It cannot be said that the War Production Board is altogether at fault, and that other agencies are not at fault. It cannot be said that the War Department is making no mistakes, and that the War Production Board is making many mistakes.

No one should lose sight of the fact that in the past 2 years the industry of America has made a truly magnificent contribution to the war effort. No one should lose sight of the fact that airplanes, guns, tanks, and all the materials which go to equip an army, and which have been manufactured in the United States, are now being used on every single fighting front. They are being used in the South Pacific, in China, in Russia, in North Africa, and wherever American soldiers are fighting. They are being used wherever the United Nations, which are benefiting from lease-lend, are fighting. American industry has made that contribution.

It might be very easy to assume from what has been said here today that industry is all wrong and that the War Production Board, the Army, and the Navy have done little or nothing. That certainly is not true. It has been a wonderful contribution, such as no other nation and no other industrial group in all the history of the world has made. Yet, we should not close our eyes to the fact that there has been a concentration in a few hands; and it is in order to call attention to the specific figures for which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] asked earlier in the afternoon that I rise at this time.

Before referring to the figures, let me say that I am advised that there have been fewer failures among the so-called small business firms of America during the past year than at any time since 1920. There has been a great deal of distribution, but not as much as there should be by any means. The distribution which has taken place has in many respects been due to the fact that the business has been handed down through the large corporations to which the prime contracts have been granted. Thus, we have another example of the situation which has characterized all political and economic discussions in the country from the earliest time. Some have contended that the Government should take care of the big ones and the big ones should take care of the little ones. That is not, and never has been, the theory of the American people. The theory of the American people has been that equal opportunity should be extended to all, and that we should build from the ground up.

I have before me a list prepared by the statistical branch of the War Production Board. It shows that through November 1942 there have been awarded a total, in dollar value, of $84,978,300,000 worth of war contracts. Of that total, the sum of $59,557,900,000 has gone to 100 companies. It amounts to 70 1/10 percent of the total awards.

If one looks at the first 10 companies on this list he sees immediately that one of the causes for this concentration is that most of the large contracts have been awarded for the construction of airplanes, naval vessels, and cargo vessels. The largest total volume of contracts was awarded to General Motors Corporation, amounting to $7,251,100,000. Next was the Curtiss-Wright Corporation. Next was the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Next in order were Douglas Aircraft Co., Inc., United Aircraft Corporation, Ford Motor Co., Boeing Airplane Co., Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, United States Steel Corporation, and Chrysler Corporation.

If one reads the next 10 companies in the list he finds the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, Aviation Corporation, Glenn L. Martin Co., manufacturers of airplanes; Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., General Electric Co., Todd Shipyards Corporation, North American Aviation, Inc., American Telephone & Telegraph Co., E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., and the Sperry Corporation.

From a reading of this list it is clear that the largest contracts have been granted for the manufacture of the implements of war which are most needed if we are successfully to fight the war.

Under these circumstances it is easy to understand why the War Department and officers in charge of the services of supply should feel that they should be the ones to decide what materials are necessary, and to whom the contracts for the materials should be awarded. The services of supply feel that upon them is the responsibility of procuring materials with which the soldiers are to fight and win the war.

However Mr. President, there is a circumstance in connection with this list which is worthy of a moment's comment. The list is prepared in two forms: First, in the order of the size of the contracts; and secondly, in alphabetical order, showing the subsidiary corporations of some of the giants to which parts of the contracts have been farmed out.

Let us take, for example, the American Car & Foundry Co. Under that heading come the American Car & Foundry Co., the American Welding Co., J. G. Brill Co., Carter Carburetor Corporation, and Hall-Scott Motor Car Co.

Under American Locomotive Co. come the American Locomotive Co., Alco Products, Inc., Heat Transfer Products, Inc., and Railway Steel Spring Co.

Under Bethlehem Steel Corporation we find Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Bethlehem-Fairfield Shipyard, Inc., Bethlehem-Sparrows Point Shipyard, Inc., Bethlehem-Hingham Shipyard, Inc., and Bethlehem-Alameda Shipyard Co.

Under General Electric Co., from which the W. P. B. has recruited Mr. Wilson, we find the following list of companies: General Electric Co., Carboloy Co., Inc., Edison General Electric Appliance Co., Inc., Elmira Foundry Co., Inc., General Electric X-ray Corporation, Trumbull Electric Manufacturing Co., and Warren Telechron Co.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have both of these lists printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the lists were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

100 corporations or independent companies holding greatest amount of war supply contracts awarded June 1940 through November 1942 [1]

[Millions of dollars]

|---|---|
| General Motors Corporation | 7,251.1 |
| Curtiss-Wright Corporation | 4,613.1 |
| Bethlehem Steel Coroporation | 2,953.6 |

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall content myself with adding only this additional statement:

This list of huge contracts awarded to 100 large companies, as well as the list of the subsidiary corporations among which the contracts have been divided, indicate how important it is for the people of America to give consideration to the industrial organization which we are to have after the war.

Because it felt that the production of these materials was the first essential, so that its military forces would have arms, the Government has followed the policy of abandoning antitrust suits. It is of more than passing interest that the small-war-plants bill contained a section which was added in the other House, and which finally passed in a much modified form, the purpose of which was to do away with antitrust or monopoly suits.

I have in my hand, Mr. President, a memorandum which was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary by Attorney General Biddle. It contains a list of the cases and proceedings which have been postponed under the arrangement set up by the reply of the President to the letters of the Attorney General and the Secretaries of War and Navy, with respect to monopolies and the abandonment of antitrust suits. I ask that the memorandum be also printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 28, 1943.

Agreed to by Attorney General.

THURMAN ARNOLD,
Assistant Attorney General.

NATIONAL STANDARDS FOR NATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In justification of all this, it has been argued—and probably with some good reason—that we should not permit our concentration in preparing for and waging the war to be dissipated by legal controversies which could as well be settled after the victory has been won. It will be tragic, however, if the country does not realize that the structure of American industry which has grown out of the war represents the destruction of local economic independence.

The first 10 companies on this list have each received from the Federal Government awards the dollar value of which far exceeds the taxable resources of most of the States. These corporations, and the others on the list, with the huge facilities which have been provided for them as a result of these contracts, will be in the position after the war of dominating our peace economy as they now dominate our war economy. That, in turn, will mean, unless we take steps to remedy it, that the economic life of all the people of America will be in the hands of the managers of these enterprises. We shall then have a struggle for the control of the industrial structure.

It is not too much to say that the fate of free, independent enterprise is at stake. Unless Congress finds a way of protecting local business and little business from the control of this tremendous concentration of economic power, there will be an inevitable demand for the Government to take over the enterprises. That, of course, is the road to socialism.

I think there is a remedy for this problem. I shall not discuss it today, except to call attention to the fact that on numerous occasions in the past 9 years I have urged the enactment of a law to establish national standards for national corporations. We must fix the powers and responsibilities of all these economic organizations if we have any hope or design to preserve what we are pleased to call the American way.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO COAST GUARD ACADEMY

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, under authority of the act approved July 15, 1939, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is required to appoint two Senators to serve on the Board of Visitors to the United States Coast Guard Academy.

As chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I announce that I have appointed the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] as members for the committee.

MR. HOOVER'S ADVICE AS TO FOOD AND MANPOWER

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the people throughout the country are becoming more and more concerned with the manpower and production problems now facing the Nation by reason of the tremendous war responsibilities we have assumed. Many informed sources have given their views on these particular issues.

Probably the most trenchant and clear-cut statement of this entire problem was given by former President Herbert Hoover, who recently appeared before a Senate Committee and testified as to the needs and capacities of our agricultural economy and set forth his ideas as to the best manner in which our manpower might be allocated.

It is my belief, Mr. President, that Mr. Hoover is probably the best informed man in America on these particular issues. The statements he made and the conclusions he reached were not based upon any theoretical or statistical approach; they were based, rather, on broad experience and thorough, first-hand knowledge.

By reason of his experience in the World War, during which he administered the food program; by reason of his experience as Secretary of Commerce and President of the United States; and by further reason of his broad travel and world knowledge, Mr. Hoover, probably better than anyone else, is familiar with the production capacities of the United States. He is no less familiar with the tremendous needs for a part of that production in other parts of the world. He is, moreover, well aware of the difficult problems of manpower, production, supply, and incentive that must be solved if the food-production and war-production programs of the Nation are to be successfully carried out.

It is my belief that the ability, knowledge, and experience of Mr. Hoover should be incorporated in the administration of our Government's domestic manpower and food-production programs, as well as in the programs designed to meet our lease-lend commitments abroad. I believe that the administration would be strengthened and that public confidence would be restored if this step were taken.

During his testimony, Mr. Hoover also pointed out that the resources of the United States, both as to manpower and as to the endowments of nature, are limited. He clearly admonished us that we must not attempt to do everything at once. He made it clear that we should first provide the farmer—who, afte all, is the backbone of this effort—with the manpower necessary to perform his great task, and that we must do so without destroying the incentive of competition which has given to the American farmer his great productive powers.

Mr. Hoover also made clear that we must provide suitable and ample manpower for our vast war production enterprises, and that we must do so without destroying the incentive of free enterprise, which has given to American workmen the most advanced standard of living, the best working conditions, and the highest wages enjoyed by any workmen in the world.

I believe that the Congress and the administration should heed well the words of Mr. Hoover, for he is well informed on every aspect of these important problems. I further believe that the Congress and the administration should see fit to call upon Mr. Hoover and urge that he devote himself actively to the administration of one or more of these critical war programs.

Since Mr. Hoover appeared before the Senate committee, public reaction along these lines has been very pronounced; and I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a brief editorial which appeared in the Washington Daily News of February 9, entitled "Hoover, Food, and Manpower."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOOVER; FOOD, AND MANPOWER

It's too bad that Herbert Hoover's testimony yesterday before a Senate committee wasn't made public immediately and in full. Mr. Hoover's views on the necessity for greatly increased food production, to win the war and the peace, seem to us so important that they ought to have the widest possible hearing.

On wartime food questions Mr. Hoover is the world's foremost authority, by right of successful experience. His warning that American failure to produce more meats and fats would endanger military success and mean starvation for millions in Europe after the war—that carries tremendous weight. His plea that agriculture be treated as a munitions industry, which indeed it is, cannot safely be ignored.

Mr. Hoover's public remarks following his testimony indicate he told the committee that the farms, the oil fields, and the metal mines should have this year some 4,000,000 more workers than are now in sight. Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, before another Senate committee, is said to have testified that at least 3,100,000 more farm laborers must be recruited to produce the crops needed this year.

To go much longer without great success in solving the farm-manpower problem can mean disaster. So, we think, Mr. Hoover's suggestions for solving that problem and stimulating meat and fat production—by furloughing large numbers of soldiers for the planting and harvest seasons, importing temporary supplies of Mexican labor, moving workers from other industries to the farms, recruiting boys, girls, and elderly people for light agricultural work, modifying price policies—should have the Administration's earnest and immediate consideration. We hope Congress will insist that they have it.

We find it hard to enthuse over the manpower bill introduced by Representative WADSWORTH, of New York, and Senator AUSTIN, of Vermont, Republicans both, for drafting men between 18 and 65 and women between 18 and 50 for any jobs to which the Government might assign them through the draft boards.

The bill is defective in not specifically guaranteeing to persons drafted for war work the right to join or refuse to join unions. And we still believe that there is little sense in talking about drafting labor while the Government continues to waste manpower on its overstuffed pay rolls, and the labor unions continue to waste manpower by their "featherbed" practices and their resistance to proposals for lengthening the artificially short workweek in civilian industries.

GASOLINE RATIONING IN WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, since I made my recent address about the gasoline rationing situation in western Pennsylvania, there has come to my attention other information which I feel may well be presented on the floor of this Chamber.

This morning my colleague and I joined a group of 75 prominent representatives from the western Pennsylvania area and met with Mr. Harold L. Ickes and Mr. Prentiss Brown. We presented to them a description of the peculiar situation which exists in that region of Pennsylvania. It was pointed out that in Allegheny County the terrain is so rugged, the roads are so difficult, and the distances to and from work are so great, that the gasoline allowances to the individual workers are woefully inadequate to meet their essential transportation needs.

It was also pointed out that in Allegheny County there are thousands of vital war production plants, the finished products of which are absolutely essential to the attainment of victory.

In the Westinghouse factory alone, the thousands of workmen there are turning out a carload of finished war equipment every 11 minutes. Since the plant is operating on a round-the-clock schedule, that means that, from that one plant alone, 131 carloads of finished war material move toward the front every day. Those cars, if joined together, would make a freight train more than a mile long. I repeat that the Westinghouse plant is but one of thousands of such plants which are operating in that strategic area of western Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, if we are to attain victory on the home front and on the battle front, it is essential that the vital and necessary work which those thousands of people are doing be maintained. It cannot be maintained unless a more liberal gasoline allowance is immediately forthcoming to those workers, many of whom must travel a distance of 40 miles to and from their work. The achievement of our war aims and the success of our armed forces are being unnecessarily jeopardized by reason of the gasoline rationing policy which prevails in western Pennsylvania at this time.

However, I am gratified to say that the presentation of the situation described by the representatives of western Pennsylvania and their Members of Congress was well received by Secretary Ickes and Administrator Brown; and I feel confident that their continued study of those conditions will bring about a more reasonable and effective gasoline rationing program in western Pennsylvania.

Because the correction of the conditions described by the representatives referred to is so very important, and because it is quite clear that the conditions they have described exist over a large area, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the statement which was prepared by the western Pennsylvania group, and which was ably presented to Mr. Ickes and Mr. Brown by Representative JAMES A. WRIGHT, of the Thirty-second Congressional District of Pennsylvania, in the hope that a knowledge of the conditions peculiar to that area may result in a more enlightened administration of the gasoline rationing program in western Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Secretary Ickes, Mr. Brown, Honorable Senators and Representatives:

This is, I believe, the fourth time since last spring that a delegation representing western Pennsylvania has made an appeal to this office for the easing of restrictions on the sale and use of gasoline in the western Pennsylvania district.

Our appeal is not based on self-interest. It is not selfish. If we felt that the present severe restrictions on western Pennsylvania contributed to the winning of the war, we would not be here today. However, we feel strongly that these restrictions are having a contrary effect on the war effort of western Pennsylvania. We are convinced that there is plenty of gasoline in the 25-county district that we are referring to. The stocks are increasing instead of diminishing and the facilities are not available to move them to the eastern seaboard.

The whole theory of rationing as conceived and applied is a plan to meet shortages of necessary products essential to our economic life and the winning of the war. We have no shortage of gasoline in western Pennsylvania. The daily average of crude run in the stills of Pennsylvania refineries at the present time is producing 1,102,500 gallons. The production of the Gulf Refineries at Pittsburgh is 262,500 gallons and the production of natural gasoline for blending motor fuel is 46,200 gallons, making a total of 1,411,200 gallons. To this should be added the quantity delivered daily by barge from the Ashland Refining Co., of Ashland, Ky., which is 300,000 gallons. This makes a total of 1,711,200 gallons as the average daily supply at the present time in the 25-county district west of the Allegheny Mountains.

These figures are based on reports of the Oil and Gas Journal of February 4, 1943, and on carefully assembled figures gathered by a special investigator assigned to the task by the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Of course, we were very much interested a few days ago to learn that western West Virginia would be placed in district 2. We think this was a proper move and we are gratified at the success of our West Virginia neighbors in receiving this consideration. However, it is interesting to note that the crude oil production of Pennsylvania in the year 1942 was 16,841,000 barrels, as against 3,492,000 barrels for West Virginia. As an oil-production area producing 5 times the volume of West Virginia, we feel that we are justified in presenting the appeal that we are making today.

Now, as to consumption, the daily consumption of gasoline in the 25-county area during 1941 was 2,000,000 gallons. During the first 5 months of 1942 this consumption had dropped to 1,500,000 gallons daily. During January of this year, under the full effect of rationing, the daily consumption had dropped to 600,000 gallons.

Comparing our production with our consumption, we have a daily production in the 25-county area of 1,711,200 gallons as against a consumption of 600,000 gallons. This is the simple explanation of why we have plenty of gasoline in western Pennsylvania and why stocks are increasing.

Our consumption figures are conservatively estimated. We show that our consumption is about 40 percent of what it was a year ago. Surveys of sales by the larger gas companies indicate that they are selling only 30 to 40 percent as much gasoline as they did a year ago.

In support of this drastic decline of consumption, consider the traffic figures of the Pennsylvania Turnpike. In December 1941, 126,616 cars used the turnpike. In December 1942, month before last, 35,220 cars used the turnpike—a drop of 72 percent.

As against this drastic reduction in consumption, I repeat, gentlemen, that we have plenty of gasoline in western Pennsylvania. The stocks of motor gasoline on hand in Pennsylvania refineries at the end of December last was 21,674,352 gallons. On January 21 it was 21,446,250 gallons, and on January 28, only 2 weeks ago, the stocks of the Pennsylvania refineries were 21,901,866 gallons. These are the figures of the National Petroleum Association.

If these large stocks of gasoline were being made available for the war effort, I assure you there would be no protest from western Pennsylvania. Month after month our people of western Pennsylvania have been told that these stocks were being moved or were to be moved to the East; that they were necessary to the war effort, but the fact remains that the acute transportation problem has prevented their being moved. The facilities apparently are not available to move the gasoline to the East where it is needed. Then the natural question arises: Why cannot at least a limited amount of this excess gasoline be made available in an area where its use will be a direct contribution, as we think, to the winning of the war?

Throughout western Pennsylvania our common carriers are loaded to extreme capacity. The Pittsburgh Railways Co., whose trolleys and busses serve the entire Allegheny County industrial district, handled a total of 237,735,000 passengers on their trolley cars last year and 16,000,000 passengers on their busses. As an example of the increased demands on the common carriers, the traffic of this company's trolley system increased 40 percent in January of this year as against January 1942.

In the war plants of western Pennsylvania the expanded personnel has brought workers from the farms and rural areas and large numbers of war workers travel 35 or 40 miles to and from their work. Every additional gallon of gasoline made available to them eases their burden and contributes to improved morale.

In the great centers of industry like Pittsburgh and its industrial suburbs, the problem of transportation is becoming increasingly serious. The great Westinghouse Co. at Pittsburgh reports: "We have in East Pittsburgh 26,000 people with only a small percentage using either steam or streetcar transportation in coming to work or going home. East Pittsburgh is a relatively small town and only a small percentage of our people live there. Our superintendent of transportation estimates that at least 70 percent of our 26,000 people there must rely on automobiles. It is evident that if through present drastic or future even more drastic restrictions, sufficient discontent is aroused to result in a large number of privately owned cars being disposed of by their owners we would have a serious transportation problem confronting us.

"The streetcars and steam transportation facilities are now pretty well taxed to their limit in handling the number of people who use them. The present situation whereby western Pennsylvania is treated the same as eastern Pennsylvania is causing a great deal of discontent among our people. This is confirmed by the recent apparently well-founded reports that excessive amounts of gasoline are available here and storage facilities are being taxed beyond their capacity.

"May we add that the director of intelligence, Third Service Command, visited our East Pittsburgh operations January 20 last, and during general discussion of working conditions and morale, the vice president and chief executive officer of our company at East Pittsburgh, Mr. A. C. Streamer, told him that this single phase of the situation was contributing more to the destruction of worker morale than anything that has happened yet, and that unless relief shortly was forthcoming, the situation would further deteriorate. The director of intelligence took the matter under advisement, but so far there has been no action."

This Westinghouse letter brings out an important point. The severity of gas rationing in western Pennsylvania and the great difficulty of thousands of our working people in war plants, who will not go through the process of obtaining supplemental ration cards, etc., is causing increasing numbers of workers to put their cars up or to sell them. Pittsburgh daily papers contain scores of advertisements enticing motorists to sell their cars. These used cars are being sold at high prices and in the Pittsburgh district alone between 150 and 200 cars per week are being bought by roving agents who ship them to the west for resale. The constantly shrinking number of passenger automobiles available is increasing the burden and the problem of the already overtaxed common carriers.

The Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation reports that: "Our Clairton works have indicated that the bus transportation facilities are encountering considerable difficulty in the maintenance of their equipment. One fleet of 32 motorbusses have 7 out of commission due to the need of extensive repairs. These repairs are delayed because of inability to obtain spare parts. All plants contacted have been of the opinion that mass transportation facilities to and from the plants are taxed to the maximum at present and that transportation by privately owned automobiles is the only available method of insuring the presence of employees in numbers sufficient for operations. Several of the plants have indicated that quite a few employees have expressed a desire to transfer their places of employment in lieu of available gasoline for transportation. This, of course, further complicates the problem of migration of labor which is the major personnel problem to industry."

This situation of having plenty of gasoline as against acute problems of transportation in the conduct of general business in the great war production area of western Pennsylvania brings us again strongly to the conviction that there is just one solution to our problem; that is to take our 25-county, western Pennsylvania area, out of the eastern seaboard district, known as district 1, and put it back where it was originally located, and we think logically belongs, in district 2.

We have nothing in common with the New England and Atlantic seaboard district in this matter. We are in an oil-producing area, and they are not. We are divided by a mountain range that formerly was regarded as the natural and logical dividing line. We think that this dividing line should be reestablished. While we have been told that it is necessary to use State lines for boundaries, this cannot be true because boundary lines have been established without respect to State lines in Florida, West Virginia, and in Tennessee.

At a meeting held in Pittsburgh on Monday of this week and attended by representatives of 15 cities in western Pennsylvania much evidence was produced to show the confusion and trouble that has arisen in districts like Erie, Sharon, and New Castle, close to the Ohio-Pennsylvania line. The old dividing line nearer the central part of the State ran for the most part through rural and thinly populated districts and thus avoided the troubles that have arisen through establishing the Ohio-Pennsylvania line as the boundary.

I believe, Mr. Secretary, that you have said publicly and I know that our President has said, that it should not be necessary to ration areas where there is a plentiful supply of gasoline. Surely this must apply to western Pennsylvania at the present time. Our manufactured gasoline is a byproduct in the production of the finest lubricants in the world necessary in great quantities for our armed forces. The volume production of these lubricants is one of the reasons why our storage tanks are full of gasoline.

Why can't we use it in our important war effort, and to maintain as nearly as possible a normal economic life that will contribute so much to morale?

May we again make a plea for western Pennsylvania, that it be taken out of district 1 and placed permanently in district 2. We assure you that it will raise the morale of our people, it will help the war effort, and it will be, in our opinion, an act of fairness and justice.

THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF ORGANIZATION OF BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, 33 years ago today there was organized here in this Capital City a youth movement which has served this Nation well in the past and now is doing a man-sized job on the home front. I refer to the Boy Scouts of America.

Hundreds of thousands of Americans are helping to observe the Boy Scout birthday throughout the Nation. It is a fact that few communities throughout the country are without Scout troops. Even in our rural areas, with which I am quite familiar, Rural Scouts and Lone Scouts live by the Scout oath and law. In the far-flung outposts of our democracy, Scouts live and work to help win the war. Today their total active strength is 1,570,000 Scouts and Scouters. Through the 33 years of its existence the Boy Scouts of America have counted more than 11,000,000 members, men and boys, who have been influenced by Scouting.

What does this mean to us as citizens of the United States? It means several things. We have thousands of men, now in our armed forces, who were once Scouts. As Scouts they took the Scout oath and promised to obey the Scout law. To those who do not know the portent of this statement, let me repeat the oath and law. I always feel more hopeful for the outcome of this struggle and the peace that will follow when I read it. I quote:

> On my honor, I will do my best to do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the Scout law; to help other people at all times; to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight.

These lines should give us all hope. Our men who are now fighting for freedom in remote corners of the earth, these former Scouts, had this oath ingrained in them as boys during their most formative years.

How, I ask the people of America, can we fail in our duty when we have men who hold vital their duty to God and their country? Duty to God—love of country! These are virtues which are entirely strange to the Axis countries which replace both God and country with ruthless megalomaniacs.

Mr. President, the boys fighting on the battle line so that you and I and the rest of the world can be free—free in every respect—know that they must crush the lustful, selfish, cruel international vagrants, as they will do, with God's help.

Backing up these men, on the home front is the legion of fine boys, bred to the same oath and law—boys who, at fifteen, know why America has entered the fray. They would like to be able to fight alongside their older brother Scouts, but they realize they cannot; so they pitch in wholeheartedly to do what they can.

Of course, we all know what amazing amounts of wastepaper these boys collected—300 million pounds, I am told. Prior to that effort Scouts gathered in 87 percent of all the old aluminum collected in the United States.

Right now Boy Scouts have assumed an all-inclusive salvage collection responsibility from coast to coast, after sectional campaigns have yielded millions of pounds of scrap rubber, metal, rags, and other waste items.

Mr. President, every Government agency concerned with the war has felt the effects of Scout assistance. The Office of Civilian Defense has particularly felt the strength of Scouting in its use of boys for messenger and warden aide service. The American Red Cross, the U. S. O., and many other agencies serving our armed forces have received assistance from Scouts. Yes; these boys are doing good, and seeking more to do. They are our home front.

The Boy Scouts of today are the men of tomorrow who will help maintain peace. Many of the older ones may yet be in the armed forces, and at the making of the peace, which this time we mean to make permanent. They are grounded in the solid fundamentals of strong democracy. They know what freedom means; they know how important it is to all people, including their brother Scouts in all the world.

Ten years from now, 20, 50 years from now, the Boy Scout who knocks today on the door for the last piece of scrap will still be living according to the Scout oath and law. Contact with Boy Scouts leaves an indelible mark. For my part, I like their contribution to our life. It is the kind of healthy sign we need to help us keep our heads high. With it, we will win the war, and we will win the peace.

INSPECTION OF JAPANESE RELOCATION CENTERS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably Senate Resolution 101, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 101) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof duly appointed by the chairman of the committee, hereby is authorized to visit, for the purposes of inspection, during the present session of Congress, the Japanese relocation centers in the United States, the expenses incurred in pursuance thereof not to exceed $3,000, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Assistant Dental Surgeon James O. Blythe, Jr., to be passed assistant dental surgeon in the Public Health Service, from November 20, 1942.

By Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Hooker A. Doolittle, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer of class 4 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul general of the United States of America;

C. Burke Elbrick, of Kentucky, now a Foreign Service officer of class 7 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul of the United States of America; and Ernest de W. Mayer, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer of class 7 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul of the United States of America.

By Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

Sundry officers for promotion and temporary appointment in the Army of the United States.

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

The following named captains to be rear admirals in the Navy, for temporary service:

Richard L. Conolly
Frank J. Lowry
Ralph W. Christie

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION NOMINATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the lateness of the hour, and the probability that there will be some discussion of some of the War Manpower Commission nominations, I ask that they be passed over, and that we begin with nominations in the Judiciary, at the bottom of page 2 of the calendar.

In this connection I wish to say that I think the nominations to the War Manpower Commission should be disposed of at the next session. The Senate has taken the responsibility of confirming these appointees, and I do not think we should delay them unduly. I hope we can dispose of them at the next session.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think there will be any further delay in the matter.

THE JUDICIARY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar, beginning at the bottom of page 2.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Saxton Daniel to be United States attorney for the southern district of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Carl J. Werner to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the postmaster nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Marine Corps nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of all these confirmations.

GEN. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the President of the United States today sent to the Senate the nomination of Dwight David Eisenhower to be a general in the Army of the United States. He is to be the commander in chief of the Allied forces in the north African theater of operations. I have consulted with the majority leader, and my distinguished friend, the minority leader, and it is agreeable to them that I make request that the nomination be confirmed immediately. I know that we all join in expressing our good wishes to this superior soldier, and in wishing strength to his arm and to his men in their great undertaking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dwight David Eisenhower to be a general in the Army of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified forthwith of the confirmation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the President is to be notified immediately of all confirmations of today?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

IMPORTANCE OF THE RAILROAD INDUSTRY AND ITS EMPLOYEES TO THE PROSECUTION OF THE WAR

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, having been in the chair for some time I have not had an opportunity to be recognized, and I should like to make a brief statement now as in legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On February 2 the Railway Labor Executives' Association gave out a release. I think all persons who have been giving any study to the problems which confront us on the domestic front will recognize that railroad transportation, and the morale of the men serving the railroads of this country, are of vital and supreme importance to successful conduct of the war. I read one paragraph of the statement:

The heads of rail unions representing the 1,500,000 railroad employees declared today that railroad workers had about concluded they were not employed in industry essential to the winning of the war and that unless they are promptly accorded treatment equal to workers in war industries they would take action to get in industries where they will be recognized as doing their part to win the war.

I think it is very unfortunate that any such feeling should have grown up in the minds of the representatives of the men employed in the railroad systems of the United States and of the men themselves. In order that this may be brought to the attention of the Senate and of the country I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

I also wish to call attention to a letter I received under date of February 9th from Mr. J. G. Luhrsen, executive secretary-treasurer of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, in which he points out in detail, and amplifies, some of the reasons which prompted the railroad labor executives to issue this statement. It is true that one of their complaints has been to some extent met today by the nomination of two members to the Mediation Board. It is rather an anomalous situation that that Board should have been without a quorum, practically, during all these critical months. I am glad these nominations have been made. But there are many other things to which Mr. Luhrsen calls attention which I think should have the attention of Congress and of the executive branch of the Government. It is for that reason that I have made this comment, and ask that the letter and the statement be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RAILWAY LABOR EXECUTIVES' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1943.

HON. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: For your information I am attaching hereto copy of a press release issued February 2 by the Railway Labor Executives' Association.

Our feeling, I believe, is well expressed in the very first paragraph. The lack of proper consideration of the essentiality of the railroad industry and its employees seems to have been relegated to the bottom of the class. Too many other people believe, even though without practical experience, that they know more about the industry than the railroad employees and their representatives.

With respect to point No. 1, although the presidential emergency boards recommended to the President of the United States certain increases and improved conditions, quite a number of the railroads have declined to accept such recommendations. Under the Railway Labor Act, section 10, unless modified by an Executive order of the President, it is necessary to take a strike vote indicating the substantial interruption of transportation in order to induce the National Mediation Board to recommend to the President that he create and appoint an emergency board for the final disposition of such wage dispute. As patriotic citizens we dislike any publicity with respect to a threatened strike and did request that the President issue an Executive order which would circumvent the necessity of such threats. This the President did do on October 3, 1942, and up to the present time there is contention on the part of some Government agencies who insist upon carrying out what they consider their prerogative with the net result that nothing has as yet been accomplished through which wage disputes can be settled until final determination is made as to what agency will have the definite and final authority.

The War Labor Board wants to retain authority for giving approval to any recommendation that may be made by a panel of three chosen from nine men appointed by the President after such panel has heard the case and which brings about a very inconsistent condition. In other words, we feel that a board of three chosen from the panel after making its recommendations to the President should not require the further approval of another governmental agency such as the War Labor Board.

Paragraph 2 of our release shows the situation of the National Mediation Board at the present time. For more than a year we have had only two members on the National Mediation Board, and the term of one of these two expired on January 31, 1943, and the vacancy has as yet not been filled; thus the Railway Labor Act, or the law, is made inoperative, since one member of the Board does not constitute a majority or a quorum. To have the National Mediation Board vacancy filled, and which vacancy has existed now for more than a year, has been our constant endeavor but with no success. One of the members of the Mediation Board requested and did receive a leave of absence, and has for the past year devoted his entire time to the Office of Defense Transportation, thereby creating a continued handicap so far as the successful operation of the National Mediation Board is concerned.

If we had the full membership on the National Mediation Board and because of the complications now encountered with respect to the War Labor Board wanting to retain certain jurisdiction, we could during the interim and until finally settled continue to move forward under section 10 whereby the National Mediation Board could recommend board to handle present pending disputes. However, having only one member on the National Mediation Board, that member alone cannot comply with the law and make a recommendation for such an emergency board.

With respect to No. 3, it must be clearly obvious to anyone exercising sane judgment that men will not remain in the railroad industry at an average wage of 74 cents per hour (and we have thousands of employees receiving only 46 cents an hour) while the average for all the industries is 96 cents per hour. Furthermore, right now the Office of Price Administration is arguing before the Interstate Commerce Commission for the rescinding of the passenger and freight rate increases granted subsequent to the 1941 Emergency Board wage increase recommendations which are bound to further interfere with a settlement of the pending wage-increase movement. Obviously those industries outside of the railroad industry will benefit from a lower freight rate, particularly so that they should be able to exceed their present 96-cent average rate, thus spreading still further the now-existing differential between the low railroad industry and that of other industries.

Yesterday there was a further hearing with respect to the importation of Mexicans for track labor in the Southwest, particularly the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroads, before the War Manpower Management-Labor Policy Committee. I want to give you some of the highlights concerning the evidence presented by the railroads.

For more than 2 years the Southern Pacific Railroad has made endeavors to get authority to import Mexican track workers; the State Department having turned them down some time ago, the opportunity was ripe to seek it through the Manpower Commission. After hearing, on December 4, the policy committee voted for the importation of Mexicans for track labor. I, as one member of the committee, voted for it on the definite understanding that certain conditions would first have to be agreed to before Mexicans could be imported for track workers. This, however, was not done, and subsequently I appealed to the full Manpower Commission in opposition to the policy committee's action. However, the order went out, nevertheless, and the State Department is now working with the Mexican Government to work out an agreement permitting the importation of Mexicans.

I then moved later on to reconsider the action and rescind the policy committee's action, because of subsequent developments justifying the rescinding of the former action. Management representatives of the policy committee insisted on the railroads, the Army and other interests then also being heard. This was granted and such an open hearing was held on Friday, February 5.

Both the Southern Pacific and Sante Fe railroads had their representatives appear and presented their side exceptionally well, having the full support of the Army and the Office of Defense Transportation. (For your information our railroad employees do not have a single person on the Office of Defense Transportation as representative of labor, although it has been in existence for more than a year. We have tried repeatedly to get representation but without success.)

Our railroad retirement board placement bureau service has furnished the Southern Pacific and the Sante Fe with thousands of men, including Negroes, but the railroads claim they will not stay and leave about as fast as they are sent out. This is but natural when the railroads have a rate of pay of 46 cents an hour, at some points it runs as high as 52 cents an hour. But that is not alone the striking reason why our domestic labor declines to stay with the railroads, when they can go across the street and get 88 cents to a dollar an hour in other industries for work of a similar occupation. It is the deplorable housing conditions, the State of California having investigated reports 5 or 6 camps out of 14 in Los Angeles County alone as being unfit for habitation.

Recently because of heavy snows, rains, and other acts of God, and which is not dissimilar as compared with other years, the Southern Pacific representative declared they could not get Negroes to work in the snow and it was necessary to use soldiers of the Army to help clear some of these conditions. The Army gave them the men and when the Southern Pacific was asked who paid these men, they said they could not pay them and that they received the regular Government pay. Therefore the United States Government is furnishing help free to the Southern Pacific which railroad is the second highest in net earnings of the Nation, the Pennsylvania being the only one to exceed it. The Southern Pacific representative stated they would and wanted to pay for the soldiers' work but could not do so, but that they intended to do something to repay the Government, and the only suggestion made was to utilize that money so gained to improve their own commissary conditions.

Furthermore, this same railroad while absolutely declining or refusing to grant 1 cent of increase over and above the 46 cents per hour minimum to the representatives of these section laborers only last month subcontracted this service to a private contractor who pays these same men doing the same identical work with the company's tools and materials 75 cents to 85 cents an hour. When asked what the additional costs were to the Southern Pacific as payment to the contractor they gave the answer as not knowing what that amounted to.

The Railroad Retirement Board furnished information to the effect that their own regional men had reported that there was a supply of approximately 40,000 unemployed domestic labor available if the substandard conditions would first be improved to levels paid in other industries, in fact, believed that domestic labor would go at 75 cents an hour with a guarantee of decent and humane treatment as to living quarters, food, etc.

However, when final decision was made by the policy committee, it was a resolution to the effect that the facts presented as of December 4, when original motion to permit the importation of Mexicans was adopted, plus the further consideration presented on February 5, reenforced their former position for the necessity of track workers being furnished these railroads, and recommeded further that the chairman immediately do what he could to have the conditions complained of corrected, including the wage structure. This, of course, is a meaningless gesture since the chairman has no control with respect to wages, and so forth.

Much more could be said concerning the general attitude of the railroads showing a decided preference for Mexicans as against domestic, especially Negro labor. The entire picture can well be summarized in the terse statement that these railroads are set on the importation of foreign labor in order to maintain their present substandard conditions after the duration.

With respect to point No. 4, our association was successful in having the President agree to issue an executive order which would obviate taking a strike vote under section 10 of the Railway Labor Act, but since that time there has been a jurisdictional claim by the War Labor Board, insisting that whatever their adopted policies may be, they should apply to the railroad industry and ever since that time wage adjustments have been stymied until it may be determined by another executive order of the President as to who has final and conclusive jurisdiction. Such an order was finally issued on February 4, but it is far from satisfactory to the railroad organizations as it now stands. There is a possibility of it working to some extent but far from being the equivalent of what we feel is necessary to have it work successfully.

No. 6 shows what we have been up against and the serious delays it has caused. The War Labor Board has persisted on it holding control, while we claim to do so, interfering with the successful operation of the Railway Labor Act. It has been our very definite understanding that the President intended under his original order issued in May 1942 that the railroad industry should continue with its Railway Labor Act, separate and distinct from that of the War Labor Board.

This is a brief comment and very much more could be said of how labor generally suffers, regardless of its every and best efforts to do everything possible to win the war as quickly as possible.

The many and diversified agencies now each having a part of authority should be integrated and some final authority over all of them must be vested in some head, for as long as it remains divided as it now is, we are but prolonging the war and furthermore destroying the morale of the people as a whole. Everyone is more than anxious to exert its life and soul to the cause and give its last hearthrob to the saving of this great Nation, but it realizes the many blocks to the paths of a sublime ambition if present methods are to be followed and continued.

It should be and is the earnest and solemn prayer of every red-blooded American that the legislature, which is the real avenue through which they can appeal, that this great body be impressed to see the danger which lies ahead. Selfishness and private enterprise should be curbed and made to fall in line with the goal of ambition of the rank and file to win the war and win the peace.

Sincerely yours,

J. G. LUHRSEN,
Executive Secretary.

FEBRUARY 2, 1943.

The heads of rail unions representing the 1,500,000 railroad employees declared today that railroad workers had about concluded they were not employed in industry essential to the winning of the war and that unless they are promptly accorded treatment equal to workers in war industries they would take action to get in industries where they will be recognized as doing their part to win the war.

They said:

1. Many railroad workers have not received an increase in wages since 1937, although two Presidential emergency boards recommended to the President of the United States that the wages of these workers be raised. Some railroads refuse to accept these recommendations.

2. For nearly 2 years the National Mediation Board, the heart of the machinery of the Railway Labor Act, has been impaired by inadequate members and now there is only one member. Thus the law is made inoperative. Many, many efforts have been made to have this situation corrected, but the condition gets worse instead of better.

3. Railroad employees work 48 (some 56 and even 63) hours per week for straight time. All other industrial workers get straight time for 40 hours, one and one-half time for the sixth day and double time for the seventh day. The average hourly earnings of all workers in the railroad industry is 74 cents, while the average for all other industries is 96 cents. These low wages and bad conditions in the railroad industry are a hangover from the 10 years of depression.

4. The unions requested the President to and, in May 1942, he did issue an Executive order which made it unnecessary to take a strike vote and fix a date to strike to get an emergency board to investigate and report to the President how a dispute should be settled.

5. The President issued an Executive Order October 3, 1942 announcing the wage stabilization policy. The unions since that date have been trying to get the procedure for applying that policy to the railroad industry clarified. Several Government officials and agencies have been urging their pet views and claiming jurisdiction notwithstanding the President of the United States has stated several times just what he wants done.

6. Is this pulling and hauling all a part of a well laid plan? The railroad employees are asking for and will, if given a chance, prove they are entitled to a wage increase. The railroads now have the money to grant the employers' request. The country knows these facts. The Office of Price Administration knows these facts but they demand railroad freight rates and passenger fares be reduced. They press their demand and action thereon is expedited while at the same time the employees wage case is stalled by this pulling and hauling and delay to act. Is the purpose to subsidize other industries who are paying higher wages by taking money from the railroads so they will have a better claim to continue paying low wages? Are the railroad workers in the war effort or are they not?

If they are a part of the war effort then stop the raid on rates and fares, clear the way and raise these low wages—give the employee a square deal and thus assure them they are part of the army fighting to win the war.

They are moving more business now than in the last war, or any other period, with about half as many employees. They know the vital part they are playing in winning this war, but they feel their loyal service is not appreciated by those in Government or elsewhere who are exerting themselves to deny or delay them in using the machinery of the R. L. A. to secure the just treatment long overdue.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, the holy Giver of all gifts, in Thee there is no darkness at all. We never could have understood Thy Fatherhood except for the advent of Thine only begotten Son. We pray that in His spirit we may solve all vexed problems, enabling us to prove ourselves worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called.

Almighty God, when force seems stronger, when rude passions dominate the finer feelings, subdue them that the spirit of sacrifice may be magnified and exalted. Beyond all selfish and group interests, oh, let the thought of our country's life and destiny come first in word and deed, strengthening the vanguard of freedom with its blessings for all. For the welfare of our Republic we pray for love to serve our fellowmen, for light to see the goal ahead, and for peace throughout all our favored land. Blessed Lord, where the battles rage and the surging winds sweep, and where the innocent are drugged with pain and death, have mercy, have mercy. With a solemn breath at Thy altar, Heavenly Father, we pray for our President; oh, be with him in Thy sustaining presence that he may be assured of Thy blessing and the loyalty of every section of our country. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday during the quorum call, roll call No. 9, the members of the Ways and Means Committee remained in session on important business, and it is for that reason that they did not respond to their names.

PERSONAL APOLOGY

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday when the resolution to continue the Dies committee was pending, I made an ill-tempered and ugly reference to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] which should not have been made. I was provoked into the making of that statement by the chairman of the Rules Committee, who, though he opposed the resolution to continue the Dies committee, saw fit to take the time and submit the matter to the House. However, that was not justification for the unkind reference that I made to those gentlemen nor for the breach of the etiquette of the House.

Upon protest of those gentlemen I was permitted, with the kind consent of the House, to withdraw the remarks; but that is not quite sufficient. It does not completely satisfy my feelings. I wish now to humbly tender my apologies to those gentlemen and to the House. I regret having spoken in an ill-tempered and unkind manner.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I just wish to make the observation—I did not know my friend was going to make these remarks—that it is a big man who recognizes when he makes a mistake, and it is a bigger man who, as our friend, the gentleman from Georgia, has done today, makes the apology that he has made.

Mr. COX. I thank the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SALE OF W. P. A. MATERIAL

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein some clippings from the local press.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. BELL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. SLAUGHTER] be excused for 3 days, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT WASTE

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call your attention to the fact that those of us who have offices in the Old House Office Building this morning were the recipients of a graph from the Treasury Department. I think Members who are in the new building will perhaps get them later in the day. It is a graph concerning information touching the extent of participation in the pay roll savings plan for War Savings bonds and the sale of War bonds.

To my astonishment I found that it was in one container and then that the container was in a second container apparently with tin ends. I have had it weighed. It weighs 1 ounce less than three-quarters of a pound. I think it is something we can well carry in mind as we consider these appropriation bills on the floor of the House in the weeks to come. I hope the membership will keep this item in mind. This container is strong enough to be sent to Guadalcanal for a soldier to read, from there to Alaska for a Navy man to read, from there to Iceland for an aviator to read, and thence come back to Washington to us to read. It is a sturdy package.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. I yield.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I received one of those containers this morning and the same thought was running through my mind; that it was an utter extravagance.

Mr. SATTERFIELD. It is made of strategic material. They are considering cutting down the use of paper to the newspapers of the country, yet this one container used to send a few sheets itself contains nearly three-quarters of a pound of pulp.

Mr. SHAFER. How did the gentleman vote on the Keefe penalty mail provision in the Treasury Department bill?

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter from the New England Council to council directors, council members, and executives of some 1,300 commercial and industrial associations in New England.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. LUDLOW addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein the text of a bill I am introducing today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE MEAT SITUATION IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, roll call No. 9 of yesterday notes the absence of a number of members of the California delegation. We were attending an important conference with Secretary of Agriculture Wickard and Mr. Brown, Director of the O. P. A., with reference to the alarming meat shortage in California.

The meat shortage in California is greater than in any other State and our population is increasing faster than in any other State. Men engaged in hard and laborious work in shipyards, mines, airplane plants, and on the farms have gone for a week or 10 days without meat. We hope for relief as a result of yesterday's conference.

THE PENALTY MAILING PRIVILEGE

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SATTERFIELD] voted against the so-called Keefe penalty mail amendment to the Treasury Department appropriation bill only day before yesterday, his remarks today are most interesting.

I, too, received one of the mailing tubes to which he has referred and in my opinion it completely justifies the adoption of the Keefe amendment, which it will be remembered was opposed by practically every Member on that side of the House. The vote was close, 205 to 200, if I recall correctly.

Now this amendment should stay in the bill when it comes back from the other body and we will need the gentleman's vote to keep it there.

This mailing tube of which he speaks is conclusive testimony in favor of the Keefe amendment. Not only that, it is a wicked example of the abuse of the penalty mail privilege and an example of governmental waste of money and critical war materials that could well be termed "criminal."

Sealed at both ends with heavy tin and containing two sheets of paper showing unnecessary charts relating to War bond sales, this mailing tube weighs 11 ounces. Every Member of Congress got one and only the Lord knows how many thousands were mailed to banks and other agencies throughout the country. Think of the bonds that had to be sold to pay the cost of this monstrosity. Keep the Keefe amendment in the Treasury appropriation bill. It will put a stop to such uncalled for waste.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the New York Times by Godfrey N. Nelson entitled "Pay-as-you-go Tax Only a Correction."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, on February 22, 1842, at Springfield, Ill., Abraham Lincoln said:

> This is the one hundred and tenth anniversary of the birthday of Washington. We are met to celebrate this day. Washington is the mightiest name on earth—long since mightiest in moral reformation. On that name a eulogy is expected. It cannot be. To add brightness to the sun or glory to the name of Washington is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe pronounce the name, and in its naked, deathless splendor leave it shining on.

Could any spoken words be more adequate today in commemorating the one hundred and thirty-fourth anniversary of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln?

Little did this young lawyer—33 years of age—dream that his own name would take its place alongside of Washington as one of the greatest Americans who ever lived.

Realizing as I do that the inadequacy of any attempt on my part to add luster to the name of Lincoln, I do feel that we might recall some of the ideas and ideals of this great American as expressed by him during his lifetime.

In another speech at Springfield, Ill., in 1840, he said:

> Many free countries have lost their liberty, and ours may lose hers, but if she shall, be it my proudest plume, not that I was the last to desert, but that I never deserted her. If I ever feel the soul within me elevate and expand to those dimensions not wholly unworthy of its Almighty Architect, it is when I contemplate the cause of my country deserted by all the world beside, and I, standing up boldly and alone, hurling defiance at her victorious oppressors. And here, without contemplating consequences, before high heaven, and in the face of the whole world, I swear eternal fidelity to the just cause, as I deem it, of the land of my life, my liberty, and my love. And who that thinks with me will not fearlessly adopt the oath I take?

Such were the ideals of the young Lincoln of his country and great love for it. Such are the ideals of young Americans fighting throughout the world today to protect and preserve the free institutions of our country as well as to avail other nations and other people the blessings of freedom and liberty.

Mr. Speaker, in every place, everywhere, the thoughts of not only Americans but all peoples are turned this day to Abraham Lincoln with reverence and affection. The influence of his life and character is reflected in the minds and hearts of all men and women, an inspiration to those who fight and to those for whose freedom and liberation the fight is being waged.

Let us all rededicate ourselves to his great principles that all nations "shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that the Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRACHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the subject of the pay-as-you-go income tax.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THOMAS A. EDISON

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. VOORHIS of California addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert three different memorials from the Montana Legislature in the RECORD, one having to do with the price of copper, one having to do with the lack of farm machinery, and one having to do with the shortage of farm labor in Montana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I have three unanimous consent requests; first, that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include some correspondence on the farm problem; second, that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the future of the liberal arts colleges during the prosecution of the war; and, third, that I may be permitted to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND CONGRESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the 48-hour week order set forth by the administration, through the President and the heads of agencies, causes me to once again say publicly what I have said on many occasions in the past, and that is that the House Labor Committee has itself a responsibility to consider corrective legislation in the field of labor during the prosecution of this terrible conflict.

Desirable as this longer work week is to our war production, it is regrettable that Congress was not the leader in securing its adoption. We should have acted months ago.

I regret exceedingly the illness of the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey, the chairman of that committee. I know I express the feeling of her friends in this body when I hope for her complete recovery and an early return to this forum. I feel, however, that the Labor Committee should proceed promptly to survey the production field and take appropriate action at an early date to correct many of the inequities now existent.

Mr. Speaker, during the Seventy-seventh Congress the Labor Committee, of which I am a member, was charged with failure to properly consider desirable legislation. I trust that condition will not again exist. Rightful gains of the worker must be preserved. Our committee can be constructive and propose desirable corrective measures.

If we fail to assume leadership I am certain enemies of unionism and sound labor practice will act destructively and thus impair unity during the war effort. That must not take place.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] may extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a newspaper release.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE]?

There was no objection.

RELEASE OF SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, heretofore a special order was granted to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] to address the House for 10 minutes today. He asked me to convey to the Speaker the information that he releases this special order.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include a Lincoln Day address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly, it was 81 years ago today that Abraham Lincoln left Springfield, Ill., to become the Chief Magistrate of this Nation. As the train was departing from Springfield, the ladies of that town gathered at the railroad station and tendered to him a silken banner. On that banner they had stitched the ninth verse, first chapter of Joshua. If I remember that verse correctly, it is as follows:

> Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: For the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.

That was a great comfort for a great man in an hour of tribulation, and I think a great comfort for a courageous Congress in an hour of tribulation in the world's history.

LIBELOUS BOOKS

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RAMEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, we have been requested to not introduce bills or resolutions if we can help it, in order to comply with our economy program, so I hope this message goes out to the libraries of the Nation and that you will take this thought to your libraries.

We honor and revere our great and good men by addresses, and it is fit and proper that we do so. Post mortem eulogy is only back pay. For our living good and great we have epithets, for our dead, epitaphs. As long as one is doing good work he is maligned; however, as he becomes incapacitated we cheer up, but not until the doctor has signed the death certificate do we give proper praise and send flowers where we begrudged him bread. Lincoln was no exception to the rule.

In several cases cowardly would-be authors have assailed the great, the good and pure after they have passed on. Inasmuch as the right of action for libel and slander dies with the passing of the one unjustly maligned these so-called writers feel secure. How treacherous. And thus they hide behind the counterfeit mask of the debunker. I fear, however, that what we honor is nullified by the libelous books, especially as to Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson, Warren Harding, Grover Cleveland, and others. Such as Judge Felix Ally, Gaston Means, Edward F. Daken, Felita Springer, and Nan Britton have so written, and their books have reached many libraries.

I hope that the Members will convey this information to the libraries, that the libraries will read the RECORD, and pay heed in order that these books may not be read by the youth of the land. For every man who hears a good address about Lincoln, other great and good men, hundreds of our youth are getting these libelous books from the library. I hope they may be discontinued voluntarily by the libraries without the necessity of a bill or a resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial on the lease-lend report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short poem from one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD with regard to Thomas A. Edison, and to include therein an address I made in the House with reference to him some time ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

THE BLACK DRAGON SOCIETY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the most dangerous organization in America is the Black Dragon Society, which is organized and financed by Japan. It is today the greatest espionage organization this Nation has ever known. The people on the Pacific coast are alarmed over this situation. My mail from that section is piling high because of what I have said here about the Japanese menace. The people are demanding action now.

On yesterday the House had the wisdom to extend the life of the Dies committee. We are now demanding, and shall continue to demand, that the Dies committee begin now to investigate this Black Dragon Society, which has its loathesome tentacles not only on the Pacific coast but extended into every city in America and even into the Federal departments. Their representatives are even on the Federal pay roll. Today every town in America of any size is honeycombed with them. When the Dies committee goes to the bottom of this situation it will reveal an espionage organization that is today serving Germany, Italy, and Japan, and is one of the most dangerous subversive agencies that has ever threatened the safety of the people of this country.

COLUMBIA BASIN PROJECT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 109), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 839) to amend the act approved May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208) by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation in lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute an additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker after we have concluded the consideration of the Smith resolution today I am going to ask for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 105, giving the Committee on Appropriations the authority to investigate certain matters.

I announce further that on Tuesday the Committee on Rules will hear all gentlemen who desire to appear before the committee in regard to the Hobbs bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address I delivered last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

CIVILIAN PILOT TRAINING

Mr. NICHOLS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 110), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1670) to amend section 2 of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, as amended. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

INVESTIGATION OF ACTS OF EXECUTIVE AGENCIES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 102, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House, which said committee is authorized to conduct investigations of any action, rule, procedure, regulation, order, or directive taken or promulgated by any department or independent agency of the Federal Government where complaint is made to said committee that such action, rule, regulation, procedure, order, or directive—

(1) Is beyond the scope of the power or authority granted to such department or independent agency by Congress or by Executive order.

(2) Invades the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of citizens of the United States.

(3) Inflicts penalties for failure to comply with such rules, regulations, or directives without affording those accused of violation an opportunity to present their defense before a fair and impartial tribunal.

The said committee shall report to the Congress from time to time the results of such investigations and such recommendations as they see fit with respect to the personnel of those administering any such department or independent agency, or shall recommend such legislation or amendments to existing legislation as they deem desirable.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act anywhere within or without the District of Columbia whether the House is in session or has adjourned or is in recess; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents; to administer oaths; to take testimony; to have printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable within the amount appropriated therefor. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in the case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is necessary for me to explain the resolution that is before us now. I take it you paid attention to the reading of the resolution. It provides for the creation of a special committee of the House that would have jurisdiction to hear any and all complaints that might come to it, from any source, that any department or any agency of the Government has issued rules, regulations, procedures, and so forth, beyond the scope of the power or authority granted by Congress or placed an erroneous construction or interpretation on any legislation passed by the Congress.

Personally, I fully appreciate that this resolution will pass, just as I knew full well yesterday that the Dies resolution would pass. Nevertheless, I felt in honor bound then to express my views on it and oppose it.

I was very glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi today express his view that there is a certain organization guilty of un-American activities that has not been investigated.

I hope that organization and any other organization or individual guilty of un-American or subversive activities, I care not who they are, will be investigated.

I regret that this resolution, like many others which have been forced through the Committee on Rules by those Democrats opposed to the President with the aid of the Republican members, not only to harass and embarrass the President, but certain departments and agencies as well. I repeat that we could devote our time and energy to better advantage if we tried to cooperate and aid the President in this tremendous task in the winning of the war and ultimate permanent peace.

It is my observation that while the Republicans, though promising their constituency at home and reiterating their promises on the floor that they would cooperate with the President in the winning of the war, their actions invariably belie their assurances. I feel that they will gain nothing and from the hundreds of communications that come to me, a great number of which have come from Republicans, the people at home are beginning to understand these political activities.

The final result as to the attacks upon the President and the administration will be the same as in 1936 and 1940.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] was peeved because I filed the report on the Dies resolution, as the gentleman from Georgia himself introduced that resolution. In justification of my action may I say that ever since I have been chairman of the Rules Committee I have endeavored to give each and every Member opportunity to express his views upon any measures coming before the House.

Unfortunately, on two occasions when other gentlemen reported rules the previous question was ordered within such a short time that the opponents of the rules had no opportunity to be heard. It was for the protection of the minority of the House, for the protection of those who were opposed to the bill, and who appealed to me for time, that I felt compelled and I felt it my duty as the chairman of the committee to carry out the wishes of the Committee on Rules and report the resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman cannot find it possible to agree with me that the practice adopted by the gentleman of taking resolutions reported by his committee and appearing upon the floor of the House and opposing them is one of doubtful propriety. In other words, in the instant case the Committee on Rules, as I recall, reported the pending resolution without a dissenting vote. The gentleman, however, has declared his opposition to the resolution. He reports it and assumes the responsibility of sponsoring it here on the floor, although yet, as I understand, he is still opposed to it.

As to the Dies resolution, the gentleman disclosed to his committee that he was opposed to it. However, he did not vote against reporting it. It was a resolution that I introduced. The gentleman reported the resolution and took 25 of his 30 minutes in opposition to a resolution reported by his own committee. Is that not a practice of doubtful propriety?

Mr. SABATH. No; I do not think so. With all due respect to the gentleman from Georgia, I think the House will agree with me that I have never purposely been unfair in anything I have done. I would be the last man to want to be charged with unfairness. However, the chairman of a committee has certain duties to perform, and I feel it to be my duty to perform them to the best of my ability. I regret that I do not possess the ability of the gentleman from Georgia; nevertheless, acting as I do under a handicap frequently, I assure the gentleman and I assure the House that I am trying to carry out my duties to the best of my ability.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SABATH. In a moment. I just want to answer something first. The gentleman is in error when he says that I voted for the Smith resolution and for this resolution in the committee. I did not vote for these resolutions. The gentleman knows how they were gotten out of the committee. It was a forced procedure, and I did not want to set myself up against that majority here for this resolution. I did not wish to be contrary and delay consideration of it.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] knows that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the ranking minority member of our committee, also favored his resolution, and if he and the gentleman from New York controlled the time, where would the minority opposition have been accorded time in which to express their resentment and their views in opposing the adoption of the resolution? Strictly speaking, it is intended, under the regular rules of the House, that those favoring and opposing legislation shall have equal time for general debate, but, as has happened in so many instances where both the majority and minority Members having control of the time, those Members who were opposed to the legislation have not received an equal share of the time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I do not think this controversy serves any good purpose. I do not think the gentlemen should discuss what happened in the executive meeting of the Rules Committee. It is entirely out of order, and I hope the gentleman will not proceed any further.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman appreciate the fact that this is the last time, as chairman of the Committee on Rules, in my judgment, he will be permitted to perform in this manner?

Mr. SABATH. No; I do not. As usual, the gentleman assumes too much, and I presume his statement has been made for publicity effect.

Mr. COX. I assume nothing. I just simply have the conviction that our committee does not propose to permit practices of this kind to continue.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. In this connection let me say that on all the committees on which I have served, and I have been chairman of one for many years, whenever a bill is reported out that the chairman is opposed to, usually a motion is submitted that some other member report it, and while the chairman may be charged with the responsibility of calling it up on the floor, it is his duty to yield to the man who did report it, but that is a matter that should be taken care of in the committee.

Mr. SABATH. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. From now on I would like to see legislation on the floor handled by men in sympathy with it, and not opposed to it.

Mr. SABATH. I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi, and, therefore, I feel that I am within my rights, because no motion was made in the committee, and I feel that the House agrees with me that no one was injured, and no harm was done, and that all those in opposition, the minority, had an opportunity to be heard, and that was my main and only reason. I knew that the resolution would pass, and we all knew it would pass. My main object was to protect the rights of the minority, and if I am guilty of any transgression, I am very sorry, but I do not think I was.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. For a question.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. For just a moment, and while the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is still on the floor. In view of what both gentlemen said in reference to the investigation of the Black Dragon Society, I am glad to inform the House and the gentleman that this group has already been under investigation by the Dies committee, and that a report is in course of preparation, and that we do find it to be a dangerous society.

Mr. SABATH. I am mighty glad, and if the gentleman's committee had made a report to the House, or had so informed the House, I presume the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] would not have raised the question. A similar question was raised by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], that an investigation had been made of Nazis and the activities of Nazis, and of Fascists, and that no report has as yet been made, and it still reposes in the committee. Be that as it may, although I have taken the floor, I know this resolution will, of course, pass, but I am taking the floor only to call attention to a few matters.

From time to time we have been hearing on the floor something of the bureaucrats and the crackpots writing the laws. Many years ago, as far back as 30 years ago, measures would come here from the various departments, to be submitted to the committees, and the committees would go over those proposed bills. About 20 or so years ago, yes, 22 years ago, the House saw fit to appoint a special drafting bureau giving the Members and the committees opportunity to prepare their own bills or resolutions. Ever since that time I am informed that this drafting bureau of the House has been active, and all those bills or resolutions that came here from the various bureaus have been submitted naturally by the committees to the special drafting bureau of the House. After that bureau has been called upon to perform its work, and has passed on the verbiage, whether it is within the rules and regulations, whether it complies with the legal questions that might be raised, the committee has then acted on the recommendation as to the legality of the provisions of the bill. So I say I feel today that the new membership, as well as some of the older Members, should know that there exists such a bureau, and that it is ready and willing to aid the Members in drafting any bills they may desire to prepare on any subject which may be near and dear to their hearts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does this take in the War and Navy Department?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; as I understand it, and I think the gentleman knows that the Naval Affairs Committee and the Military Affairs Committee submit their bills to the drafting bureau of the House.

Mr. GIFFORD. And they will report as against the personnel as well as action?

Mr. SABATH. This has nothing to do with the personnel.

Mr. GIFFORD. But the resolution reads that they shall make recommendation as they see fit with respect to personnel.

Mr. SABATH. They have no jurisdiction, of course, to say what personnel should be discharged or engaged or hired. All they have is jurisdiction to pass on the verbiage and form of the bills of the various committees as they are drafted or submitted or prepared on any subject by the committee.

Mr. GIFFORD. This is plainly readable—"They shall make recommendations."

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is referring to the pending resolution?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. "This committee shall recommend action as to personnel." Does that mean that they should remove them?

Mr. SABATH. I was not referring to the resolution before us. I was refering to the activities of the drafting bureau in drafting bills.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a brief question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. COX. I have canvassed practically all members of the committee except the gentleman from Illinois and one of our colleagues on this side, and it is the wish of the vast majority of the Rules Committee that the number of the committee be increased from five to seven. I wonder if the gentleman, in the light of what I have just stated, would yield to me to offer such an amendment to the resolution, or if the gentleman would be kind enough to offer it himself?

Mr. SABATH. So far I have at all times complied with the wish of the majority of the committee and I shall not deny them the right to request that the number of the membership should be increased.

Mr. COX. With the assurance I have just given the gentleman, will he not be kind enough to offer that amendment?

Mr. SABATH. I will later on, as soon as I am satisfied, because I always want to confer with the minority, which it has been my habit to do. If that is the wish of a majority of the committee I will be only too pleased to carry it out.

The only thing that puzzles me about the Smith resolution is this: This committee would pass on complaints, as to whether the rules and regulations are in variance with the laws that we have passed. I do not know whether this committee sets itself above the judicial branch of our Government or not. I, for one, do not feel that we should attempt to deprive the judiciary of the rights which they have been given under the Constitution. I think it will be up to the courts to pass upon whether any rule or regulation is in violation of or contrary to the verbiage or the intent of Congress.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think I understand the gentleman's point. With regard to the second provision of the bill at the top of page 2, it seems to me there is some danger of what the gentleman points out; but with regard to No. 1 and No. 3, the question is whether or not an executive agency has exceeded the power that the Congress intended to give it, frankly it seems to me, and I am compelled to say, I think that is the proper function of the Congress. My own view has been, however, that the standing committees of the House ought to do that job. But I do think it is a job that Congress needs to do, and probably right at this time particularly needs to do.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. This resolution apparently will involve considerable display of legal acumen and legal knowledge. I wonder whether or not those who would be in charge of the destinies of the committee would not use the Judiciary Committee of the House, because of its knowledge of the Constitution, its interpretation, its knowledge of Federal and State court decisions? There must be correlated the rules and regulations of the various agencies and departments with the Constitution and with the basic statutes. There must be correlated the actions of the various individuals in the departments and agencies with the basic statutes to see whether or not there are any discrepancies between what they have done or should have done or what they have the right to do.

While I do not speak for the Judiciary Committee as a whole, there are members of that committee who would be most anxious to cooperate wholeheartedly and give unremitting toil in the interest of the deliberations and activities of this committee.

Mr. SABATH. I will say in conclusion that I have the utmost confidence in the Judiciary Committee, but we also have other Members who are good lawyers who are not fortunate enough to be members of that committee. But I know the Speaker will endeavor to select the most able and fair men on this committee.

I will reserve the balance of my time, and I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] as much time as he may desire to perform one of his usual kindly acts.

FAITHFUL EMPLOYEE

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday last marked the thirty-fifth anniversary of Sam Hardy's appointment as messenger to the Ways and Means Committee and the members of that body saw fit to recognize Sam's long, faithful, and entirely satisfactory service with appropriate remarks which appear in the printed hearings of the committee for that day.

In order that the entire membership of the House may know what manner of man Sam Hardy really is, and with the high esteem in which he is held by the members of the Ways and Means Committee, I desire at this time to incorporate in my remarks that portion of the printed proceedings for Tuesday which set forth the expressions of good will already referred to:

INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX—PAY-AS-YOU-GO TAXATION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
Washington, D. C.,
Tuesday, February 9, 1943.

The committee met at 10 a. m., the Honorable Robert L. Doughton (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

The chairman would like to call the attention of the committee to a rather important matter that I am sure the committee will be interested in. This is the thirty-fifth anniversary of the service of Sam Hardy, the messenger to this committee. Thirty-five years ago today he began work for this committee. It is also the thirtieth anniversary of his wedding. He began working for the committee 35 years ago and was married 30 years ago, and in view of his most faithful and efficient service to the committee, and his unfailing courtesy, I would like to make some expression of our appreciation for his services.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure all the members of the committee join in conveying to Sam our hearty congratulations on this occasion, marking the thirty-fifth anniversary of his becoming an employee of this committee. No man in the Government service has rendered more loyal and efficient service than has Sam Hardy, and I am sure we all appreciate the valuable service and assistance he gives us as members of this committee.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to endorse all that has been said with regard to Sam Hardy. He is more than faithful, he is an indefatigable worker; he can lay his hands on any document that we want at a moment's notice. He is always cheerful and obliging and the Ways and Means Committee would not be the same without Sam. I think we should give him a day off, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. REED. I have had the opportunity of watching the service rendered by Sam Hardy for more than 24 years. I don't know how anyone could give a better example of loyalty to the Government than Sam, and I congratulate him on that service. It has been a splendid example of what a Government servant can be. I personally congratulate him.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I am sure that I voice the sentiments of all members of the committee when I say that Sam Hardy is regarded as a most faithful employee of the committee, and a more valuable employee of the Government could not be found anywhere.

Mr. KNUTSON. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the chairman of the Rules Committee that he might now yield to the author of the resolution in order to explain the resolution to the House? I think that is his privilege and right.

Mr. SABATH. I did expect to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia in the opening, but he preferred to close the debate. That is the reason I did not yield to him.

Mr. FISH. This is an original resolution, and I think it is only fair that the author should explain it. This is an original bill; there is nothing to follow.

Mr. SABATH. It was the desire of the gentleman from Virginia to close the debate, and I am carrying out his wish.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I felt that if questions were raised during the consideration of the resolution I wanted to be in position to explain them. I do not know how much time the gentleman is going to use, but I suggest that he go ahead. I do not know what questions may be raised that I may want to answer. I should like to close if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. FISH. There is no opposition on this side that I know of. If the gentleman prefers I will go ahead.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I am for this resolution and I hope it is speedily adopted.

In a word, what this resolution seeks to do is to set up a committee of Congress which will be the agency of Congress to "ride herd" on some of our administrative agencies and see to it that they stay within the law. There is no reason that I know of why we should not have the right to expect that administrative agencies charged with carrying out the enactments of the Congress be required to stay within the scope of the authority of the statute creating them, and the Constitution. If this resolution is adopted a committee will be named. I take it that men who understand the law and who have had experience in these matters will be on that committee.

When complaint is made that an administrative agency is acting outside the scope of its authority, or seeking to inflict penalties without full and fair hearing, the agency or individual involved—the committee first having decided that there is some justification for the criticism—would be called before the forum which we are here creating to explain what authority, if any, there is for the assertion of the action on his or its part.

We have, of course, had to develop a tremendous amount of administrative procedure. We have had to concentrate a lot of authority. We have had to delegate a lot of power to administrative agencies. This has been inevitable in this great crisis. But this does not excuse us from the continuing responsibility of seeing to it that the authority of the statute creating the administrative agency is not violated.

Wide discretion in respect to matters involving the judgment of the agency must be granted. It may be said that courts furnish a guarantee against illegal acts, but we are all familiar with the substantial evidence rule of judicial review, and we know how difficult it is to attempt to set up a judicial review which can check the excesses of administrative agencies. This committee with the power that will be granted by this resolution, can certainly do much to keep the agencies in line, first, by pointing out actions outside the law, and second, by recommending legislation.

If the people of this country indicated anything last November, it was that they wanted the Congress to reassert its authority. They wanted the Congress to see to it that in the administration of the laws and of the Constitution administrators shall be held to account and kept within the bounds of their authority. While of necessity discretion, where discretion is permitted, must be vested in them, we do not want them inventing remedies, inflicting penalties, issuing rules and regulations that not only are outside the scope of the authority which created the agency, but which often are clearly in contravention of it. Any one of us could recite a lot of circumstances and situations in which there has been such an abuse of administrative authority and I am happy indeed to know that the House of Representatives here today is taking this action.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is the scope of this resolution broad enough to give the committee jurisdiction over an order issued directly by the President which is carried out, of course, by an agency, but an agency having nothing to do with the making of the order?

Mr. HALLECK. My interpretation of the resolution is that it would not specifically permit or authorize the committee to inquire into the Executive order as it comes directly from the President. But, if the gentleman will permit me, I think almost without exception the rules and regulations about which complaint is made come from the agencies under the original directive of some sort which comes from the President. Therefore, I think the resolution is broad enough to reach those things about which there is real complaint.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITTINGTON). The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the pending resolution. I am not an enthusiast about investigating committees, but, in view of the arrogant attitude of some of the executive agencies and their misuse of the power granted by Congress, it is imperative we take steps to see that Executive agencies and bureaus follow the law and confine themselves to the authority granted.

I have asked for this time in order to bring to the attention of the House a specific instance of the abuse of power by the Office of Price Administration. I refer to the recent action of that office in placing a price ceiling on corn at less than parity and in placing a price ceiling on wheat flour at a price which would reflect less-than-parity prices to the producers of wheat. The imposition of both of these ceilings is in direct violation of Public Law No. 729, Seventy-seventh Congress, the amendment to the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942.

Section 3 of Public, 729 reads as follows:

SEC. 3. No maximum price shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity under authority of this act or otherwise below a price which will reflect to producers of agricultural commodities the higher of the following prices, as determined and published by the Secretary of Agriculture—

(1) The parity price for such commodity (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials) or, in case a comparable price has been determined for such commodity under and in accordance with the provisions of section 3 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, such comparable price (adjusted in the same manner), or

(2) The highest price received by such producers for such commodity between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942 (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials), or, if the market for such commodity was inactive during the latter half of such period, a price for the commodity determined by the Secretary of Agriculture to be in line with the prices, during such period, of other agricultural commodities produced for the same general use; and no maximum price shall be established or maintained under authority of this act or otherwise for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodity a price therefor equal to the higher of the prices specified in clauses (1) and (2) of this section: Provided, That the President may, without regard to the limitation contained in clause (2), adjust any such maximum price to the extent that he finds necessary to correct gross inequities; but nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the establishment in any case of a maximum price below a price which will reflect to the producers of any agricultural commodity the price therefor specified in clause (1) of this section: Provided further, That modifications shall be made in maximum prices established for any agricultural commodity and for commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity, under regulations to be prescribed by the President, in any case where it appears that such modification is necessary to increase the production of such commodity for war purposes, or where by reason of increased labor or other costs to the producers of such agricultural commodity incurred since January 1, 1941, the maximum prices so established will not reflect such increased costs: Provided further, That in the fixing of maximum prices on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing: Provided further, That in fixing price maximums for agricultural commodities and for commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity, as provided for by this act, adequate weighting shall be given to farm labor.

In the case of both corn and wheat the price at the time of the enactment of Public, 729 was below parity. It is now below parity. Therefore, under the plain terms of the act no maximum price can be established for corn below parity and no maximum price for flour can be established which will not reflect parity to the producers of wheat. In utter defiance of these provisions, maximum prices have been fixed on corn and on wheat flour which are far below parity.

The Office of Price Administration admits that the prices fixed are below parity but makes the contention that in fixing prices it is authorized to include Government payments made to agricultural producers. I submit that there is not one word in the act in question which permits of any such interpretation. The language is clear, direct, and unequivocal. It refers to prices, not to income, and states definitely that no price may be fixed below parity. If Congress had intended that Government payments should be taken into account it could have said so specifically or could have provided that no price should be fixed which did not reflect to producers parity income. In all the discussion of this legislation before Congress there was nothing to indicate that it was the thought of any Member of either House that the language with reference to ceilings on agricultural products meant anything other than what it said or that there was any intention that Government payments should be taken into consideration.

I am bringing this matter to the attention of the author of this resolution. I assume that he will be a member of the committee to be appointed if the resolution is adopted. After the committee is appointed it is my intention to bring this situation formally to the attention of the committee. Doubtless there are many other cases where power and authority have been abused just as flagrantly as has been the case here. I hope that the resolution will be adopted, and that the committee appointed pursuant thereto will vigorously follow up this and all like matters which may be brought to its attention.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, some time when the patience of the American people is impaired to the point where they are going to get up on their hind legs they shall say, "By what warrant, by what authority do these Federal agencies operate?" And then the answer will be, first of all, they were created by the Congress and they got all their authority under that very celebrated phraseology which says:

The Administrator is empowered to make all necessary rules and regulations to effectuate the purposes of this act.

That is where the damage is really done and that is the reason for the hue and cry today about abuses and outrages by the bureaucrats in Washington with respect to the authority that they think they enjoy. The people are going to say that the Congress created the agency, the Congress delegated the authority, and then it is going to be our responsibility. We are going to have to go into this a little further. I am for this resolution, of course, although I approached it from a different angle.

Two weeks before this resolution was introduced, I offered a bill to set up an administrative committee on review, consisting of eight Senators and eight Members of the House. Before they could make any rules of general applicability effective, they would have to send it up here on the request of the committee. That committee would look at it and for 10 days the rule could not become effective. Then if this legislative review committee says, "There is objection," it could not become effective for 40 days. The committee would make a report to the Congress. Then if they undertook to issue these rules, forms, and regulations on their own responsibility, the people would be fully advised as to what was going on.

I think we have to go infinitely further and constantly supervise and scrutinize the technique and the procedure of the administrative agencies of our Government. If we create them, if we give them the power, then it is also our constitutional responsibility to say how that power shall be exercised, and sooner or later out of this investigation I trust there will come a committee on administrative review so that we can discharge the responsibility where it properly belongs.

Some day, as I indicated, the American people will see through this and when we go home to give an accounting of our stewardship, they will say: "After all, you created the O. P. A., you gave them the power." Now that these rationing programs are as a spiritual affront to the people, sometimes administered by people who are uncivil as they deal with the American public, then it will be in our laps and when that time comes I think the Congress will point definitely in the direction of a permanent committee on administrative review.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am for the gentleman's proposal, but I am inclined to believe that those who are presently in favor of the bureaucratic system of making law by rules and regulations would say that the gentleman's proposal would be a restraint upon the Executive.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is entirely possible, but I am thinking of a great organic act that was adopted 150 years ago which puts the responsibility on us.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Is there anything in the gentleman's resolution that would provide for well-qualified people to administer the law? I find that most of the objectionable regulations come from people who do not know anything about what jobs they are doing, and they do things that are absolutely unnecessary, although the broad policy of the Congress is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would give to such a reviewing committee broad powers to see that that element is taken into account.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 102, as introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], to create a board of review with powers to investigate and examine the manner and methods, as well as the manpower, of the various bureaus which have been established, either by Congress or by Executive order. I urge the Members of this House to support this resolution as an important step in the direction of recapturing for Congress some of the authority which has been gravitating into the hands of bureaucrats during the past 8 or 10 years. I believe passage of this resolution will go far toward reestablishing the position of Congress as a coordinate factor in the Federal Government and toward curbing and eliminating some of the abuses of bureaucracy gone wild from which this Republic has been increasingly suffering during the past decade.

It will be recalled by many Members that this resolution, which comes to us today from the House Committee on Rules, conforms precisely with the proposal I made to this House the last day of the Seventy-seventh Congress. My suggestion will be found in the second paragraph of the second column of page 9644 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for December 16, 1942, when I said, in part, and I quote from my talk in the House on that date:

> Mr. Speaker, I think that our new Congress might well give consideration to setting up a congressional board of review comprised of competent, experienced, hard-headed, and distinguished Americans nominated by Congress and empowered to pass upon the directives, orders, regulations, limitation orders, rationing rules, and what not being so generally issued by bureaucratic overlords these days. This board of review need have no powers of review or veto on any order dealing strictly with a military matter or the production of supplies of war. But on civilian matters it might well be that when a concurrent act of Congress demands it this board of review should be given power of review, amendment, and veto, if necessary, over bureaucratic rulings affecting our civilian economy, our production of food, our use of gasoline, fuel oil, and rubber, and other matters not directly concerned with problems of military preparedness or production. We have already surrendered much of our authority. Perhaps this would be a way to resume some of the functions and duties which we have too freely delegated to others over whom it seems we presently lack all control. I am not sure this would be the answer to these problems, but it is at least a constructive suggestion which I wish you would ponder over between now and when we convene again on January 6.

Mr. Speaker, I am naturally gratified that my suggestion has borne fruit in the form of the resolution before us today. I have conferred with many Members since first making it on December 16 and it is my conviction that this resolution will today be adopted by an overwhelming vote. While my original proposal would have exempted the military departments from inclusion in this resolution, the Rules Committee members felt it unnecessary and unwise to make such exemptions inasmuch as the Board of Review can be depended upon to use sound and patriotic judgment in not interfering with military matters and to include such an exemption might tend to cover into the exempt class a great variety of nonmilitary bureaus which might claim to be functioning primarily for war purposes. Thus I feel we can safely pass the resolution in its present form and rely upon the members selected to use due judgment and good sense in determining when and when not to utilize their authority.

One final thought, Mr. Speaker, before I conclude. Had President Roosevelt not vetoed the Walter-Logan bill which we passed in the Seventy-sixth Congress, today's resolution would be unnecessary. The Walter-Logan bill would have provided an appropriate means of checking misuse of bureaucratic power and of protecting the rights of private citizens. Unfortunately, President Roosevelt vetoed that legislation. I believe the work of the Board of Review which I predict we shall today establish will bring out many evidences of need for some such legislation as the Walter-Logan bill and it is entirely possible that these findings will be great enough so that the Walter-Logan bill can once again be passed with sufficient support, if necessary, to win approval over a Presidential veto. Americans, Mr. Speaker, are determined not to surrender this Republic in its entirety to bureaucrats over whom the people have no control, for none of whom the people have voted, many of whom, in fact, are "lame ducks" rejected at the polls by the people themselves, and who have all too frequently forgotten that they are the servants and not the rulers of the people of America. Passage of this resolution will serve notice to the world that this Congress understands the position of American citizens in this connection and that it proposes to keep faith with constitutional principles of self-government.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this resolution provides a step, and a very long step, in the right direction. I hope it will be adopted. It will at least afford some manner of regulation of these Federal agencies which are performing legislative, judicial, and executive functions. I hope that a little later it will be followed and supplemented by the adoption of a bill I have introduced, H. R. 83, to have a staff of our own, an Office of Fiscal Investigations as an agency of the House of Representatives, to follow up appropriations in order that we may know in detail how the money we appropriate is expended and may make the necessary corrections to prevent abuses that have crept into our governmental system.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for the appointment of a congressional committee to investigate and report violations of bureaus and other Government agencies who act beyond the scope of authority by issuing orders and regulations that have the effect of decrees and edicts, as binding as the law itself.

The legislation before us comes, I think, as a demand on the part of a majority of the people of this country who are concerned lest a growing bureaucracy destroy the very foundations of the American way of life and of American Government as we know it.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are fully aware that during this crisis it is necessary that extraordinary power and authority must be given the Chief Executive, who is also Commander in Chief of the armed forces. No one disputes that. No one wants to interfere with authority or the authority of those responsible to him in the prosecution of the war to a successful conclusion.

Our people also understand the need of certain general emergency controls required during the war period. They are not only cognizant of these matters but want to approach them in a patriotic manner. They really want to cooperate under such controls to whatever limit is required. Of course they want to cooperate—5,000,000 of our own boys are involved in one way or another in this terrible conflict.

But, Mr. Speaker, while our country is thus engaged in this mighty struggle, we have bureaus and agencies by the score, some remotely related to the war effort, who insist on extending their edicts and decrees, unnecessarily on our people, even in some instances, that result in impeding rather than helping in our Nation's distress. This conduct of rule and regimentation by agencies not directly responsible to the people, has been growing steadily during the past few years, even before the present defense and war effort got under way.

Mr. Speaker, the people are deeply concerned. They want to know, and make sure, that the flickering light of representative democracy is not smothered out by the ever-increasing, and overlapping bureaucratic control and ideolcgy that have crept into so many departments of our Government in the past few years. While our boys are fighting for the "four freedoms" in all of the corners of the world, our people want to know these same freedoms are not lost on the home front.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, the overall picture as we see it today of the administrative performance of our Government is this. By the gradual delegation of power on the part of the Congress to the executive, the power of the executive has grown out of all proportion to that of the legislative branch of the Government. By reason of judicial interpretation there has been a construction, as it were, of our legislative power. By the same token the delegation of this power to the administrative agencies of the Government has become such that they have arrogated unto themselves not only the interpretation of Executive orders but the imposition of penalties far beyond that contemplated in these orders.

As I view this resolution, it is purely ministerial and procedural. It should go hand in hand with the plan outlined by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and that suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] as a complete composite, bringing back into our hands the power we have allowed to slip away from us. This Government, in its legislative functions, must be streamlined. It must be brought back to where it commands the respect and confidence of the American people.

James Madison, when he submitted the original 12 amendments, said, in substance, to the First Congress of the United States:

> You never need to fear the power of the executive, because it will always be weak, but you must fear the power of the courts and the legislature.

A complete transition has occurred, and today the executive has grown and grown and grown until it is all-powerful.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, who wants additional time on the other side, 4 minutes instead of 5. I am sorry we did not have the additional time left.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to be in favor of this resolution, although it is a broad and sweeping one. It will undoubtedly be approved. I hope that infinite care will be taken by the chairman and the members thereof to see that no injustice is done.

One of the provisions of the resolution is that the committee shall examine rules, regulations, and directives to see that those who may be accused by administrative officials of being guilty of violation thereof are permitted to present an adequate defense and have a fair and impartial trial. I hope the admonition that is contained in the resolution will likewise apply to the members of the committee. I am sure it will. I am sure the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], who has been here a great many years and who will be chairman of this committee—an intelligent, fearless, and erudite gentleman—will be fair and equitable. Sometimes, however, intentions are not carried out and great injury may result if the activities of the committee are not fairly and judicially administered. With that in view, he and his colleagues on that committee can do a highly constructive job.

Our revered Chaplain, Dr. Montgomery, this morning prayed that rude passions would not dominate our finer feelings. I hope this committee will calmly and dispassionately examine, consider, and deliberate. I hope the committee will not follow the example of another committee which has, indeed, allowed rude passions to dominate their finer feelings. I hope the Smith committee will be fair, judicious, and, I hope especially, nonpolitical. I say humbly as to this other committee that it would appear to be the policy that if there be anyone whose political ideology does not gibe with the views of the chairman, why, just put him on a proscribed list, or if anyone has liberal views on government, place a bar sinister upon him. Unfortunately, this procedure smacks somewhat of witch burning. I hope this newly constituted committee will shun such practices. See how far afield this other committee has gone. If you examine the doctrines, the teachings, and the writings of Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, and Ben Franklin, and were they alive today, they would surely find their place among the 38 names against which the chairman of that other committee fulminated.

Indeed, I repeat, the committee I mentioned has gone far afield. I read from the Opinions of Oliver Allston, by Van Wyck Brooks, published by E. P. Dutton & Co., Inc., which by the end of November 1941 was in its eleventh printing:

> From our Revolution sprang the French, and that Jefferson and Paine were the forerunners of Russia. * * * The Declaration of Independence speaks of "all men." Is there not something collective (communistic) in this conception? And have we forgotten that John Quincy Adams wished to make our economy collective? This Republican President, mark the word, hoped to develop the national wealth on a collective, not a competitive basis. * * * John Quincy Adams promoted the study of science, while he fought with all his might against the bankers, who stood for competition and disruption. I do not have to speak of Andrew Jackson. I have only to return to the Adamses; to Henry Adams, who, holding in mind his grandfather's faith, said of himself in his Education, "by rights, he should have been a Marxist." * * * Collectivism exists in our tradition, even our Republican tradition—for one does not have to mention the Democrats, not to speak of the Socialists in our tradition, the Brook Farmers, Bellamy, the novelist Howells. * * * Benjamin Franklin wrote to Robert Morris: "All property, except the savage's temporary cabin, his bow, his match-coat, and other little acquisitions, absolutely necessary for his subsistence, seems to me the creature of public convention. All the property that is necessary to a man, for the conservation of the individual, and the propagation of the species, is his natural right, which none may justly deprive him of; but all property superfluous to such purposes is the property of the public, who, by their laws, have created it, and who may therefore, by other laws, dispose of it, whenever the welfare of the public shall demand such disposition. He that does not like civil society on these terms, let him retire and live among savages!" Was Franklin a collectivist, or was he not? This was the patriotism of our Revolution. * * * If there was ever a man who had a right to speak for patriots, Edward Everett Hale was this man. Well, Dr. Hale, in a book called We, the People, recommended old-age pensions and the Government ownership of coal mines; and he said: "The people own the roads, the schoolhouses, the lighthouses—why then object to the ownership of wealth in common?" Dr. Hale made this statement in the very year, 1903, in which he became the chaplain of the United States Senate. I do not say that Dr. Hale represented all our tradition, but who can say that he was disloyal to it?

Assuredly many other patriots could be mentioned whose opinions could not square with that of the chairman of the committee I criticize. They would all be ostracized.

In conclusion, everything depends upon the mode and manner in which the proceedings of this committee, soon to be constituted, are conducted. If the committee is channelized along the lines adopted by the other committee, it would be most regrettable.

Numerous agencies of the Government have invited a resolution of this sort and the setting up of this committee. A number of the officials have run amok. They have almost gone berserk in the issuance of regulations, but that is no reason why we should "tar and feather" everybody. We should not visit the sins of the few upon the many.

I repeat the substance of a question I propounded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] when I said I hope when this committee is constituted it will use the Judiciary Committee. A number of its members will be willing to help to carry out the laudable purposes of this resolution and help steer it in the proper channels.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN].

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment excessive powers have been granted to the departments and bureaus of the Government, but in addition to those powers granted, vast powers have been assumed beyond the delegation of authority made by the Congress. I earnestly urge the adoption of this resolution. It will do more than one thing. I think it will let the people of America know our attitude toward the assumption of discretionary power by these bureaus, power outside of the jurisdiction of law. I believe this is one of the greatest possible steps that can be taken toward guaranteeing the permanent security of the American form of government under the Constitution, and as intended it should be by the body of American laws. It will do much to correct the assumption of regulatory powers beyond the grant of authority by the Congress. This is a forward step, an important step in the right direction and one that we have been all too slow heretofore in taking.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, with the general purpose of this resolution I am in accord. Indeed, I believe it an important function of Congress to see that the laws it passes are carried out in accordance with the intent of Congress. And in this time of war, when extraordinary powers must be granted to executive agencies, it is a duty of Congress to see that those powers are not exercised in an arbitrary or capricious manner. It is my understanding that this resolution does not empower the committee to call in question any Executive order of the President. Certainly in wartime such a committee should not exercise such a power, for in total war the Executive carries so tremendous a responsibility that he must be able to carry through that responsibility with dispatch and effectiveness and Congress ought to do nothing that could be interpreted as interference with the most vigorous possible conduct of the war.

It is my opinion that the resolution, in seeking to give to a congressional committee the function of attempting to review action where constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities have allegedly been infringed, does invade a field of the judicial department of the Government, worthy as the general objective may be.

It is my further belief that important as is the task assigned this committee it ought really to be done by the standing committees of the House, each in the field of its own particular jurisdiction, as would be provided by my resolution, House Resolution 60. This special committee is given the power to recommend legislation and amendments to existing legislation. It is altogether likely that in almost all cases such legislation would be of such a character that some standing committee would have special knowledge and experience in the matter.

I am going to vote for this resolution because, as I stated before, I believe Congress has the duty not only to pass laws but also to see that they are administered and carried out in accord with congressional intent. But I am frank to say that I think a broad and general mistake is made every time a special committee is created to do a job which some standing committee or a subcommittee of a standing committee could do.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the resolution at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, again Americans everywhere will pause to honor the memory of Abraham Lincoln, a great President, a great American, and one of the outstanding men of the known history of man.

These are tragic days in the history of our American people. We are in a total war. Not only our principles, but also our liberties, are in danger.

The tragic days that Abraham Lincoln was called upon to face long ago ended in a new triumph for the system of government in which he so thoroughly believed. The special threat to our form of government in Lincoln's time has passed away, but if he were here today, he would undoubtedly see new threats of discontent and the threat of concentrated power in the hands of a few, of the rise of an army of officeholders with the makings of petty dictators in them.

The American people will do well to study and heed the clear logic of Lincoln's statesmanship. We would do well to return to Lincoln for counsel to light our way in a distracted world. He would tell us that our reliance is in the love of liberty which God has planted in us and in our will and our courage to defend it.

It was the hope of our forefathers to limit and balance the powers of the legislative branch, the judicial branch, and the executive branch in such a way that no one of them could seize the power with which to rob each other or the individual of his freedom.

When our first war for freedom was over, in order that the world might know why they fought, our forefathers wrote a statement of principle and faith. That statement they called the Declaration of Independence. Since then we have had to fight wars for principles and ideals, but in none of them were we fighting for actual freedom of the people in these United States from foreign tyranny.

Again we have set our armies in motion; again the stake is our freedom from a foreign despot. On many a far-flung fighting front Americans are dying that we may prove again to an anxious world that the torch of real human freedom which our fathers lighted in 1776 has not gone out and will not go out as long as our love of freedom remains with us.

When this war is over there will surely come peace. That peace will bring problems and needs as great as those which have been occasioned by this war. The advent of this war caught us unprepared. We must not let the problems of the peace catch us unprepared.

Therefore, it would be well for all of us to take a searching look at those things for which we are fighting for now. For unless we know what we are fighting for today we cannot be prepared to establish as a post-war condition the ideals and principles for which we fight.

It might help us to look backward into our own development. For 150 years we had a government of law under the Constitution of the United States, with a governing body which acted as an umpire only. For a hundred and fifty years taxes were levied for the most part for revenue only. For 150 years our compelling urge was the profit motive. That century and a half brought this Nation from obscurity to greatness; from poverty to prosperity; from dependence to security. We progressed to become the envy of every other nation on this earth.

But a marked change has taken place since we have begun to experiment with a government of bureaus, and the change into this so-called planned economy has made such rapid strides that the distance we have traveled in the past 10 years from a government by law toward a government of men is startling. What is worse, with all its experimenting the so-called planned economy has failed to solve the very ills which it boasted it would cure.

Even in the midst of war, every real American should compare the more reasonable process of congressional law with the confused, hastily written regulations of the bureaus and decide which is best, which cost the least and which is easier to keep honest. We should weigh carefully our chances of remaining freemen when we are controlled by men whose purposes we do not understand. We must decide which will be more responsive to the people—the Congress which the people elect or the bureaus whose heads are appointed and dismissed at the will of the Executive. We must judge whether, in doubling the number of employees who are engaged in nonproductive government we have not acted to the detriment of the farms—the industries—and even the war effort.

And as for the planning by the so-called experts—what has it done for us? Can it even be justifiably called a plan when it did not foresee either war or the critical shortages which would hurt us so in that war? It is pertinent to find the answer as to who fumbled the rubber situation for so many costly months, Congress or the bureaus to which its solution was assigned.

We now have a mystic maze of bureaus and agencies and each man who comes into the Government as head of a bureau must have a little power to correct a little economic ill and thereby finds he must have more power or he cannot bring the situation back where it was when he began to tinker with it. When one bureau tries to administer a law it throws other functions of the Government out of gear, therefore another agency has to be set up to correct the disrupted function. Each move further dislocates the delicate machinery of government and this requires more bureaus and agencies to make the Government run again. Is this not exactly what Washington and Lincoln feared? Is this not exactly what the framers of the Constitution feared?

But we are now in this war for our very lives and for our freedom. We cannot stop to tear up any system. We cannot afford to fight among ourselves because all of our energies and our efforts must be given to fighting a foreign foe and we cannot afford to let anything interfere with our all-out aid to our boys who are fighting for us. We are all willing to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary not only to win this war but to win it quickly.

As we pause to honor the memory of Abraham Lincoln, there comes calling to us from beyond the years the challenge of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and the Unknown Soldier, whose body now rests in Arlington Cemetery, to preserve the liberty for which our forefathers fought.

We must lay our blueprint for freedom now and we must support it vigorously. What better blueprint for freedom could we have than that we shall reinstate the Constitution of the United States and return to a government of laws.

No man can see what the future may bring. However, we should plan now to erect again the edifice of constitutional liberty. It will be well for us to remember the words of Abraham Lincoln as he stood on that cold day in November 1863 in the field of Gettysburg.

That we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

So long as these words are remembered by our Republic, this Republic shall live.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution—House Resolution 102. We have heard many complaints covering a long period of time from Democrats as well as Republicans on the floor of the House. Like complaints have been voiced on the radio and in the press. We have been told in these complaints that we now see bureaucracy at its worst.

There is a rising tide of resentment throughout the Nation from the people against those in charge of the executive departments, bureaus, commissions, and other agencies of the Federal Government, charging, first, they constantly exceed the power or authority granted to such departments, bureaus, commissions, and other agencies of the Government by the Congress or by Executive order, in rules, regulations, and orders issued by them; second, they have been and are now invading the constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities of the citizens of the United States; and third, they even go so far as to inflict penalties for failure to comply with their rules, regulations, and directives without affording those accused of such violation an opportunity to present their defense before a fair and impartial tribunal, without authority of law.

This resolution gives the Speaker of the House of Representatives the authority to appoint a committee of seven Members of the House of Representatives to make diligent and careful inquiry into these complaints and report their findings and recommendations back to the House. In my opinion, the results of last November's election were largely due to the resentment of the American people against bureaucracy, and in many cases autocratic control of our Government and the affairs of the American people. They clearly indicated their desire to see constitutional Government restored and that this powerful bureaucracy made up of some three million civil office holders be brought to account for their actions, and that they be restrained from further invading the constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities of the citizens of the United States.

The American people have expressed in no uncertain terms their displeasure of a subservient Congress and their determination to have their constitutional rights restored to them. They desire the Congress to function as one of the three great coordinate branches of the Government. It is the only branch of our Government that can make laws, grant their powers, provide penalties, and levy taxes. This new Congress has given many evidences of its purpose to again assert itself as one of the three great coordinate branches of our Government as provided by the Constitution of the United States. The adoption of this resolution will give further assurance to the American people of the high purpose and independence of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The adoption of this resolution will be one of the most important steps taken by this Congress in a decade. This committee will have a great and patriotic duty to perform. In carrying out the purpose of this resolution, this committee will render an outstanding service to the Congress itself, and more especially to the American people. Bureaucracy has run wild for a long time. This really puts them on notice that they must not take any action, adopt any rule, procedure, regulation, order, or directive which goes beyond the scope of the power granted them by the Congress itself or by Executive order. They must not by any such action invade the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of the citizens of this country. They must not inflict penalties for failure to comply with their rules, regulations, or directives without affording those accused of such violations an opportunity to present their defense before a fair and impartial tribunal as provided by law.

The adoption of this resolution will give notice to those of the executive branch of the Government that their powers are limited to those granted by the Congress itself. They cannot, as they have for a number of years, make the laws through rules, regulations, and so forth, interpret the laws, and, at the same time, execute them.

The Constitution provides that Congress alone can make the laws, the courts interpret them, and the executive branch of the Government execute them.

Many of those who have denied constitutional rights to our own citizens and have imposed penalties without a fair and impartial hearing on the citizens of this country for violating mere rules and regulations promulgated by the bureaucrats without authority of law have expressed great interest in democracy for the peoples in every other part of the globe and at the same time deny democratic processes and the American way of life to our own people.

More than 10,000,000 of the flower of American manhood have or will be called into the service in the name of liberty and freedom, millions of lives may be lost, and hundreds of billions of dollars in treasure may be expended, and a debt of two hundred and fifty billion or more dollars will be loaded upon the American people, and then after it is all over and our boys come home, unless we are vigilant and take vigorous steps, such as are being taken today, they will find out that we won the war for freedom across the seas but we lost the war for liberty, freedom, and constitutional government here at home.

It affords me very great pleasure to give this resolution my unqualified support, and I am sure our able Speaker will appoint a committee qualified by training and experience to undertake this great task, and that the committee will carry through the high purpose set forth in this resolution. After all, our first and great duty as Members of the Congress is to preserve constitutional government in our own land.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, of course, I am in favor of this resolution, and I suggest that the committee when appointed will be a very busy committee, but I also wish to make it plain that the Navy and War Departments seem to be included in this resolution, and to suggest that it may be advisable to remove them from its jurisdiction. The second paragraph of the resolution gives the committee power to determine constitutional questions, and I suggest that if that remains in the resolution, there might be some very embarrassing matters upon which the committee might have to pass.

Also, the committee is supposed to make recommendations as to the personnel of the departments, and I suggest to the author of the resolution what he might properly recommend to the House as to the personnel different than the Dies committee and its review committee recently set up. Would the gentleman attempt to impeach them, take away their salaries, or to dismiss them from the service? In many instances citizens who have disobeyed O. P. A. regulations have been allowed to escape the courts by accepting certain suggested settlements. In such circumstances, would they claim to this committee that they have not had a fair tribunal? I again suggest that we had better take out the War and the Navy Departments, and also remove paragraph 2.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the resolution at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I arise to support House Resolution 102, known as the Smith resolution, the purpose of which is to put some restraint upon those many bureaus of the executive department which in many instances distort legislation to their own ends to the extent of ignoring the intent of Congress as expressed in the laws enacted by Congress.

The people have been so afflicted with these misinterpretations and have suffered so many penalties as a result of the wrong interpretations placed upon the laws that there is an overwhelming sentiment in favor of Congress' reasserting its independence and, in so doing, insisting upon the correct interpretation of the laws which it enacts.

We have reached the point where some of these Executive agencies do not seek legislative authorization for the penalties which they inflict upon the people but exercise the assumed power until prohibited from doing so by Congress.

Is Congress the law-making body of a free people today? No. The laws neither originate in nor are the laws being made by the Congress of the United States. Who initiates national legislation, writes its provisions, imposes penalties, provides against court review? The legislating is now being done by such executive agencies as the N. L. R. B., S. E. C., I. C. C., A. A. A., T. V. A., T. F. C., F. C. C., the Office of Production Management, the War Production Board, and other executive agencies.

What does the attorney do who wishes to keep up with contemporary laws? Does he turn to the statutes enacted by the Congress? Not at all. Instead he turns to the rulings and records of the executive agencies.

Let us not forget that section 1, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States provides:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the presentation of House Resolution 102 today constitutes the culmination of an oft-expressed desire on the part of a great majority of the people that the bureaucratic power be curbed in this country. This proposed resolution seeks to do that very thing. When this resolution is passed by the Congress, and the committee is set up thereunder, the activities of the various departments of government will come under the scrutinizing eye of a special committee which has the power to ascertain the facts, and to report such facts to the Congress for action.

To my mind this pending resolution is of the highest importance to the people, and to our country. The people have been ruled, largely, for the past several years by bureaucrats. Those bureaucrats were not elected by the people and they are not responsible to the people; they were appointed to their respective positions and they are responsible to but one person—the one who appointed them to their position.

We must remember that ours is a government by law, and not a government by men. In the various departments of government a growing tendency has been observed to promulgate rules, orders, and regulations, all of which have the force and effect of law, and these same rules, orders, and regulations have largely been promulgated by the heads of bureaus, boards, and commissions—all without any legislative action. But those very rules, orders, and regulations, so promoted by various departments of government, become the rule of action—they have the force and effect of law—and the people are largely controlled and governed thereby. That tendency has grown to the point that such rules, orders, and regulations have become too numerous for the people generally to know what they should do, or not do, in order to observe them. It is now impossible for the people generally to know what the rules of action are, and what they should do, in the ordinary course of action, to observe them.

Mr. Speaker, it is lamentable that such action has not been taken long ago. The course of life of many people has been altered by the numerous rules and regulations enacted by the bureaucrats in our agencies of government, and, too, many people have lost the savings of a lifetime because of some of those rules and regulations which were adopted by some agency in our Government. The Congress had no part in the making of such rules or regulations, and the same were never adopted as a law of our land, but such rules were promulgated by and through the whim or caprice of some individual, in some department of government, who is unknown, generally, to the people of this Nation.

This resolution will tend to curb that unholy practice. And, may I say, that when the committee is selected, which is provided by this resolution, it will have the power to investigate the question of whether the rules, orders, and regulations are beyond the power and scope granted to such department or agency by Congress, or by Executive order. In addition, the committee will have the power to determine whether the action of the agency, or department of Government, invades the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of the people of the United States. The investigations to be made, by the committee, may also embrace the question of whether the rules, orders, or regulations inflict penalties for a failure to comply therewith without affording those accused of a violation thereof without opportunity to present their defense before a fair and impartial tribunal. Those matters, sought to be determined by such committee, merely give everyone a fair chance to protect property, the good name, and the right to a fair hearing—that which is guaranteed to every citizen under our Constitution. No one will contend that any citizen is not entitled to that protection, regardless of whom he may be.

This legislation is very essential now. This does not embrace the war effort, or those who are in good faith engaged in the prosecution of the war. Everyone is agreed that our paramount problem is to win this war as quickly and decisively as possible. Therefore, the Army and the Navy will not encounter any difficulties of any kind if this resolution is passed. This resolution is merely a protective measure to assure the people that the Congress is trying, in every possible way and in extreme good faith, to recapture some of the powers which have been taken away from the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of any other element—regardless of peace or war—we must not permit our form of government to be frittered away. Bureaucratic government in this country must end. This is government by the people, under law. That policy must continue throughout the future ages. The provisions of the pending resolution are purely and completely American, and the policies therein enunciated will tend to preserve those sacred traditions which have descended to us from the founding fathers.

It is my hope that this resolution will be passed without a dissenting voice. Every American wants to preserve the American way of life, and I am certain every American wants to preserve our form of government. When the boys come home, after victory is won, we want them to be secure in our form of government under the Constitution. Now is the time to stop bureaucratic control in this country, and now is the time for Congress to assert its prerogatives as the legislative branch of our Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I could vote for this resolution with far greater enthusiasm if the scope of the investigations it would authorize were broadened so as to support inquiries into alleged abuses and misuses of so-called delegated legislative powers by the Chief Executive himself. The limiting of the anticipated investigations to the executive departments and independent agencies is to but invite further denunciation of the legislative branch of the Government for subserviency.

Investigations of small fry, of petty officials, even of department heads, will not satisfy anyone. It is only because the investigations which the resolution will authorize may bring to light something of importance, something that will inspire throughout the country an irresistible demand for the widening of the inquiry to include every official and every branch of the Government, that I am persuaded to assent to the measure now under consideration. Actuated alone by this consideration, I shall cast my vote for the resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. It is essential legislation if we are to halt the march to social revolution and dictatorship in America. The people, by an overwhelming vote last November 3, protested against government by decree and its gestapo methods, and this resolution meets that mandate.

Bureaucratic government, national socialism, and totalitarianism have been repudiated by the people, and we, the representatives of the people, must abide by the mandate given. We must reestablish constitutional government. We must reestablish free enterprise and we must protect and maintain the "four freedoms" in the United States while our soldiers and sailors are fighting for them throughout the world.

As you know, I am sincerely disturbed over the threat now being made against the press of the Nation—our free press and free speech. This resolution will make possible a review of actions now being taken by the War Production Board which threaten the very existence of our free press and associated industries.

I refer to the reduction in the consumption of newsprint and book paper. Only yesterday the W. P. B. announced in a press release that an additional cut of 10 percent, over the amount used by publishers in 1941, will be made April 1, making a total cut of 20 percent since January 1. And, mind you, this additional cut is to be made before the effects of the first cut—made only a month ago—can possibly be ascertained.

One of the first tasks of this committee, if this resolution is adopted, should be to establish whether such an additional reduction in the use of paper is necessary. At the same time the committee should determine just why the Office of Civilian Supply refused to abandon its demand for a straight, horizontal cut of 40 percent until Members of Congress organized a voluntary committee to oppose such a reduction, which, incidentally, would have put out of existence the majority of newspapers in America. Mr. Weiner, Chief of the Office of Civilian Supply, should be one of the first to be brought before the committee. Remember, he is the same Mr. Weiner who brought about the 70 percent reduction in the manufacture of farm machinery, while other high officials of Government demanded food for our citizens, Army, Navy, and all of the rest of the world.

But getting back to the newsprint problem, I am reliably informed that only today a leading paper industry source in New York expressed the opinion that complete inquiry into the latest developments in W. P. B. would fail to disclose any need for a second cut in the use of newsprint. I am told this source would issue a newspaper release to that effect before the end of the day.

This paper industry official admits that there are some intangibles, but that the logic of the situation would be to wait until next summer or autumn before deciding upon the advisability of any further cut, in view of the amount of raw materials now in sight.

I shall vote for the establishment of this so-called Smith committee and I urge that one of its first tasks will be a complete and thorough investigation of the W. P. B. newsprint reduction orders.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Is it the intent of this resolution that in the event that any of the 130,000,000 citizens of the United States feel that any action of any department infringes their constitutional rights, instead of hiring a lawyer they can come to Congress and have Congress act for them?

Mr. FISH. I believe the gentleman is correct, but I would prefer to have the gentleman ask that question of the sponsor of the resolution, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], who will conclude the speaking on the resolution, because he has made a thorough study and he knows exactly what is in the resolution, and what the intent is and I assume that he will be on the committee. I am giving the gentleman only a guess answer, but I believe it is the correct one.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution which will be debated for only an hour, is perhaps the most important and far-reaching resolution that has come before any Congress in the last 10 years. It represents and is typical of the spirit that pervades the United States today. It really emanates from the American people themselves, who are asking for immediate relief from a bureaucratic form of government, and from rules and regulations by bureaucrats instead of by law.

Certainly on this side of the aisle the Republicans were elected primarily on a mandate from the people to restore representative and constitutional government in the United States. That is the fundamental purpose of this resolution, in order to bring back to the Congress those powers and prerogatives that we have surrendered during the last 10 years and to set up in Congress a special committee that can make a thorough and detailed investigation and bring before them those bureaucrats, whether their names are HENRY WALLACE or Harry Hopkins, or anyone else, and ask them by what authority of law, by what authority of Congress is he doing this or doing that, from the lowest bureaucrat to the highest. This is, in its essence, the restoration of what everybody wants, of legislative power to the Congress so that it will be as it should be, the sole legislative Federal authority in the United States.

Mr. McMURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. McMURRAY. Did you say that HENRY WALLACE was a bureaucrat?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman might interpret it that way if he wants to. I said this special committee would have the power to ask him to come before it and tell by what authority the organization B. E. W., of which he is the head, is operating and to ascertain whether it has exceeded the scope of the powers conferred on it by Congress.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman think that this power conferred upon the committee would justify the committee in even calling the President to account for some Executive orders which he has made?

Mr. FISH. I had hoped that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] would take the floor so that we could ask him that question. I hope the gentleman will ask that of the gentleman from Virginia when he addresses the House.

Mr. COOLEY. I know the gentleman from New York would delight very much to have that opportunity to examine the President and make inquiry.

Mr. FISH. Why, certainly. I think we ought to be able to ask the President by what right he issues Executive orders which transcend the powers granted him by Congress in defiance of the Congress and of the Constitution. Is not the gentleman for that himself?

Mr. COOLEY. No, sir; I am not.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman mean to say he wants the Chief Executive, representing the executive department of the Government, to have legislative powers?

Mr. COOLEY. No, sir; but I want him to have full and complete executive powers in this great crisis in which we are now engaged.

Mr. FISH. Even in defiance of the Constitution and our three separate and independent branches of the Government?

Mr. COOLEY. I do not want any superman committee appointed by the Congress to review the activities of the President.

Mr. FISH. The very reason for this resolution, and it emanated from the people, is to oppose one party and one man or totalitarian government in the United States. This resolution is aimed at the menace of bureaucratic rule and attempts to establish a government by personal edicts, rules, regulations, and Executive orders instead of a government by law. If Executive orders usurp the powers and functions of Congress, it is our right and duty to investigate them; any other course would be supine and cowardly and a violation of the Constitution. I do not want the RECORD to intimate that the Congress will not investigate Presidential or Executive orders whenever it deems it necessary. Congress will not compromise with any form of totalitarianism in the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the action contemplated by the creation of this committee is long overdue.

I would not vote for this proposal if I felt the group to be chosen for the important work would engage in any embarrassment of the constituted authority of the President of the United States. I feel certain that the Members chosen will desire very earnestly to help, rather than hinder, our war effort.

Mr. Speaker, we need as a Congress to reassert our prerogatives. In this connection I have no doubt that certain agencies and persons therein have undertaken by regulation to amend statutes adopted by the legislative branch of the Government. I quote in part from my remarks:

> Congress has written certain legislation, which has actually been rewritten by agents of our Government, who were not elected as legislators from districts or States. I, for one, as a Member of this body, believe that the intent of Congress has been misused by some of these individuals who are in leadership in agencies of Government. I think the Congress, if it has the courage, must retake these powers unto itself.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote against this resolution. I think it is just another antilabor resolution. This Smith investigating committee will be just another Dies committee. Its purpose is nothing more than to further embarrass the Commander in Chief, the administration, and organized labor.

Now when we are at war is no time to create misunderstanding, confusion, and discontent. Our petty peeves should be submerged, and we should stand united in our national efforts to win this war over the Axis enemy.

The Rules Committee of this House is fast becoming a special "House of Lords" in this Congress. They have been turning out so many special investigating committees with special appropriations since this Congress convened that it is beginning to look like one grand grab-bag proposition. It seems that nearly every member on the Rules Committee is now a chairman of some special committee and is clutching some special appropriation in addition to his regular salary.

Some day this thing will end. I have voted for investigations before, and I am going to vote for the Cannon resolution, authorizing the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to investigate that committee's own appropriations. That in my mind is proper. But I am not going to vote to permit congressional Don Quixotes on the Rules Committee to ride roughshod over every other Member and legislative committee in this House, and usurp power and authority that they have no right to possess. This thing is going entirely too far.

I agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] that if we shall have investigating committees, the investigators shall be members of the legislative committee that has proper jurisdiction of the matter involved.

We must put a stop to these super investigators, the members of the Rules Committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will use this time to try to clarify some of the doubts that appear to have arisen during this discussion. Perhaps I can do it more quickly by eliminating those things which, as far as I had any idea in the drafting of this resolution, will not be investigated.

In the first place, I do not think that any committee of this Congress would now want to interfere with the War Department and the Navy Department. I do not think that any committee which would be set up would undertake in any way to investigate the war effort. I want to get that out of everybody's mind. I do not think that this committee or any other committee ought at this time to undertake to investigate the acts of the President of the United States. I want to state that very clearly, because that impression has been in the minds of some.

As a matter of fact, I have redrafted this resolution three times in an attempt to clarify it to the extent where it would be understood that this would apply to those who undertake to carry out the Executive orders and those who undertake to carry out the acts of Congress. I hope I have made that clear.

It seems to me hardly necessary to answer the rather gratuitous remark of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI] that this was another labor-baiting expedition.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not at this time. I want to say to this House that this is not any sort of a "labor baiting" expedition or any sort of a baiting expedition for anybody or for any one particular department or agency of this Government. It is in response to the almost universal complaint in this country that persons employed in the executive agencies of the Government are daily exceeding the authority granted them by the Congress or by the Executive order which created such agencies.

I feel that during this emergency there is one thing that we ought to be very careful to try to preserve. We are in a great war, it is true, and we must win it, but I do not want us to awaken after we have won the war and find that we have lost the Government that our forefathers fought for 150 years ago. I think we should be very careful in this Congress to take every step that is necessary to see that our form of government is preserved during this emergency. I see no reason why we should not do it. I think this committee can do a great deal of good in a proper and dignified way by calling the attention of the heads of the agencies to instances of violation of the law that come to our attention.

Somebody asked what I proposed to do about investigating the personnel of Federal agencies. I do not believe this committee will undertake a general investigation of personnel, but here is what I have in mind. If we find that a certain agency of the Government has acted in direct conflict intentionally, and willfully with the mandate of an act of Congress or an Executive order I think we ought to go to that department and find out who put that order out and find out the individual who was responsible. If we find an individual in the executive department of the Government who has deliberately violated an act of Congress we ought to bring that to the attention of this Congress. What Congress may want to do about it I do not know. This committee will make its investigation and report, and recommend legislation with which the Congress may do as it pleases.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is merely seeking to set up a forum for the aggrieved citizens of this Nation. Has not the gentleman a concrete case to bring to our attention? Can he not tell some of the experiences which led him to seek this action?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry; I do not believe I am going to have time to do it, and I do not want to tie this investigation to any one department or agency; I want it distinctly understood that it applies to all, to one just as much as to another. This is no time to go after any particular agency or any particular individual.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Congress has already authorized the Military Affairs Committee to make an investigation, the Naval Affairs Committee to make an investigation, the Dies committee to make an investigation, the Ramspeck committee to make an investigation——

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman ask his question if he has one?

Mr. COOLEY. I am asking, What other agencies does the gentleman have in mind that need investigating at this point? Can the gentleman tell the House?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I will answer the gentleman's question; I do not yield further. I could not tell the gentleman just how many agencies of the Federal Government there are; there are hundreds of them, many of them set up by order of Congress and many of them set up by Executive order. If complaint is made against any one, then this committee, so far as I am concerned, will not be afraid to investigate.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I direct the gentleman's attention to page 2, line 2, of the resolution reading as follows:

Invades the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of citizens of the United States.

Does this mean that any individual can make a complaint to this committee? Or does it mean that it has to be a group of citizens? It is sufficiently specific to cover an individual cause of action.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think that would be within the discretion of the committee; it would depend upon the circumstances of the particular case.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I still do not quite understand the scope of this resolution and should like to ask a few questions setting up one or two specific examples. For example, would this committee have authority to investigate the action of the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission in carrying out the President's 48-hour work order?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If that was an order issued by the Manpower Commission.

Mr. MOTT. No; this order was issued by the President, and Mr. McNutt is carrying it out.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think, so far as I am concerned, as a member of any committee I would not feel justified in this time in undertaking to investigate an order of the President.

Mr. MOTT. Let me go a step further. The papers this morning stated that the C. I. O. was demanding a guaranteed pay for 48 hours' work, presumably whether the worker worked a full 48 hours or not. Suppose the Chairman of the Manpower Commission should issue an order to that effect; there would be no authority of law for it. Would the committee have the authority to investigate and report to the Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I want to make these answers general. I think any executive officer who goes without the scope of the Executive order or goes without the scope of an act of Congress under which he is acting may and should be investigated.

Mr. MOTT. Here is the other one: For example, would the committee have authority to investigate the action of the Treasury Department in carrying out the President's order relative to the $25,000 salary limitation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not remember what is in the Executive order, but I say again that if any agency of the Government goes beyond the four corners of the Executive order which empowers them to do anything, I think it should be investigated by the committee.

Mr. MOTT. In other words, if the President himself issues an order, whether he has any authority in law to make it or not, the gentleman would not inquire about that order, no matter what agency executed it?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The committee would make inquiry about anything that is within the scope of the resolution now before the House.

Mr. MOTT. It is the resolution I am speaking about.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the resolution, in line 1, instead of "5" make it "7"; namely, increase the number of members from 5 to 7 as originally contemplated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 1, line 1, strike out "5" and insert "7."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, although I have been in Washington but a few days, from my observation and from the letters and wires received, it becomes increasingly evident that the bureaucrats have been enjoying a field day, riding herd on American business and American people. Business, both large and small, has been patiently taking a terrific beating from the vague, impractical dreamers who are going to make over this good old U. S. A. The fortitude of the American people, a free people, is remarkable, and their ability to restrain themselves as long as they have deserves commendation. However, indications reveal that they have accepted the challenge and are now about to do battle against entrenched bureaucracy. One or the other must go if we are to remain a free, liberty-loving people. The man of business has been restricted, regulated, harassed, haunted, and strangulated with regimentations to a point of utter exhaustion.

Between questionnaires, cross examinations, interrogations, regimentations, the average businessman knows not which way to turn. The alphabetical organizations came at him so fast and so furiously in the last few years his mind became fogged to a great extent. However, it is now starting to clear; November 3, 1942, proved that, and he is now aroused, indignant, and enraged to a point where he is demanding action on the part of the new Congress to secure relief. We Americans are naturally a patriotic and cooperative people. It is wholly unnecessary to drive us to make sacrifices to get results. We in America will make any necessary sacrifice in this all-out effort to win the war. However, the methods now being employed are certainly shocking the man on the street.

This Seventy-eighth Congress has been wisely called the Victory Congress, whose first objective is all out to win the war, and if it takes everything that we have we will willingly give it, and it is worth it. No sacrifice is too great for the American people to make for our boys who are fighting at Guadalcanal, in north Africa, in the air, on the high seas, and under the seas. They are doing a great job, and we Americans are only too willing to tighten our belts, forego some of the comforts we enjoy, and get down to the all-important job of winning the war.

After winning the war, I trust the Seventy-eighth Congress will be a victory Congress in a sense that it will return this Nation of ours and those blessings we enjoy back to that saneness, soundness, and stability that has traditionally marked the course of this Nation. This Congress has a job to do to preserve our constitutional form of government, our industrial system of free enterprise, and our American way of life. Let me say right now that we can well get along without the experimentation and regimentation, and if we will pause in the hurry of our everyday lives to look around at this glorious country of ours, we have done plenty well for ourselves, and we can do plenty well for ourselves if the long arm of bureaucracy does not reach out and strangle us. I know, at least on the Republican side of this Victory Congress, there will be a hard-hitting, militant outfit carrying on the fight against what the gentleman from Indiana, Representative HARNESS, calls ballooning bureaucracy. The American people are entitled to and should be given immediate relief from this cancerous growth of bureaucracy which is eating the heart out of our American way of life.

I urge the adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Virginia) there were—ayes 125, noes 25.

Mr. COOLEY and Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania objected to the vote on the ground a quorum was not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 294, nays, 50, not voting 90, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Gatling, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 158) entitled "An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. McFARLAND, Mr. HILL, Mr. TUNNELL, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. AUSTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of Commerce.
3. Department of the Navy.
4. Civil Service Commission.
5. General Accounting Office.
6. The National Archives.

MERGER OF DOMESTIC TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes, with the House amendment thereto, insist upon the amendment of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BULWINKLE, BOREN, BECKWORTH, WOLVERTON of New Jersey, and BROWN of Ohio.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 69, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, acting as a whole or by subcommittee or subcommittees thereof appointed by the chairman of said committee for the purposes of this resolution, is authorized to conduct such studies and examination of the organization and operation of an executive department or any other executive agency (including any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States) as the committee may deem necessary to assist it in connection with the determination of matters within its jurisdiction.

For the purposes of this resolution, such committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution does not create a special committee but gives the Committee on Appropriations authority to make certain investigations. It authorizes the Committee on Appropriations to conduct such studies and examination of the organization and operation of any executive department or any executive agency, including any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, as the committee may deem necessary to assist it in connection with the determination of matters within its jurisdicton.

The only restriction on this authority, if it can be called a restriction, is found in this language, "in connection with the determination of matters within its jurisdiction."

The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction to appropriate, and in that connection has the right to investigate any and all matters coming within its jurisdiction to appropriate money for any need of the Government or any governmental agency. We have created quite a few agencies which are owned by the Government. This committee will have jurisdiction to investigate such agencies as well as any bureau or department. Personally, I feel that if there is one committee that should have the right to investigate, it is the Committee on Appropriations, before it appropriates.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLEY. What is the difference between this resolution and the resolution adopted by the House just a few moments ago?

Mr. SABATH. There is quite a difference. The resolution we adopted earlier, the Smith resolution, gives the committee to be appointed under that resolution jurisdiction to pass upon the rulings of a department or agency, to determine whether or not such agency exceeded its authority or adopted rules and regulations in conflict with the laws we have enacted.

I stated then, and I thought I made myself clear, that that committee might assume jurisdiction which belongs to our courts in that it would determine whether or not an act of such agency was beyond the scope of the authority granted to it. The final power of passing upon legal questions should be vested in the courts.

We have adopted that resolution, but it is not the only one we have recently adopted. We have adopted more resolutions to investigate during the last 6 weeks than during any session of Congress that I can recollect during the 36 years of my service. But you gentlemen, the majority of the membership, desire these investigations. Some of them may be wholesome but some of them, I think, will retard the activities of the Government and some of them will harass the President and the administration in performing the important duties that devolve upon them in the most critical period by far in the history of the country.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. Is not that the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know that this resolution may not be justified because of the charges that have been made that there are many men on the pay rolls who are not needed. The Committee on Appropriations should know whether or not the appropriations it is called upon to recommend to the House are needed. Of all the resolutions for investigations we have adopted, perhaps this and the Ramspeck resolution are the most deserving.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Just what is it the committee cannot do now that this resolution proposes to give it authority to do?

Mr. SABATH. This resolution gives that committee power of subpena for books or persons from any place to ascertain whether or not the demands made on the committee for appropriations are justified.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. They do not possess that subpena power at the present time?

Mr. SABATH. No; they do not possess that power now. That is what we have been doing with the resolutions we have been passing here that you gentlemen have voted for. Personally I think it is unfortunate that so many different investigations should be going on at this time when we should be devoting all our energies and efforts to winning the war. I think it is unfortunate that our attention should be distracted by all these investigations.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman tell me the difference between House Resolution 105 and House Resolution 69? What is the principal difference? I am asking for information.

Mr. SABATH. House Resolution 105, which we passed a few days ago, gave special power to the Committee on Appropriations to investigate certain matters not covered in this resolution. It had to do mainly with investigating certain employees of the Government who, it has been claimed, do not have the requisite patriotism and loyalty; in other words, it has been claimed that they have belonged to organizations that have been guilty of un-American activities.

I do not desire to take any more time. I am very tired; I am worn out. I am trying to perform my duty as best I am able to but I have only a certain amount of energy.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Is this resolution proposed solely for the investigation of un-American activities? The gentleman is aware of the fact that I have a bill pending providing for a staff of our own, not Members of the House of Representatives, but employees of the House of Representatives, to investigate how our appropriations are expended, just how they are expended in detail. As I understand it this resolution is not to supersede any such action as that, or to take the place of any such action, but merely relates to the investigation of un-American activities?

Mr. SABATH. No; this does not do that. We passed a resolution in respect to un-American activities last night. This is a broad resolution giving the Appropriations Committee full and complete power to investigate any and all requests and demands that are made for appropriations, and in view of the charges that have been made that a great deal of money has been unnecessarily expended it is believed that this great Appropriations Committee, with its able membership, will make such thorough investigation that will bring about a saving to the Government of large sums of money, and I know that that is the aim of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and also the aim of the amiable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Now, I have explained to the best of my ability the purpose of this resolution, and yield to the gentleman from New York, reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by unanimous direction of the committee, for the purpose of providing the committee with authority to subpena witnesses, to look into matters where it is believed that money can be saved, to swear witnesses, to subpena documents. It will also provide the committee with the services of individuals who can be brought in, who may, if so required, make a survey of the operations of an agency or a department for the purpose of determining whether or not it is being efficiently and economically managed, and whether or not we could save money in that particular department.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. May I pursue the inquiry I made a moment ago? I am in sympathy with any movement to save money, but where is the authority in this resolution for the employment of such persons to make the investigation?

Mr. TABER. That would automatically come from a resolution presented by the Committee on Accounts, and after the adoption of this resolution it will be necessary for us to go to the Committee on Accounts and ask them to provide us the funds with which to operate. In our standard set-up we would carry the money to pay them in the regular legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. LANHAM. The bill I introduced is pending before the Committee on Accounts, and, of course, the members of the Committee on Appropriations are entirely too busy to carry on this investigation themselves. That is the reason that I have provided in the measure that I have introduced that we have a staff of experts of our own on a year-round basis making investigations of this character, not only for the Committee on Appropriations but for the various committees of the Congress, in order that we may all have detailed information as to what is being done with the money that the taxpayers are paying into the Government, and some of them now are people of very low income, and they are having to pay, in addition to indirect taxes, direct taxes, and they are very anxious to know what is being done with the money that is being furnished to the Government.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. O'NEAL. Does not the gentleman think that it is really a misnomer to call it an investigating committee? It appears to me that it is merely implementing the Committee on Appropriations and giving it services necessary to analyze the testimony given by those who represent the bureaus requesting these funds.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. O'NEAL. It is not an investigating committee.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no.

Mr. O'NEAL. We could do a more satisfactory job if we are given authority whereby we can take evidence that what they are asking for is deserved.

Mr. TABER. That is exactly what we have in mind.

Mr. LANHAM. And it is not supposed to obviate the necessity of the measure that I have introduced.

Mr. TABER. Not in the least. This is the picture. The Government has grown so rapidly that with 3,000,000 civilian employees, almost as many as we have in the Army, it is felt that we should have better facilities, and that we will require better facilities than we have had in times when the number upon the Federal pay roll of civilian employees was down to 100,000. That is the picture.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understood one of the gentlemen just speaking to say that one of the purposes of this committee or this legislation is to learn in what manner the money is expended.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments met and performed its full duty, would not they reach the same end, or would they?

Mr. TABER. They would not have the power to check, for instance.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you mean the power of subpena?

Mr. TABER. Oh, they might have that. That might be given to them. For instance, we need to know where appropriations are too large, so that we might step in and, if the money is being wasted, we could reappropriate the funds carried in a particular appropriation to something else and get rid of that agency just as quick as a bill could be enacted into law.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Could the gentleman tell me why the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has not had something to do along this line in the last 6 years?

Mr. TABER. Oh, I would not want to have anything to say about some other committee. I know they have not done anything of that kind.

I hope this resolution will be agreed to and that the committee may be implemented so that it may go ahead and do some of the things that are absolutely crying to be done.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the committee saw fit to look into the Rubber Reserve Company, one which seems to qualify as described in the bill, is there anything that company is doing that would come under your jurisdiction? That is in connection with their activities? Are they not entirely outside the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. TABER. They are, but I will be frank and say I think the employees of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Rubber Reserve Company, and all of them ought to justify their requirements for personnel.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good resolution. I notice the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, is present. Can the gentleman explain to me why it is that that committee lacks the power to look into this or has not looked into it? I am a member of that committee and I have often wondered why we did not have anything to do. I am also a member of the Labor Committee. We do not have anything to do there.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am not chairman of that committee, but I will undertake to respond to the gentleman's inquiry by saying that as far as I am concerned I am not betraying any secrets when I state to you, as I have stated to the chairman of that committee, that personally I favor that committee conducting hearings, asking not only the heads of departments but the Comptroller General to appear before the committee and give the committee the benefit of any suggestions he is able to submit to the committee, and I have every reason to believe that hearings will be initiated at an early date.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman. I notice the ranking member on the minority side is present. I have been a member of that committee for 6 years. While I think I am earning my money in taking up with the departments the demands of my constituents and attempting to get them what they want, and doing my work on the floor, still I would like to render full service by doing something on that committee and on the Labor Committee as well.

Mr. GIFFORD. I cannot believe my own ears. Is it possible that the gentleman from Mississippi makes that statement?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; I made that statement.

Mr. GIFFORD. In view of the past, I cannot believe my ears.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We live in a day of surprises.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman means he does not believe the statement?

Mr. GIFFORD. Well, it cannot be true.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We were talking about unemployment. Here I am. I go down to the departments and I go to the office, but I have a little unexpended time that I would like to put in on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, but that committee does not call any meetings. The Labor Committee does not have any meetings. I am trying to find out where I can get a job; an opportunity to do some of the things that must be done.

Mr. GIFFORD. I can make a suggestion. The recent election has brought about many changes of heart, but I await with the greatest of interest for the order to be issued or any suggestion of an examination by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I am so surprised that I cannot express myself about it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. On those two committees the new dealers have us hog-tied and gagged. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to promote economy. Its objective is the retrenchment of expenditures and the reduction of disbursements of funds from the United States Treasury.

It is not a resolution of investigation. In that respect it is a departure from the general trend. We are doing a great deal of investigating these days. Perhaps overdoing it in comparison with the results obtained. At this rate we shall soon have to begin investigating the investigators. But this is not a resolution of investigation as resolutions of investigation go. It differs from such measures in three essential particulars.

In the first place, it is pre-appropriation. It provide for pre-appropriation action. It authorizes studies which to be effective must be concluded before an appropriation is made, whereas the usual resolution of investigation becomes effective after the action under scrutiny has been concluded.

In the second place, it is not the purpose of the committee, acting under this resolution, to hold hearings and call in witnesses for examination. Under authority conferred by the resolution the activities of the committee will be limited to studies conducted by its employees who report direct to the committee and its subcommittees.

And last, and most important of all, the authority conferred by the pending resolution is limited strictly to matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

We cannot go outside the jurisdiction of the committee. As the last sentence in the enabling paragraph provides, the committee "is authorized to conduct such studies and examinations * * * as the committee may deem necessary to assist it in connection with the determination of matters within its jurisdiction."

There is the purport and purpose of the resolution in a nutshell—and both are limited to matters within the jurisdiction of the committee. And it is a matter of astonishment that this authority has not been given long ago. As a matter of fact the Committee on Appropriations has had practically such power all along but this resolution emphasizes and implements it beyond any possibility of question or objection.

Here is the routine. The departments apply for funds through budget estimates. They say in effect: "We need so much money for certain purposes." But when we meet to consider these requests we have in support of their application for appropriations only their views and opinions as expressed in the justifications which they submit and the testimony of the departmental representatives who appear at the hearings. The proceeding is wholly ex parte. The only evidence submitted is evidence for the plaintiff. No evidence is submitted for the defendant. The plaintiff, the department, appears and presents its case. But the defendants, the Treasury of the United States and the taxpayers, are unrepresented. No one appears in their behalf and no evidence in their behalf is available.

And there is where this resolution begins to operate. Under the authority granted by this resolution the committee has an opportunity to consult evidence and argument in rebuttal. Request for such authority is not an indictment of the departments in any respect. All requests and recommendations by bureaus and departments are based on opinions and interpretations of laws, needs, and collateral conditions and circumstances. The divided opinions of any court are proof that there are two sides to every question, and the committee is entitled to hear both sides. Furthermore, the departments necessarily look at the one problem involved in the expenditure which they recommend, while the committee must look at the problems offered by the many other ways in which the money requested can be expended. Need is relative, and although the purpose for which the department requests an appropriation may be justifiable, there is never enough money to provide for all justifiable purposes, and the committee must have evidence on which to base a decision as to which of many purposes is the most justifiable.

So, as between many alternatives offered, the committee must be in position to make an intelligent and justifiable decision: First, if the proposed project or activity is justified; and, second, if justified is the amount of money requested to carry it necessary to finance it; and third, we must consider whether that money could not be better expended in some other way. We must also exercise care to avoid conflict, duplication, and overlapping as between bureaus and departments, and to cooperate in securing efficiency and cooperation.

These are old problems—problems which have confronted the committee and the Congress for many years. In fact, ever since the formation of the Committee on Appropriations there has been acute need for such a service as is provided by the pending resolution. In my early days on the committee we had this service in practically the form in which it is here proposed to reestablish it.

When I first became a member of the committee, we drew on the old Bureau of Efficiency for investigators, examiners, and accountants. We used their operatives regularly and continuously, with salutary effect. When the Bureau of Efficiency was suddenly abolished because it investigated a little too thoroughly and efficiently, we were left without a staff on which we could call upon for examination and study of preappropriation matters, and have been without one ever since.

There has been a steadily growing need for service of this kind, and in every succeeding session of Congress proposals have been offered and bills introduced to supply the deficiency. At least half a dozen or more of varying degrees of practical operation are pending now. The delay in reaching some earlier solution of the matter has been largely occasioned by two major difficulties, the difficulty in building up an organization which through its intimate association with the members of the committee would slowly but surely increase its salaries, its personnel, and its jurisdiction until it became in effect a Frankenstein which could not be controlled or dislodged, and, second, the establishment of an organization amenable to political manipulation which could be used for partisan purposes. We believe that in the arrangement here sought to be effected we have successfully avoided both evils and that the service here provided will be economical and flexible and at the same time insulated against even the remote contingency of political prostitution.

And in this connection, in order to relieve pressure already being brought to bear on members of the committee since the introduction of this resolution, may I make the announcement that no new positions will be created. All personnel will be drawn entirely from civil-service positions in the various departments. The plan is to requisition personnel already in the service, bring them up here at their going salaries, place them on definite assignments for a day or a month, as required, and then when they have discharged their duties, return them to their respective departments without prejudice to their civil-service status.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does it come within your jurisdiction to investigate the R. F. C. or any of the subsidiary corporations they control?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Any agency of government for which the Bureau of the Budget submits estimates will be subject to our scrutiny.

Mr. GIFFORD. They do not come to the Appropriations Committee for money, do they?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. All administrative expenses must be appropriated for and any requests for money for that purpose brings them within the purview of this resolution.

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly; but does the R. F. C. come to the Appropriations Committee for money? Does the Rubber Reserve come to you for money? Does the B. E. W. come to you?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No governmental agency, including those indicated by the gentleman, can operate for a day without funds provided by Congress.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; but these agencies I have asked about get their money through the blank check you give the President. Am I not right?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Any Government bureau or Government agency, including the R. F. C., must come to this House for funds with which to pay its personnel and operating expenses; and when they come asking funds to pay salaries, traveling expenses, communication accounts, or any expense incidental to their overhead or their operation, we are in a position under this resolution to send men down to inquire as to how they are expending money so provided, with what efficiency they are operating, and what economy can be effected.

Mr. Speaker, may I express at this time appreciation of the debt which all those interested in this resolution owe to our absent colleague and friend [JACK COCHRAN]. He has been interested in this proposition from the beginning and has collaborated with us at all times and has rendered invaluable service. It was hoped that he would be able to be on the floor when this resolution came up, that he might participate in the debate and in the formulation of this legislation. While he is rapidly convalescing and he is on the way to speedy and complete recovery and we expect to have him with us within the next week or two, I am sorry to say he is not able to be with us today; and I take this opportunity to express the interest of those with whom he served in his early return to the floor and our thanks for the service he rendered to the committee and the country in this connection.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I join with the gentleman in his tribute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. May I ask him this question: He is chairman or acting chairman of another committee that we discussed a little while ago—the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Would Mr. COCHRAN be in favor of this resolution?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I have not had the opportunity to consult with him on the final draft of the resolution, which was only recently drawn, but I will say to the gentleman that he is in the heartiest accord with all the purposes that this resolution is expected to effectuate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is fair to say in response to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois that Mr. COCHRAN is not now the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures. He is chairman of the Committee on Accounts. Mr. O'LEARY is chairman of the Committee on Expenditures at this time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the interest manifested by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] was not at any time, so far as I recall, taken as a member of any particular committee, but always due to his broad and general interest as a Member of the House of Representatives and the Congress, in all measures calculated to effect economy and bring about orderly and effective retrenchment of the expenditure of Government funds. That is the prime purpose of this resolution. Under its authorization we propose to ferret out as far as possible every instance in which a dollar is being spent which is not absolutely necessary to the economical and efficient operation of the Government. For that purpose we ask the passage of this resolution in its present form.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to pay a high tribute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] will probably never act. Mr. COCHRAN, as you know, serves as acting chairman when he is there and I want to say he has been very loyal.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. COCHRAN has always exhibited a deep interest in economy of expenditure. He has been instrumental in the saving of millions of dollars to the Federal Treasury. In my opinion no Member of the House has, during my service here, effected greater savings in Government funds. I trust this resolution, on the perfection of which he and many others have collaborated, will have the unanimous approval of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, last fall and ever since the American people have been telling us in no uncertain terms that they are out to win this war and that they are willing to put up with any necessary sacrifices or inconveniences in order to bring about a speedy and victorious conclusion to the war. Also, on last November 3 they gave Congress a mandate which directed that we better be ready when we go back home to tell these people that these sacrifices, this regimentation, this rationing, are necessary in the prosecution of the war, and we better be ready, Mr. Speaker, when we go back home, to answer them with factual proof. To do that we will have to satisfy ourselves that these inconveniences are absolutely necessary. Now we are patriotically appealing to the people of this country to buy War bonds to the best of their ability in order to support the boys at the front. The Treasury Department handles the sales of War bonds and War stamps.
